"Messrs. Morgan & Scott have just published a new edition of 'Foxe's Book of Martyrs,' which deserves a word of greeting. Nothing we could say would add to the fame of so well-established a Protestant classic as 'Foxe's Martyrs.' The present edition extends far beyond Foxe's times, having been enriched by the Rev. J. Milner and others, and brought down to the present century by the Rev. Ingram Cobbin. Altogether, it is a cheap and complete Book of Martyrs, well printed and elegantly bound, and suitable for a gift-book.

The Record.

"As a complete edition of 'Foxe's Martyrs,' this is by far the handiest and most attractive we know. In paper, type, illustrations, and binding, the book does great credit to Messrs. Morgan & Scott, to whom the Christian public are indebted for this timely publication."—Primitive Methodist.

"The volume is printed in beautiful type; and is well illustrated. We welcome this edition, which well deserves to find its place in every household which does not possess a copy of the book; and it should find its way into our libraries. juvenile and others."—The Baptist.

The Bible Remembrancer.

With Full Details of the SCRIPTURE NUMERATION — as three, seven, twelve, and so on; an ALPHABETICAL INDEX TO THE PSALMS, by which any Psalm can be traced in a moment; a Key to the various PROMISES OF SCRIPTURE (347 in number); a List of the NAMES AND TITLES OF CHRIST; and a large number of important and valuable Tables and Lists. With Twelve beautiful Coloured Maps.

Tinted covers, 1s.; Cloth boards, 1s. 6d.; Cloth, bevelled boards, gilt edges, 2s.

"A more helpful book for Sabbath school Teachers and others we can scarcely think of."—Presbyterian.

"This is really a remarkable instance of multum in parvo, and the matter will be very useful to the Bible student. The small coloured Scripture maps are admirable, and so is the general arrangement of the little book."

Church Sunday School Magazine.

The Bible Interpreter.

A CONDENSED BIBLE DICTIONARY. By the Author of "The Bible Remembrancer." Containing explanations of more than EIGHTEEN HUNDRED Scripture Words and Subjects. With TWELVE FULL-PAGE ILLUSTRATIONS and numerous smaller Engravings. Tinted covers, 1s.; Cloth boards, 1s. 6d.; Cloth, bevelled boards, gilt edges, 2s. FOURTH THOUSAND.

"A Bible Dictionary of terse and pointed character, and has a valuable Appendix of special interest to Sunday-school teachers.—Christian Chronicle.

"A compact and handy manual of reference which will be found useful by all students of the Bible. The pages are interspersed with numerous engravings illustrating the text, as well as views of places famous in Bible History.

Literary World.

"This is a useful little dictionary of Biblical terms for those who cannot afford any of the large Bible encyclopædias. Small though it is, it contains explanations of over one thousand eight hundred Scripture words and subjects."

The Rock.

New Work by A. L. O. E.

PEARLS of WISDOM From the Parables.

BY A.L.O.E.,

Author of "Rescued from Egypt," "Exiles in Babylon," "The Young Pilgrim," &c., &c.

With Twenty-four Full-Page Original Drawings.

Handsomely bound in cloth, bevelled boards, 3s. 6d.; with gilt edges, 4s.

"A delightful contribution to Biblical literature, and especially valuable on account of its local colouring, the writer, as will be known to most of our readers, having been now for some years engaged in mission work in Hindustan. The illustrative portions, in themselves striking, are made entirely subservient to the forcible appeals of the writer; and we can but echo the remark in the Publishers' Preface, that no one can read what is written without being struck with the manner in which the Parables adapt themselves for use in Evangelistic Lessons.' The volume is enriched with a series (twenty-four in number) of specially-designed illustrations—good both in their design and drawing."

Church Sunday School Magazine.

"These are 'Pearls' indeed. The gifted authoress has added a rare volume to her already large stock of books; and the reading public will thank her for this delightful work. We wish it the wide circulation it well deserves."

Christian Treasury.

"These expositions of, or rather lessons from the Parables, have been written since A. L. O. E. went to India as a missionary. They were intended to aid in bringing Hindus and Mohammedans to the faith of Christ, and are written from an Oriental point of view. Nevertheless, English readers will enjoy and may profit by them. All will rejoice to receive a fresh work from the hands of so old a favourite as A. L. O.E."

BIRDS OF THE BIBLE.

Chats with the Children about Bible Birds. By James Bowker, F.R.G.S.I. With Coloured Frontispiece and 29 other Illustrations. Beautifully Printed on Toned Paper in Red and Black.

"A very pretty little volume, beautifully illustrated, handsomely printed, and very tastefully bound. It contains much information and much useful teaching about Bible birds. It is just the book for a present to our young friends, to whom it will prove very attractive."—Living Waters.

"Mr. Bowker knows much about the birds, and he makes his feathered favourites teach many a sweet lesson. By all means let the children have this prettily written and prettily illustrated book."—British Messenger.

"A beautiful little volume, printed in red and black, with numerous engravings. Will be found most interesting and instructive to the young folks who are fortunate enough to obtain a copy. One friend to whom we showed the book at once ordered three dozen copies for Sunday-school rewards. We hope that many others will follow his example."
Christian Treasury.

"We delight in books of this character. Scripture and Nature are set side by side; and the young are made to see the one illustrated by the other. Fine type makes these pages pleasant to the eye of the old, and simple language adapts it to the taste of the young."—Sword and Trowel.

"Chats with the children about birds mentioned in the Bible, in which are introduced anecdotes illustrating their instincts and habits, and explaining and applying the references to them in Scripture: contains many pictures and a pretty coloured frontispiece. A beautiful little book, and very handsomely got up."—Christian Age.

"In 'Birds of the Bible' we have pleasant chats about some of the birds referred to in Holy Writ, with good illustrations and a coloured frontispiece. The volume is nicely got up."—Christian World.

Price One Penny. 1s. per dozen, post free.

ETERNAL LIFE:
Where to Find it,
AND How to Obtain it.

By HERMANN LIEBSTEIN, Barrister-at-Law.

"Now what was true with reference to the ancient people is true with reference to us. What we need is just the same as that which they needed—life; and the fountain where alone we can find life now, is just the very same which nearly three thousand years ago was pointed out by Amos to Israel—Jehovah. And the way in which we may and can obtain life now, is none other than the old way—seeking Him who is its fountain."

In our correspondence columns, recently, attention was called to the case of the postmen in provincial towns, who are on the Sabbath engaged in the delivery of letters, and, in The Christian for August 5, Mr. Stevenson A. Blackwood pointed out the position of that Department with regard to the Sunday deliveries. The postmen, however, are by no means the only Post-office officials at work on Sundays; and if they are unable to attend Divine service in the mornings, there are thousands of clerks and letter-sorters who are equally prevented from going to a place of worship in the evenings. For the former, the receivers of letters on the Sabbath day are primarily responsible, for the latter, those who post on that or the previous day; and we have been informed that it is not unusual for persons who comply with the official regulations with regard to the non-delivery of letters for them on Sundays to post letters on that day. This may be due to want of a little thought, but surely a Christian, above all men, ought to be thoughtful and considerate with regard to others. It is more than improbable that the Post-office, with its myriads of dependent ramifications, ever will be able to dispense with Sunday labour, but Christian people ought to do all they can to reduce that work to a minimum.

The discovery of Pharaoh's house in Tahpanhes, a weird and dreary corner of the Delta, is of great interest to Bible students, for the ruins of the royal palace recently brought to light by Mr. Petrie and his party of explorers, represent all that remains of that palace to which the prophet Jeremiah tells us (Jer. xliii.) Johanan, the son of Kareah, followed by his captains and "the remnant of Judah," brought the daughters of the dethroned and cruelly treated Zedekiah, 585 years B.C. To these fugitive princesses, Hophra, as the Hebrews termed Va-ab-ra, gave the royal residence the remains of which have now been uncovered. The building, ultimately, was destroyed by fire, and, amid the charred remains, Mr. Petrie has discovered scale armour, bronze rings, brass ornaments, urns, and many other interesting objects, whilst, from underneath the corner of the foundation walls, there have been disinterred the libation vessels, the bones of a sacrificial ox, and a number of tablets in gold and precious stones, placed there by the monarch by whom the palace was built, Psammetichus the First. A large bronze seal of Hophra also has been found. To Egyptologists, these discoveries will be of great importance, as they complete the links in the twenty-sixth dynasty, but to students of the Word of God they should be still more precious, as affording one more unexpected testimony to the accuracy of the inspired volume.

The tone of the debate in the Wesleyan Conference on the London Mission is much to be commended. In the presence of the fact that, if in "Inner London," which contains two millions of souls, every church and chapel were filled, there would be still 600,000 people who could not find room, and of the further fact that they were not even half filled, it was contended that there was a summons to get out of circuit routine, and not to be afraid of irregularities. Truly it has been the glory of Methodism that it has been a Church of irregularities.

The letter of Professor Dana in the current Nineteenth Century ought to rebuke the assumptuous confidence of those who are perpetually iterating the discrepancies of science and revelation. In a recent controversy, Professor Huxley charged Mr. Gladstone with not having consulted the great American geologist, who now writes to say: "I believe that the first chapter of Genesis and Science are in accord." Professor Dana has been quoted in England as holding a totally different view.

Proofs are constantly forthcoming that much of the scepticism of young men arises from what they think is uncertainty as to the origin of the Books of the New Testament. Of late years such scepticism among the learned has been felt to be baseless, but for others who have not the same opportunities of study, Professor Harnack has done most useful service in this month's Contemporary. He summarises the discoveries of recent years; in the new and better MSS. brought to light; in the lost Christian works of the first Christian centuries now recovered; and in the early records at present being explored from the very debris of ancient Rome, there are increasingly growing evidences that from the first the New Testament Books held a place of authority and equality, and that the beliefs, practices, resurrection hopes, discipline, purposes, prayers, and peace of the early believers, show incontestably that these inspired writings were in their hands.

We cannot regard as felicitous the title of Professor Delitzsch's article in the August Expositor, "Dancing and Pentateuch Criticism in Correlation." If, moreover, the post-exilian Jews transformed the evening of the Day of Atonement into "light-hearted merriment," and the sending of the scapegoat into the wilderness was regarded as a "highly joyous interlude," and "the climax of enjoyment was reached in the chain-dances, when youths and maidens stood facing each other in rows"—we have in these hilarities, on the greatest of Jewish festivals, in respect to the evil of sin, a justification of the rebukes of Malachi to these later Jews, and an explanation of the false attitude of Israel in Christ's time as to Atonement. In the matter of dancing, the greatest authorities maintain that mixed dancing of men and women was not the custom of Scripture, and in reference to a passage in Jeremiah which seems to favour the contrary, Dean Payne Smith affirms that the error arises from a misunderstanding of the words (see "Speaker's Commentary," Jer. xxxi. 13).

WOMEN EMIGRANTS FOR CANADA.

The last protected party to Canada for this season will (D.V.) start Aug. 26, instead of Sep. 2, as advertised. We have received excellent accounts of the ten young women who have gone to Winnipeg. They have found good situations with high wages, by the kind help of our correspondent, the Rev. Mr. Pentreath. I have just brought out a fourth edition of my "Practical Guide for Canada" (Hatchards, Piccadilly, 2d.) It would lessen our extensive correspondence, if those who are thinking of going there would read this explanation of our methods of preparation and protection. Many more are likely to apply for Canadian introductions next season on account of the temporary suspension of assisted passages to New South Wales and New Zealand. Western Australia is entirely free. The passages for the October boat are being rapidly taken up.

Yours faithfully, Adelaide Ross.

Snelston Rectory, Ashbourne, Derbyshire.

JESUS ANSWERED ALL FOR ME.

Jesus, to Thee I cast my eye,
Laden with guilt, to Thee I fly;
Thy precious blood I fain would see,
As that must answer all for me.

If Satan should my soul affright,
Or bring my sins before my sight,
I'll cast the burden all on Thee,
For Thou wilt answer, Lord, for me.

Thy holy law within my heart
Should be fulfilled in every part;
Though I have failed, I trust to Thee,
As having answered all for me.

My secret faults to Thee are known,
Which Thou canst pardon—Thou alone,
By faith I to thy cross will flee,
Where Thou dost answer all for me.

When in thy presence I shall stand,
With nothing worthy in my hand,
This—this alone will be my plea,
That Thou hast answered all for me.

When with thy saints I rise above,
And join with them to sing thy love,
I'll then ascribe the praise to Thee,
For having answered all for me.

CANNES.—M. de Turckheim, of Cannes, says that several Y.M.C.A.'s in France, wishing to copy the good work among cabmen inaugurated by the Y.M.C.A. at Cannes, have invited him to initiate a similar work in their towns. There are now twelve large towns in France where young men are seeking to raise the moral and religious life of cabmen. Gospel portions, Psalms, Proverbs, tracts, almanacs, &c., are heartily welcomed by the men.

NEW MISSION HOUSE.—The first stone of the new Foreign Mission House at 102, Boulevard Arago, Paris, was laid on July 28, by the venerable Dr. G. Monod, after an address by Pastor Appia, the Vice-president of the Society. At the close of the ceremony prayer was offered by M. de Pressensé. Copies of the New Testament, "Ami de la Maison," "Petit Messager," &c., were distributed to the workmen employed on the building. —Le Christianisme.

THE BISHOP OF CAPE TOWN, who recently preached a forcible sermon from Eph. i. 7, 8, referred to the decision of the Legislature in favour of the repeal of the excise. The cheapness of brandy, he said, already represented a great source of danger, destitution and ungodliness among the poor and coloured classes, which would now be intensified. While brandy, the bane of coloured races, had been put nearer within their reach, their liberties of the franchise were about to be curtailed. They are our brethren, creatures of God, with souls as we have, but because of their black skins their freedom, privileges, and powers of advancement are being limited, and at the same time great and terrible temptations are put right into their grasp. Among other signs of downward progress is the reduction of educational grants, while crime, which education should aid in removing, is all too perceptibly increasing, the gaols are filling, and the convict rolls getting longer. He had viewed with anxiety the condition of the country, sometimes with hope, but now almost with despair; everything seemed to point to retrogression rather than to progression; faint appeared to be the motives for prudence, wisdom and right judgment on the part of statesmen and politicians, and the acknowledgement of the need of righteousness to a country, and of right-doing in the sight of God, with a Christian devotion, seem utterly absent. The Bishop besought his hearers to seek in prayer and right-doing the glory of God, the welfare of their country and their fellow men.—Argus (Cape Town).

FINSBURY-PARK Y.M.C.A.—On Bank Holiday, August 2, fifteen of the members, under the leadership of Mr. Bird, went to Chingford. Great numbers of tracts were distributed, and an open-air service was held in the afternoon, at which one young man gave his heart to the Lord. Returning to the Y.M.C.A., another open-air service was held in the evening, near the Hall, which was very well attended. A praise meeting was afterwards held. On Sunday, August 8, Mr. J. B. Wookey, of the Gospel Purity Association, delivered a stirring address to about 800 in the hall. Great blessing resulted, and many were converted. One poor fellow who came in so unhappy that he was tempted to commit suicide went away rejoicing.

Letters to the Editor.

OUR UNBELIEVING LITTLE ONES.

Sir,—About a fortnight ago, returning one Sunday evening from a Gospel tent mission service at Walthamstow, along the Lea Bridge-road, I saw a number of brakes outside a public-house full of children, some of them I should think not more than five, but none over fifteen years of age. They were singing secular songs designed to injure the "Word of God." A placard on the brakes identified them with a society advocating infidel tenets. Could not some of your readers do something to take the Gospel to the homes of these poor children, who are being brought up to believe there is no "God," no "Heaven," no "Devil," nor "Hell"? Could not something be done to prevent this belief being extended, especially among little children?

Yours obediently, Young Christian.

THE JAPANESE VILLAGERS.

Sir,—Your readers will be glad to know that in addition to Miss M'Lean's good work, efforts have been made, since the establishing of the Japanese Village in London, to convert the inhabitants to Christianity; they have been most liberally supplied with New Testaments in their own language, and other religious works, while earnest Christian missionaries, who have laboured hard in the good cause in China and Japan, have been unremitting in their attentions, but it has been found to be impossible in some instances to wean them from the Buddhist faith in which they have from earliest infancy been taught to believe and only time can achieve what we are trying to do. I am happy to state, however, that some of my Japanese community have embraced the Christian faith, and the idols in most of the houses are simply placed there in order to impart a realistic effect as to the appearance of the interior of a dwelling in Japan. We must bear in mind that it takes a very long time to induce a Mahometan to become a Christian, or a Roman Catholic or Jew to become a Protestant; we cannot therefore expect a native of Japan to abandon the faith of his forefathers, until he thoroughly and conscientiously believes that he is studying his spiritual welfare in so doing.

"A QUESTION OF CONSCIENCE."

Sir,—In your last issue a correspondent inquires whether he could, as a Christian man, sue for a debt contracted in the ordinary course of business. He refers to 1 Cor. vi. 6.

I would first say, as a lawyer (without reference to higher grounds), that litigation, like war, should be regarded as a last expedient, only to be resorted to when all other means fail. It is always disastrous to the loser; often so to the winner, and, if it be possible, it is frequently better even to release a debt than to attempt recovering it by legal process.

But there are times when this is not possible. If the non-receipt of what is due to me would prevent my meeting my own obligations, legal or moral, this money is not my own, and I have no right to be generous with it. I cannot think that our Lord's command against suing at the law would apply to such a case as this. The Scriptures say in another place, "Owe no man anything." Again we read, "As far as in you lies, live peaceably with all men." These words imply that it is not always possible.

I would also suggest that our conditions are not quite the same as those to whom St. Paul addressed the words cited. The Christian Corinthians must have referred their cause to a heathen judge; we live in a country, at all events, nominally Christian. Again, it was respecting disputes between Christians that St. Paul wrote; not a dispute between a Christian and a non-Christian. If there be no other means available, can there be a fairer way of settling a dispute on business matters than an appeal to the lawfully-authorised tribunals of justice?

With respect to the particular case of your correspondent, I would ask him to consider—(1) Can he surrender his claim without injustice to others? (2) Is his debtor, like himself, a Christian man, and, if so, are no other means of adjustment available? (3) Whether his debtor be a Christian or not, can no means be found (by reference to arbitration or otherwise) of deciding the matter without an appeal to the law-court, the administration of law in which, however, I can speak in no other terms than those of the highest admiration.

I remain, Sir, yours respectfully,

A Christian Barrister.

POLICE AND OPEN-AIR PREACHING.

Dear Sir,—The police have been trying to put down our Saturday evening open-air services, and have now given notice of their intention to summon us. We conduct the services on our own property, fronting the main thoroughfare in the parish. The prosecution is to be under some old statute, which they say they have discovered. Amongst your many readers, there may be legal gentlemen skilled in this question—who would be only too glad to help us in our struggle to preach the Gospel of Christ, as our Master did, in the open-air. The question is an important one; for if the police were to be successful, it would give them a decision which might prove a dangerous precedent in all future evangelistic effort.—Yours truly,

Wm. Adamson, Vicar.

JUVENILE PURITY.

Dear Sir,—It is impossible to over-rate the importance of the subject alluded to in the proposal of a "Sunday-school Teacher," in The Christian of August 5, that a juvenile "Band of Purity" should be formed. There should be no need, with complete Bands of Hope; but, alas! there is need of more help.

As he asks for information, besides proposing an organisation, let me earnestly beg of him and others for whom he speaks to ascertain what is now being done by organisations, lest great harm should result by zealous but inexperienced and rash teachers trying to cope with what all thoughtful teachers must soon realise as the crux of Christian manliness and reality of life. There are three societies, each with branches, formed during recent years. Their names and addresses cannot be too widely known by parents and adults. After writing to their secretaries and prayerfully reading some of the books and papers issued or mentioned by them, a start can be made. I will call attention to these societies as briefly as possible, in the hope that many a Sunday-school teacher will join one of them, and derive help and strength from companionship in the fight.

(1) The Social Purity Alliance (S.P.A.), 33, Vincent-square, London, S.W.—Undenominational, membership of both sexes. Subscription, one shilling, or more. This is the Pioneer Purity Society, having been founded in 1873. The report, with a full account of the annual meeting, has just been published, price sixpence. The Committee consists of many well-known ladies and gentlemen.

(2) The White Cross Army.—This has been remarkably successful, and its methods and papers should be carefully studied by those who wish to help young men. The "White Cross Series" of pamphlets, tracts, &c., are published by Messrs. Hatchards, Piccadilly, London, W., and are both cheap and good. The Secretary is Mr. G. S. S. Vidal, Museum-villas, Oxford. It is an obvious advantage of this great movement that the subject may be brought before the young men's Bible-class, or the elder among them, at the discretion of the teacher. The member signs his name on a tastefully-printed pocket-card to the following solemn declaration:—

I recognise my obligation as a Christian by the help of God—

(a) To treat all women with respect, and endeavour to protect them from wrong and degradation;

(b) To endeavour to put down all indecent language and coarse jests;

(c) To maintain the law of purity as equally binding on men and women;

(d) To endeavour to spread these principles among my companions, and to try and help my younger brothers;

(e) To use every possible means to fulfil the command, "Keep THYSELF pure."

Subscriptions to this noble army is voluntary, and the local soldiers, whilst feeling their unity of aim in this respect, would not be publicly labelled apart from their fellow lads and men. The work has to be done with tact, quickly and patiently, especially in small country districts, and the danger of stimulating pruriency in youth to be continually guarded against. The work is ten times more difficult and trying than temperance work.

(3) The third society is the Church of England Purity Society (C.E.P.S.). It is the sister society of the Church of England Temperance Society, and its offices are at 111, Palace-chambers, Victoria-street, Westminster, London, S.W. It is a centre for the branches, or kindred societies, with different names (e.g., "St. George's Society") in different parishes. It was established May 25, 1883, and keeps spreading its usefulness. There is now a most valuable schoolmasters' sub-committee. The subscription is 5s., and its objects are defined to be the promotion of

(b) A chivalrous respect for womanhood;

(c) The preservation of the young from contamination;

(d) Rescue work;

I say nothing now of Vigilance Associations, Homes, &c., where there is untold work for faithful men and women.—Yours faithfully,

An Oxford Member of the Three Societies.

AN ANXIOUS INQUIRER.

Sir,—It is written, "The Spirit of the Lord departed from Saul, and an evil spirit from the Lord troubled him." An explanation of this would be thankfully received. 1 Sam. xvi. 14—16, xviii. 10, xix. 9: Is it possible for a Christian to have a similar experience? What is backsliding? Do the passages, Heb. vi. 4—6 and Heb. x. 26—29, bear any analogy to those quoted above? We often hear people speak of a backslider's hell; is there such a place? A Constant Reader.

VILLAGE CHURCHES.

Dear Sir,—The disease referred to in Mr. Stooke's letter in your last issue, is to be found England over. There are many causes for it, not the least of which is sectarianism, the question often being not, is the Gospel faithfully preached there, but, have we a chapel there? If not, a struggling "cause" is commenced, and Mr. Stooke's experience is the result. In some cases the suggested remedy would be effectual; the men, I think, would always be found, but in many cases it would be absolutely impossible to find them secular employment, the provincial towns being already overstocked in almost every trade. J. S. M.

Dear Sir,—The suggestion made by Mr. Stooke, in your issue of August 12, has, to my mind, two decided advantages. Business and professional men, who conduct their secular affairs on sound Christian principles, know something of the "trial of faith," hence in their preaching would be able to teach practical Christianity, and less theory than we get in our towns. The Church of Christ wants more self-denying men, to carry the standard of the Gospel. The other advantage is that going to tell of Christ's wondrous love to others, not only brings the hearer into closer fellowship with Him, but the speaker often gets richly blest, and doubly paid for his little service for the Master. I think preaching as suggested would be eminently successful, if carried out in the true spirit of humanity and love. Yours faithfully, I. I. L.

"FLOODS OF BLESSING."

In connection with Mr. Radcliffe's most impressive article on "Floods of Revival" in The Christian of July 29, may I venture to suggest one point in Joel ii. 28—31?

Our brethren who "have understanding of the times" appear to be as one in the belief that literally and absolutely "the coming of the Lord draweth nigh." Now is it specially in connection with the coming of "that great and terrible day of the Lord" that He promises a world-wide coming of the Spirit. "I will pour out my Spirit upon all flesh . . . before that great and terrible day of the Lord come."

At Pentecost, and in succeeding crises of her history, the Church has witnessed successive instalments, as it were, of the fulfilment of this great promise of our dispensation; but would it not seem to be in accordance with this Word that if we are truly "in the last days, we should now, just at this very crisis of the world's history, look for the climax of all that has gone before, and for the last great out-pouring of that blessed Spirit in such floods as a thirsty world has never yet received "before that great and terrible day of the Lord come"?

If it has indeed pleased God thus to indicate to us his purposes, what an encouragement to prayer! What a hope! Personally I have found it to be very powerful in stimulating and sustaining prayer for the present out-pouring of the Spirit "upon all flesh." C.

BERLIN.—In June last a Conference of Pastors was held to consult as to the best means of reviving a more general attachment to the Church. On this occasion Herr Stöcker, Court Preacher, declared with considerable force and power his conviction that the members of the Church would feel much more interest in it if they could choose their own spiritual guides, and that this could be done only by making the Church independent of the State.—Journal Réligieux.

BIBLE STUDIES.—25.

CONSECRATION OF THE PRIESTS.

Lev. viii.

(1) Washed (ver. 6).—"Wash me thoroughly from mine iniquity, and cleanse me from my sin . . . wash me, and I shall be whiter than snow" (Ps. li. 2, 7). "Unto Him that loved us, and washed us from our sins in his own blood, and hath made us kings and priests unto God and his Father," &c. (Rev. i. 5, 6).

(2) Clothed (ver. 13).—"Perfect through my comeliness" (Ezek. xvi. 14). "Thou art all fair, my love; there is no spot in thee" (Cant. iv. 7).

(a) Garments of fine linen. "The fine linen is the righteousness of saints" (Rev. xix. 8). "He hath clothed me with the garments of salvation, He hath covered me with the robe of righteousness" (Isa. lxi. 10).

(b) Girdles of fine-twined linen, blue, purple and scarlet (Exod. xxxix. 29), colours emblematic of love, royalty, and suffering, but interwoven with no thread of gold. That—the emblem of the Divine kingship—was kept for the High Priest (Exod. xxxix. 5). The girdle is connected with thoughts of service (John xiii. 4), which is animated and pervaded by love; "If God so loved us, we ought also to love one another" (1 John iv. 11). "By love serve one another" (Gal. v. 13); is royal, in fellowship with the king; "Even the Son of Man came not to be ministered unto, but to minister, and to give his life a ransom for many" (Mark x. 45); and is sure to involve suffering. "We ought to lay down our lives for the brethren" (1 John iii. 16). But "If we suffer, we shall also reign with Him" (2 Tim. ii. 12).

(c) Bonnets of white linen—the thoughts purified, the intellect kept for Jesus. "Bringing into captivity every thought to the obedience of Christ" (2 Cor. x. 5).

(3) Appropriate the sin offering (vv. 14—17),—the type of Him who was made sin for us (2 Cor. v. 21), reminding us that however far we advance in spiritual life we never get beyond the cross (Gal. vi. 14); and that we died with Christ to sin and the world (Rom. vi.); also bringing assurance to our hearts, so that we can say, He "loved me and gave Himself for me" (Gal. ii. 20).

(4) Appropriate the burnt offering (vv. 18—21),—the type of Christ in his perfect surrender. "I beseech you, therefore, brethren, by the mercies of God, that ye present your bodies a living sacrifice, holy, acceptable unto God, which is your reasonable service" (Rom. xii. 1, 2). When Jesus has been seen as the one "Who loved me, and gave Himself for me," the heart's cry is, "Here, Lord, I give myself away, 'Tis all that I can do."

(5) Sprinkled on ear, hand and foot with the blood of the ram of consecration (vv. 22—24).—Set apart for God, the ear to listen to his voice, the hand to be used for Him, the foot to go on his errands.

(6) Hands filled with the offering, which was then offered to God (vv. 25—28).—"All things come of Thee, and of thine own have we given Thee" (1 Chron. xxix. 14). Whatever we are privileged to offer to Him, was first his gift to us.

(7) Sprinkled with oil and blood on bodies and garments (ver. 30).—The cleansing and power to be felt to the very circumference of the life. "Ye shall receive power, after that the Holy Ghost is come upon you" (Acts i. 8). "I shall be anointed with fresh oil" (Ps. xcii. 10).

(8) Fed on the offerings in communion with the High Priest (ver. 31).—"Whoso eateth my flesh . . . hath eternal life . . . He that eateth Me, even he shall live by Me" (John vi. 54—57).

(9) Waiting on God. (vv. 33—35).—"Come ye yourselves apart . . . and rest awhile" (Mark vi. 31. "Wait for the promise of the Father . . . Ye shall receive power, after that the Holy Ghost is come upon you; and ye shall be witnesses unto Me" (Acts i. 4, 8.).

(10) Going forth to service (chap. ix.)—"I will bless thee . . . and thou shalt be a blessing" (Gen. xii. 2). "Allowed of God to be put in trust with the Gospel" (1 Thess. ii. 4). "Ambassadors for Christ . . . workers together with Him" (2 Cor. v. 20, vi. 1). "Go . . . and teach all nations . . . Lo, I am with you alway" (Matt. xxviii. 19, 20).

REQUESTS FOR PRAYER.—For blessing on tent services being conducted at Milborne St. Andrew, Dorset, by Mr. J. Elliott.——For blessing on tent meetings being held at Grangetown, near Middlesborough.——For Rev. C. Melville Pym's restoration to health, if it be God's will, and that he may be enabled to glorify Him in sickness or in health.

VISIT TO A KABYLE VILLAGE.

My husband's illness was occasioned by over-exertion when visiting a distant Kabyle village of Azeffoun. However, we had a most interesting gathering when we arrived there. The little Djemāa, or village Parliament house, was filled with old men, young men, and boys. We were accompanied by an interesting young Jew, our child in the faith, who was brought to the Lord nearly four years ago. Our little service began by singing, "Come to Jesus," in Kabyle; then my husband read from the Gospel of John, and our young Jewish friend explained the meaning in Kabyle. Then I spoke through our interpreter to the dear boys. Young and old listened with greatest attention, and the following conversation passed:—

"Here are these roumis coming to instruct us, when our Marabouts* can't do it; but what is most wonderful is that a Jew should profess himself to be a Christian, and seek to lead us to Jesus. If he has found the truth, it is time for us to do so too." An old man on the stone bench next to me kept patting me on the shoulder, his face beaming with joy, repeatedly saying, "Good, good!" On leaving, a fine, manly fellow followed us, took us to the Roman ruins, whilst he went to fetch some goat's milk. We were nearly two hours climbing to this pretty spot. On our way up we saw little "grottos," which they call "marabouts,"* and on branches of bushes adjacent, and in the long grass, were knots tied in order to leave their maladies. Near one "grotto" the women had tied bits of red rags, and here they pray for a son. Poor things, there is need to go to them!

We have good opportunities of dealing with the Kabyles of the neighbouring villages, who come for treatment of various kinds; and whilst I attend to their wants, my husband reads the Gospel. At one village the Marabouts sent for three Arabic Gospels of John, because we passed near on our mules, and gave one on the road. I desire prayer for my dear husband, whose zeal went beyond his strength.

Yours truly in Christ, Jane B. Pearse.

* A "Marabout" is a "holy man" or a "holy place"—i.e., a priest or a shrine.

MR. J. B. WOOKEY commenced an eight days' mission at the Edinburgh Castle, Rhodeswell-road, Limehouse, last Sunday. Most encouraging results followed his powerful declaration of the Gospel; but Christian workers are sorely needed to deal with the anxious. Any friends willing to help will be warmly welcomed.

A SERVANTS' HOME.—A very happy meeting was held by the invitation of Mrs. Fawcett, at Bressay House, Tulse-hill, in connection with the Servants' Home, 435A, Norwood-road, on the 11th inst., when those who had passed through the Home, about sixty, assembled to tea. This number was largely increased by servants in the locality. A Gospel temperance meeting was then held, Mr. Josiah Nix took the chair, and most happily blended Gospel truth with temperance principles. At intervals several of the girls testified to the advantages of the Home. The meeting was also addressed by several ladies, who pleaded immediate decision for Christ, to which fourteen yielded, and forty signed the pledge.

RUSSIA.—Religious persecution reigns here. The Czar proposes to re-establish unity of faith by forcing into the pale of the Greek Church, Polish Catholics and Lithuanian Protestants. Jews are driven out of the country. The governors of Podolia and Ukraine, not content with closing every public office to the Jews, are now shutting them out of other occupations. The lawyers of these provinces are ordered to dismiss all Jewish clerks, that is, the majority of their employes, within two months. The same order is to be issued in the South-West provinces, where Russian Jews are gathered as in an immense Ghetto. In the Baltic provinces the attack is directed against the Lutherans who form the great majority of the population. The Governor of Esthonia interdicts the sale and circulation of any religious journal, not of the orthodox faith. Lutheran pastors are forbidden to criticise or discuss any actions or doctrines of the Greek Church. In the province of Wilna excitement is great, and new evils are feared. Is it any wonder that disturbances should arise?—Le Christianisme.

CONSECRATION & SANCTIFICATION.

We append a summarised translation of a paper read by the Rev. A. L. Empaytaz, at a meeting for Christian workers, recently held at Barcelona. Replying to the question as to the cause of such sad spiritual decline and backsliding as is sometimes noticed in persons who had given evidence of an apparently sincere conversion, he said:—

Is it not from the lack of sanctification accompanying or immediately following the forgiveness of sins through the Lord Jesus? And is it not owing to the lack of a real and complete consecration to the Lord? Resting contented with being saved, i.e., merely justified, Christians endeavour to sanctify themselves with the aid of the Holy Spirit, and very often retain, through weakness or cowardice, some prohibited thing, it may be a secret sin, or perhaps a habit, apparently harmless, but, in reality, fraught with danger. The case has been brought before my notice, of a young man, changed by faith in Jesus into a new creature, but who just simply retained, in spite of the pleadings of Christian brethren, an attachment to novel-reading; novels of a moral tone, it is true, but for all that, novels. And the novels have once more dragged him down to the abyss of unbelief.

You ask, "Is sanctification difficult to obtain?" Doubtless it is, as no one can produce it in his own soul, it being the exclusive work of Christ, who has been made unto us sanctification as well as justification. But consecration, the giving up of our being to God, is our own work, and if it is incomplete the Holy Spirit cannot fully sanctify us. If a conduit or water-pipe is obstructed, it is useless, and may burst at any time.

The question of sanctification, on the contrary, is made easy and clear for that one who completely gives up all confidence in himself, knowing that in him "dwelleth no good thing," nor any power whatever; accepting his Saviour as Deliverer, and truly desiring to be liberated by Him from all sin, allowing Him to work in his soul all the fulness of liberty which holiness brings; embraces a living and delivering Saviour, leaving Him in full power to rule and purify; and thus, freed from his own impotence and from his own cares, commences this blessed journey, strong and vigorous in Christ, who giveth grace for grace.

Do we wish for a blessing on our work for God? It is in our own hands! You ask the power of the Spirit? It is even now offered to you. Do not hinder his work by retaining some sin, some unfaithfulness in things which may appear in themselves of little importance. This is the secret of a holy life, and of a ministry clothed with power and the blessing of God. In a word, there is required:—

On our part.—(1) Full consecration; (2) full confidence in the power of Jesus to free us from all sin; (3) full hope of his help from hour to hour. "The joy of the Lord is our strength."

On his part.—(1) Holiness, given by Jesus according to our faith; (2) liberty; (3) blessing in the work.

I desire that this day may be something more than merely a day of exhortation and of instruction on this subject. I desire that it may be a day of action, that is to say, a day of consecration on the part of all of us, and of acceptance of a perfect Saviour, who lovingly draws near to us, desiring to pour out the fulness of his grace and power upon every one of us. I trust that it will be so; that our prayers will bear up before the Lord the perfume of our wills, given up and consecrated to Him, Jesus. And I do not doubt but that this meeting will be the commencement of new life in the Church, and the starting point of an awakening amongst those who surround us, to the glory of our God and Saviour.

FRANCE.—The last four or five numbers of Le Christianisme have contained a series of articles which indicate much dissatisfaction on the part of some prominent members of the Reformed Church with the action of the Mission Intérieure, which is considered to be proselytising or denominational. The free interchange of thought on the question, L'Evangéliste thinks, will lead to a better understanding.

The Book World.

Simon Holmes, Carpenter. By Rev. Jackson Wray. Nisbet & Co. A good tale well told. Mr. Wray has added yet another cubit to the stature of his popularity. The moral teaching of the book is as sound and healthy as the story is interesting.

New Outline Sermons on the New Testament. By Eminent Preachers. 6s. Hodder & Stoughton. This is the latest addition to the "Clerical Library," a series of works which has long proved its merit. The present volume contains the fruit of many an hour's labour of some of God's choicest messengers, and will, doubtless, be of yet more service as groundwork for sermons of others.

Recent Egyptian Discoveries concerning Joseph, Moses, and the Exodus. By David Burnett, Member of the Society of Biblical Archæology. Elliot Stock. This little book is evidently the fruit of long and deep research. The author adopts Hale's chronology, and comes to positive conclusions on long-disputed points. Thus he believes he has found, by monumental evidence, that Joseph was the builder of the pyramid of Ghizeh. The correctness of this statement we leave to professed Egyptologists, as also other discoveries relating to Moses. One supposed discovery, however, the most unlearned Bible student may regard as highly improbable, viz., that Asenath is the same as Potiphar's wife—in other words, that Joseph in maturer years took to his heart the slanderess who tempted him to abominable sin.

Hymn Writers and their Hymns. By Rev. S. W. Christophers. Third Edition. 3s. 6d. S. W. Partridge & Co. Good poetry, good prose, and good theology abound in this volume. To know the author of a favourite hymn greatly adds to its interest, and to know the circumstances in which it was written throws light on any obscurities. Acting on these principles, Mr. Christophers has gathered a wreath of Christian song of all ages and all branches of the Christian Church; and, though the voices are very various, the goodness of God and the faithfulness of Christ animate one and all. No small recommendation to the book is the full and masterly classification of subjects. Thus one can turn in a moment to "Hymns of the Fathers," Songs in Prison, in High Places, and on the Waters; to Marriage Songs, Judgment Hymns, or Songs of Glory. The book is well suited for a present.

The British and Foreign Evangelical Review. Nisbet & Co. 3s. 6d. This review deserves a strong word of commendation on our part. It acts on the safe conclusion that advanced learning and scholarship may be Evangelical, and are not necessarily Rationalistic, a notion that works very mischievously in quarters where more discrimination might have been expected, and too much influences journals from whom better things were hoped. Sure we are that a judicious theological conservatism in relation to exegetical and scientific Biblical questions will ultimately be proved to have been truly learned, and the few editors who proceed on this principle will be held to have conferred the very highest benefits upon their times. Such is the service that Dr. Sinclair Paterson is rendering in the review under notice. The current number contains singularly timely and well-written articles on Recent Assyriological Literature, the New Testament Deacon, Protestant Missions, and the Canon of the Old Testament, &c. Its notices of Current Literature are very helpful, and are scrupulously fair, while properly written from an orthodox standpoint. Moreover, books are reviewed which are really needed, and not such as are only cared for by a very limited number of readers. But the notable article in the July number is the one on "The Huxleyan Kosmogony." Respect for the attainments of Professor Huxley has restrained the criticism which deplored the effects of his utterances and writings. There was grave danger in this restraint, and Mr. Robert Watts, the writer of the article, has done the highest service in treating the Professor as he would any other materialist. He shows that the Kosmogony which Huxley would substitute for that of Moses cannot be sustained by either logic or philosophy; that it ignores the marvellous manner in which secondary causes are linked together; that it makes the effect infinitely to transcend the cause; that it does not even follow Darwin, but outruns him; and that in reality it conducts to the monstrous absurdity that the more exquisite the arrangements and adaptations of the universe, the less is there of design. Such plain, scientific, and vigorous writing is much needed, and deserves the grateful acknowledgment of men who love their Bibles.

The Last Stake; A Tale of Monte Carlo. By Madame Foli. Fisher Unwin. This book is full of love and passion, fact and fiction. In a bold, clear narrative it shows the subtle and varied forms of temptation presented by the gaming table; how, even in young girls, the terrible mania sows its deadly seed. There is nothing forced or overdrawn; no impossible flights of imagination. It tells its own story, but in such a way that one shudders at the possibility of such a plague being allowed to exist in one of the fairest spots of Europe.

The Comfortable Words. By T. T. Perowne. Elliot Stock. Meditations on the verses of Scripture which follow the Absolution Service of the Church of England.

A Visit to Victoria. By W. J. Woods, B.A. Wyman & Sons. A lively description of this colony as seen from the visitor's point of view. It condenses much information as to the ways of the inhabitants, into a small space.

Twilight Verses. By Mrs. Daniel Tomkins. 1s. 6d. Jarrold & Sons. The verses are arranged on one page, with the texts which they illustrate on the opposite side. It is printed in bold type, and would be a suitable present for an aged Christian.

The New House of Commons. 6d. Pall Mall Gazette Office. In this "Extra" are given brief but full particulars of the constituencies and the members they returned at the last election, together with elaborate statistics, and comparisons of the votes recorded in 1885 and 1886.

Four Verbs; a Study for Girls. Moral Lessons for Girls. A. J. Roche, High-road, Lee. These little pamphlets, written primarily for school-girls, enforce good lessons. The second deals with "taking care," and might do good if careless girls could be induced to read it.

Christ Here! Christ There! A Record of Divine Mercy, gives an account of the conversion of a Dutch seaman named Jan Kreins Huisman at the eleventh hour. Any profits on the sale will be given to the Scripture Readers' Society for Ireland. (1d. W. Wileman, 34, Bouverie-street, E.C.)

A Service of Suffering. By J. G. Westlake. J. W. Arrowsmith, Bristol. The particulars here recorded of the loss of some faculties and the quickening of others in the case of Mrs. Croad, during a prolonged illness, are most extraordinary. At the end of the book some poems, composed during her affliction, are printed, and they show a resigned and cheerful spirit.

We have received from The Church of England Temperance Society two papers, by Mr. John Abbey: Thoughts for Farmers, advocating and giving examples of the use of temperance drinks in the harvest-fields in place of intoxicants; and Facts for Working-men, a collection of instances of sustained endurance without alcoholic stimulants.

The Gospel of Suffering. By Mrs. C. G. Campbell. Society for Promoting Christian Knowledge. The authoress directs our attention to the benefits and blessings God intends us to derive from suffering, which, alas! we too frequently overlook when such trials overtake us. Our Lord was made "Perfect through suffering," and we, too, may deem it a privilege to follow his steps. This booklet is helpful.

Handy Guide to Emigration. 3d. Society for Promoting Christian Knowledge. Mr. W. B. Paton, the honorary secretary of the Central Emigration Society, has compiled this pamphlet, which gives much information respecting the English colonies, likely to be useful to the intending emigrant. It also gives particulars as to some of the societies now engaged in sending emigrants abroad, and would be helpful to those who desire to aid people in this way, but do not know the best method to adopt.

AUGUST MAGAZINES.

Eastward Ho! (6d., Swan, Sonnenschein & Co.) shows what is being done to bring joy and sweetness into the lives of the London poor. The article on "Village Recreative Clubs" is suggestive and good.

The Contemporary Pulpit (6d., Swan, Sonnenschein & Co.) gives the sermon preached by Dr. Hatch at the Edinburgh Graduation service in St. Giles' Cathedral, and an incisive account of Rev. Henry Ward Beecher's appearances in London.

We have received the following Magazines since our last notice:—

Mission and other Appeals.

Cholera in Italy.—Professor Pietro Mariani, who has been labouring as an evangelist for several years at Bari, in the south-east of Italy, writes on August 2 respecting the distress caused by the cholera, which has lasted more than three months: "Whole villages are decimated, such as Mola and Palo del Colle; those who do not die of cholera die of starvation. Contributions towards the relief of the sufferers may be sent to Miss Carruthers, 7, Westover Villas, Bournemouth.

Y.M.C.A. Evangelistic Work.—Prompted by the success of the efforts made by the North-eastern District Union of England last winter, the Association in that Union wish to extend their work in the coming autumn, and are raising a fund to aid the weak associations, and for travelling expenses. The Union has sufficient evangelists who would give their services. It is desired to raise £100, of which £40 is promised. Subscriptions may be sent to the Organising Secretary, Mr. J. C. Moor, 36, Peel-street, Sunderland; or to Messrs. Morgan & Scott.

Anti-infidel Tract Enterprise.—During the past few months, Mr. W. R. Bradlaugh has given away to working-men and others employed in ironworks, collieries, dockyards, and on the railway, over 800 of his five shilling packets of Anti-Infidel Tracts, but for want of means he is quite unable to give away any more, notwithstanding the fact that he is receiving daily numerous applications. Though there are three infidel papers published every week, The Anti-Infidel is the only magazine issued to counteract their baneful influence. This tract enterprise is on a self-supporting basis, and for every five shillings received, ten shillings worth of tracts are sent to the donor, or to any address given, Samples and catalogue post free of W. R. Bradlaugh, 70, King's Cross-road, London, W.C.

TEMPERANCE NOTES.

The new Lord Lieutenant of Ireland, Lord Londonderry, is a warm friend of temperance.

In New South Wales, public-houses are closed entirely from eleven on Saturday night to six on Monday morning.

Under the patronage of Lady Ailsa, temperance work is actively carried on amongst the soldiers stationed at Ayr.

It is stated, the women of the poorer classes, in Cork, frequent public-houses in greater numbers than the men.

A Temperance Café has been opened at Barnave, Savoy, France, under the auspices of the Waldensian Mission.

The American States which have the largest proportion of immigrants are the most opposed to temperance legislation.

In Sydney, the arrests for drunkenness are above 34 per cent. fewer since the enforcement of the Sunday Closing Act.

Mr. G. A. Sala, of The Daily Telegraph, writes that hard drinking is rapidly becoming a thing of the past among Europeans in India. We hope this is true.

"A Temperance Regiment" is being enrolled in New York on a purely military basis, and with total abstinence as an indispensable qualification.

Discussing Prohibition, The Nonconformist thinks it hard that a few "desperate drunkards should practically make laws for a whole community."

The United States National Temperance Society has sent a special work on the temperance question to the pastor of every coloured church in the South.

Rev. Marshall Randles, appointed successor to Dr. Pope as Theological Tutor at the Wesleyan College, Didsbury, Manchester, is a pronounced total abstainer.

Working-class Memorials against the opening of the People's Palace on Sundays, and against the sale of drink on the premises, are being actively promoted in the East-end.

The American Minister, in Siam, has stopped a nefarious liquor traffic, formerly carried on under protection of the American flag, for which the king has expressed his gratitude.

"An Overseer of St. Martin's" complains in The Times of the conduct of the Metropolitan Board of Works in regard to liquor licences acquired for street improvements. Instead of allowing the licences to lapse, the Board transfers them to new and larger premises.

A great Temperance Fete is to be held on August 28, at the Liverpool Exhibition, under the auspices of the Liverpool Temperance and Band of Hope Union. Temperance organisations in the North of England are uniting to make it a demonstration worthy of the cause.

CAMEROON.—The committee of the Bâle Foreign Missions, after much prayer and consideration, have decided to undertake the Cameroon Mission, the English Baptists giving up to them their building and property for £2000.—Journal Réligieux.

TEMPERANCE ON THE CONTINENT.—About four years ago a Society was formed in Frankfort to fight against the misuse of strong drinks. This Society has just held its anniversary at Hamburg. Great stress was laid upon the increase of cheap coffee-houses as a preventive to drunkenness. At Mecklenburg a "Drunkards' Establishment" has been so far successful that from 30 to 50 per cent. have been wholly reclaimed. Religious influence has not been wanting in these institutions.—Wahrheitszeuge.

Notes on Daily Readings.

SUNDAY, AUGUST 22.—I KINGS XX.

General Remarks.—We have here a remarkable picture of formal religion. Baal-worship had been expelled by Elijah. Both the power of Jehovah and the righteousness of his authority had been acknowledged. Still, they neither loved nor trusted Him. When trouble comes they do not humble themselves before Him in prayer. Ahab is willing to abase himself before Benhadad (vv. 2—4), as no Eastern monarch of any spirit would, by the voluntary surrender of his seraglio. He shows no kingly spirit whatever, until he is roused, first by new and more outrageous demands, and then by the words of his subjects. But in all this we have no mention of prayer to God. It is true that twice over they were delivered by Divine power; but these deliverances came unsought, and were received without thanksgiving; and the end of the chapter is gloomy and threatening. Humility, prayerfulness, and thanksgiving are far truer signs of spiritual health than any outward success, however Divine that success may be in origin or character. God's power was with Ahab and his army, and yet Ahab was dead toward God.

"There is throughout the narrative a sort of cheerlessness arising from the want of that spontaneous reference to the Lord, and thankfulness to Him, which plays like a sunbeam over the history of public transactions of equal or even less moment, in the time of devout kings."—Kitto.

11.—Let not him that girdeth on his harness boast himself as he that putteth it off.—It is natural to us to under-estimate the vast difference between beginnings and endings, between the conception of a great purpose, and the execution of the same. Many rest in the mere purpose, the high intent, as though it were certain of attainment. Then, too, we are all apt to judge others strictly according to their works, while we judge ourselves leniently, according to our good intentions, our noble purposes. The results are harsh judgments, boastfulness, and sin. Young converts are specially liable to this.

40.—And as thy servant was busy here and there, &c.—He failed to keep the chief end in view, to put the first thing first. So is it often with God's people, the general intention is right, and the life very busy, perhaps with good works; but the definite, dominant purpose to set the Lord always before them is forgotten. Other things come first, and, lo! He is gone.

MONDAY, AUGUST 23.—I KINGS XXI.

In this chapter may be seen the self-punishing power of covetousness. Ahab lost power to enjoy what belonged to him, through coveting his neighbour's land. In proportion to the strength of that coveting did this misery come upon him, until he presents the pitiful spectacle of a king sullen and angry in the midst of power and wealth, because, forsooth, a single vineyard is denied him! Then the danger of covetousness is forcibly illustrated here,—its power to prepare the heart to receive the seed-thoughts of great crimes. Jezebel the tempter found an easy prey in Ahab the covetous.

"Naboth's refusal to alienate his vineyard to the king did not proceed from obstinate self-will, but had the religious ground, that the law of Moses strictly forbade any Israelite to sell his paternal inheritance; and, even in case of the greatest poverty, only permitted its sale on the condition that it could be redeemed at any time, and, if this was not done, in the year of jubilee it reverted freely to the original owner or heir" (Lev. xxv. 13—28; Num. xxxvi. 7, &c.).—Keil.

9.—Proclaim a fast.—"The object of this fast was at once to raise a prejudice against Naboth, who was assumed by the elders to have done a deed which disgraced the town, and required a public repentance; and at the same time to give an air of religion and piety to the proceedings."—Sp. Com.

20.—Thou hast sold thyself to work evil, &c.—Observe how this terribly vivid description of an evil man is twice repeated in this chapter. See also 2 Kings xvii. 17. It tells of voluntary and deliberate submission to sin as to a master, for the sake of its pleasures: it tells also of bondage, irrevocable and degrading as slavery.

TUESDAY, AUGUST 24.—I KINGS XXII.

The alliance between Jehoshaphat and Ahab, and the evil that came of it, is the most suggestive fact in this chapter. It began with a marriage between Jehoram, son of Jehoshaphat, and Athaliah, Ahab's daughter. Readers will do well to trace for themselves the vast and far-reaching evils that sprang from this mixed marriage. It took place much earlier than the events of this chapter, not later than the eighth or ninth year of Jehoshaphat's reign; for (compare 2 Kings viii. 26 with 2 Chron. xxii. 1) Jehoram's youngest son, Ahaziah, was two and twenty when his father died at forty (2 Kings viii. 17). Jehoram, therefore, was not older than fifteen or sixteen when he married. From that time onward the two royal houses were very intimate. There was the political and military alliance recorded here, which, but for a special providence (2 Chron. xviii. 31), would have cost Jehoshaphat his life, and which did bring upon him a severe rebuke from God (2 Chron. xix. 2). A very similar one is recorded (2 Kings iii. 6, &c.) between Jehoshaphat and Ahab's son, Jehoram. There was also a commercial league between Jehoshaphat and Ahaziah, another son of Ahab (compare 1 Kings xxii. 48, 49, and 2 Chron. xx. 35—37), which brought further loss and reproof. The wish to strengthen himself by union with the ungodly was Jehoshaphat's peculiar besetment, and was the fruitful source of terrible sin and sorrow during several generations that followed. The political reasons for these alliances were very pressing, for Syria was becoming more and more a menace to both Israel and Judah. On merely moral grounds, too, much that was very plausible might have been urged; e.g., Israel and Judah were one in origin and covenant. They professed to worship the same God, and that this alliance between the two was ending the fraternal strife of generations, and so on. The one great answer to all is given by Jehu the seer in 2 Chron. xix. 2.

WEDNESDAY, AUGUST 25.—2 KINGS I.

3.—Is it not because there is not a God in Israel?—This was "to apostatise more completely than even Ahab had done. Ahab had consulted prophets who at least professed to be prophets of Jehovah (1 Kings xxii. 6—12), and spoke in his name. But Ahaziah casts aside the remnant of respect for the old religion, and consults a foreign oracle, as if the voice of God were wholly silent in his own country."—Sp. Com. Professing Christians have only to cease from prayer toward God, and seek help from man, to offer high insult to that glorious One who has promised to be their help in times of trouble.

9—12.—Then the king sent a captain of fifty, &c. —"Ahaziah had, as it were, challenged Jehovah to a trial of strength, by sending a band of fifty to arrest one man. He must have thought that though Elijah, because of his miraculous gifts, could not be taken by a few men, a band of fifty could overpower him. Consequently, God was challenged to show his might. Under such circumstances, was Elijah to yield tamely? or was he to vindicate Jehovah?"—Sp. Com.

17.—In the second year of Jehoram.—This seems to flatly contradict chapter iii. 1. "Perhaps Jehoram of Judah received the royal title from his father as early as his father's sixteenth year, when he was about to join Ahab against the Syrians; the same year might then be called either the eighteenth of Jehoshaphat, or the second of Jehoram."—Sp. Com. There is much reason to believe that Jehoram was first made co-regent with his father, and that he became the actual sovereign shortly before his father's death.

THURSDAY, AUGUST 26.—2 KINGS II.

The Rapture of Elijah.—2.—As the Lord liveth, and as thy soul liveth, I will not leave thee.—This is a double oath, and is three times repeated (ver. 2, 4, and 6). It clearly shows the intensity of Elisha's purpose. 3.—Came forth to Elisha.—To Elisha, not Elijah. "We may suppose that Elijah was too much occupied with heavenly thoughts to address any exhortations to the scholars. Perhaps he scarcely noticed their presence."—Sp. Com. Hold ye your peace.—They knew by their gift of prophecy what would happen; but they use it to weaken, not to strengthen, and Elisha silences them accordingly. 8.—Elijah took his mantle, and smote the waters, &c.—"The miracle is analogous to the miraculous dividing of the Red Sea by the rod of Moses. Moses the leader of the people accomplished his miracle by the shepherd's rod; Elijah the prophet divides the water with his prophetic mantle."—Keil. 9.—Ask what I shall do for thee.—Elisha's purpose had been severely tried. Now the trial is ending, and the prize begins to appear. God's peculiar gifts are generally preceded by some great trial of character which none but those of strong and simple purpose can stand. A double portion of thy spirit.—Elijah had failed before Jezebel; if his successor is to succeed it must be by a fuller measure of the same Spirit which rested on Elijah. 10.—If thou see me. —This was the last test which was to prove Elisha's tenacity of purpose. In order to see Elijah, when taken away, he must not lose sight of him for a moment; if he did, he might in that moment be caught away. (See "Men of one Idea." 1d. Morgan & Scott.)

Kitto remarks that the rapture of Elijah was but "an isolated anticipation of that which shall happen collectively to the righteous that are alive on the earth at our Lord's second coming (1 Thes. iv. 16, 17)."

FRIDAY, AUGUST 27.—2 KINGS III.

4.—Mesha, king of Moab, was a sheepmaster.—"Moab, the region immediately east of the Dead Sea and of the lower Jordan, though in part suited for agriculture, is in the main a great grazing country. It has been compared to 'the downs of our own southern counties.' The king of Moab must have resembled a modern Arab sheikh, whose wealth is usually estimated by the number of his flocks and herds."—Sp. Com.

7.—I am as thou art, &c.—We cannot but wonder at Jehoshaphat's ready consent, seeing that only two years had passed since his great escape on the occasion of Ahab's death. Jehoram's partial reformation (ver. 2), however, may justly account for a great deal.

10.—Alas! that the Lord, &c.—Their peril was extreme. The expected supplies of water had failed them. They were exhausted with thirst, and with the desert march. The enemy faced them, and retreat through the waterless desert seemed impossible. In this sore strait Jehoshaphat, the man of God, shows how faith gives courage, and brings deliverance.

15.—Bring me a minstrel.—"Music seems to have been a regular accompaniment of prophecy in the schools of the prophets (1 Sam. x. 5; 1 Chron. xxv. 1—3; &c.), and an occasional accompaniment of it elsewhere" (Exod. xv. 20).

16.—Make this valley full of ditches, &c.—So God's people to-day have often to dig in dry places, making receptacles for a blessing which as yet is invisible. Sometimes even the Bible itself seems to be dry as desert sands; but, if only the thirsting one will dig therein, the water of life will soon flow plenteously, to the satisfying of his soul as well as to the defeat of his enemies.

SATURDAY, AUGUST 28.—2 KINGS IV.

3.—Borrow not a few (margin, Scant not).—When our need is real, and we spread it before God, it never is a question of oil—only of empty vessels. The "scant" is on our side, never on his. The difficulty is with our fulness, not with our acknowledged emptiness.

4.—Pour out, &c.—"The way to increase is to use. Unto him that hath shall be given. It is not hoarding the talents, but trading with them that doubles them. The oil was to be multiplied in the pouring, as the other widow's meal in the spending."—Henry and Scott.

8.—Shunem.—Situated on Mount Gilboa, some sixteen or seventeen miles from Carmel.

8—37.—A fine illustration of (1) noble reverence for goodness; (2) the generous treatment of a good man: (3) a good man's gratitude; (4) the large reward, which seems never to fail those who deal kindly with God's people; and the power of prayer.

10.—A stool.—"Rather chair. The chair and table, unusual in the sleeping-rooms of the East, indicate that the prophet was expected to use his apartment for study and retirement, not only as a sleeping-chamber."—Sp. Com.

23.—It is well: rather, peace.—The word is intentionally ambiguous.

31.—The child is not awaked.—The greater works of mercy cannot be done through others. The personal presence, and the forthputting of our best energies, is necessary. Not a staff, nor a servant, but ourselves.

34, 35.—Stretched himself upon, &c.—"Warmth may have been actually communicated from the living body to the dead one; and Elisha's persistence—the result and evidence of his strong faith (Heb. xi. 35)—may have been a condition of the child's return to life."—Sp. Com. Which thing is an allegory.

43.—Should I set this? &c.—"This miracle was a faint foreshadowing of our Lord's more marvellous feeding of thousands with even scantier materials. The resemblance is not only in the broad fact, but in various minute particulars. . . . See Matt. xiv. 19—21; John vi. 9—13. As Elijah was a type of the Baptist, so Elisha was in many respects a type of our blessed Lord. In his peaceful, non-ascetic life, in his mild and gentle character, in his constant circuits, in his many miracles of mercy, in the healing virtue which abode in his bodily frame (chap. xiii. 21), he resembled, more than any other prophet, the Messiah, of whom all prophets were more or less shadows and figures."—Sp. Com.

[As it is found that infidels and others send tracts to the persons whose names are inserted here, it is most important that all books and papers received should be carefully read before being given away.]

BOSNIA.—A Croatian pastor was recently sent by the Gustavus Adolphus Society to make a missionary journey in Bosnia. He visited several groups of Protestants, and at Pzjedor celebrated the Lord's Supper, which had not been done by any Christian pastor for three hundred years. One of the two Protestant cemeteries was also consecrated. In the capital, Serajero, there are from sixty to eighty Dissenters, amongst them some of the Hungarian sect called Nazarenes, who live quite apart from any other religionists. In all it is thought there are about 540 Protestants in the country. Approving mention is made of Miss Irby's schools.—Le Christianisme.

Subscriptions Received by Messrs. Morgan & Scott to Saturday, August 14, 1886.

 Donations should be sent by Cheque or P.O. Orders, not by stamps. Cheques to be drawn in favour of Morgan & Scott, and crossed City Bank; P.O. Orders payable to Morgan & Scott, at G.P.O.

 Will donors oblige us by giving explicitly and fully the titles of the missions to which they wish their donations to be applied? Mistakes which sometimes arise will thus be obviated. Will they also bear in mind that our Donation List is made up for the Printer on Saturday morning? Any amounts received afterwards will be acknowledged in the subsequent week's number.

GENEVA. — This town deserves honourable mention for its readiness to help fallen women and protect girls. Many Christian women are nobly consecrating themselves to this work, some of whom are always on the watch at railway stations and steamboat landing-places ready to help the many young women who go to Geneva in search of situations, often without any address or protection. Le Christianisme reminds its readers that there exists in France a similar work, which claims their respect and sympathy.

HAMMERSMITH Y.M.C.A. — This branch is doing a good work in the midst of a population of business young men, scarcely exceeded for numbers by any other Y.M.C.A. in London. In October it is intended to hold a sale of work (of which particulars will be announced in due course), with a view to clear off all liabilities. It is also very desirable that the large piece of ground behind the building should be covered in, thus providing a mission hall to hold 300 persons. Any articles, or contributions of work, will be gratefully welcomed by the Secretary, Mr. Edward Ellis, 263, Hammersmith-road, W.

MISSION TO DEEP SEA FISHERMEN.

Six Mission Vessels are cruising amongst the North Sea trawling fleets. 12,000 smacksmen are engaged all the year round in providing our tables with fish. These men, who for us toil through furious blasts and sleety storm—who hazard their lives and fall victims, hundreds of them, to the pitiless waves, that markets at home may be well supplied—may rightly claim some small share in the privileges we so richly enjoy and so highly prize.

THIS THEY CAN ONLY HAVE THROUGH THE PRESENCE OF THE MISSION VESSELS,

Carrying to the fishermen the message of Divine mercy and pardoning love, bringing the pleasure of books to while away the weary hours, affording relief in case of sickness and injury, and cheering and brightening dull and monotonous lives by their presence and ministry.

"The Mission smacks are doing in the North Sea a grand work, worthy of the support of a great maritime nation like England, and I believe that the results of their effort, great as they are in the present, will, if only supported liberally by the public, be of untold value in the future."—Sir Edward Birkbeck, Bart., M.P.

FUNDS ARE GREATLY NEEDED to enable the Mission to place a VESSEL WITH EVERY FLEET.

E. J. MATHER, Director.

181, Queen Victoria-st. (Next door to Blackfriars Bridge.)

N.B.—The Offices were removed to this address in December last; attention to the change will save much trouble, time, and expense to the Mission.

THE CRY OF THE CHILDREN.

President—Right Hon. EARL OF ABERDEEN.

Over FIFTY THOUSAND of our poorest City Children regularly attend the 180 RAGGED SCHOOL MISSIONS affiliated with the

RAGGED SCHOOL UNION.

THE operations include Sunday and Bible Schools, Day and Infant Free Schools, Week-night Schools for Rough Lads and Girls, Industrial Classes, Gospel Mission Services, Mothers' Meetings, Ragged Churches, Bands of Hope, Temperance Meetings, and Crèches. Country Houses provided for the weakly or convalescent. Emigration is also promoted, and numerous other agencies for the benefit of the poor children and their parents. Additional funds are urgently needed, and will be thankfully acknowledged by

JOHN KIRK, Secretary.

Offices—Exeter Hall, Strand, W.C.

The Anchorage.

HEBREWS vi. 19.

To Shelter Young Women (otherwise respectable) lately Fallen into Sin.

FOR rules of admission to the Anchorage House, and for the particulars of its work, and for trained servants ready to go to situations, apply (by letter only) to MRS. H. STUART-WORTLEY, Rosslyn House, Grove End-road, N.W., London, and to whom, or to any member of Committee, subscriptions may be sent; or to Messrs. Morgan & Scott.

Three New Musical Leaflets.

HEAVENLY UNION.

Come, Saints and sinners, hear me tell
The wonders of Immanuel,
Who saved me from a burning hell,
And brought my soul with Him to dwell,
And gave me heavenly union.

Printed on tinted paper, 1s. 4d. per 100; 3d. per dozen.

GO YE INTO ALL THE WORLD.

A MISSIONARY HYMN.

This Hymn is dedicated to MESSRS. STANLEY SMITH, STUDD, BEAUCHAMP, and companions of the CHINA INLAND MISSION party of 1885. Words and Music by JAMES MCGRANAHAN.

Far, far away in heathen darkness dwelling,
Millions of souls for ever may be lost,
Who, who will go, Salvation's story telling—
Looking to Jesus, counting not the cost.

Printed on tinted paper, 1s. 4d. per 100; 3d. per dozen.

CONFESSING CHRIST. WORDS BY WILLIAM LUFF.

I should like to be a soldier; but the flag I cannot bear:
I should like to win the battle; but the coat I cannot wear.
I should like to follow Jesus; but I think it would be best
I should wear my own black broad-cloth, and my own plain private vest.

AND

YE ARE CHRIST'S.

"Ye are Christ's!" oh, yes; I know it! for He bought me with his blood,
And I never can forget it, for He is my Saviour God.
In his hands I see the nailprints, in his face eternal love:
How I long to be just like Him in the Father's house above.

The above two pieces are printed on one 4-page leaflet, on tinted paper, 2s. 6d. per 100.

ORPHANAGE FUND.

THE SPEZIA MISSION FOR ITALY AND THE LEVANT.

At a meeting recently convened at the Bank of Messrs. Barclay, Bevan & Co., J. G. BARCLAY, Esq., in the chair, it was felt that, while the SPEZIA MISSION FOR ITALY was doing such excellent work in the country among the young and adult population, it was now most desirable that a Mission so signally blessed of God, which had entered on its 21st year of Christian labour, and which had gradually secured such hearty co-operation of Christians of various denominations, should now become more extensively known as an Agency largely adapted to be a blessing to the Italian people. It was also considered that—as the orphans Mr. Clarke took on himself the responsibility of supporting after the visitation of the cholera some two years since are not as yet able to enter the Home, because it is yet unfinished for lack of the requisite means—it is most important to make known this fact, and to urge the importance of soon raising the remaining sum of about £1,000 for the finishing the Home, the building the necessary School-rooms, and the furnishing of the same, &c.

The friends of the orphan, friends of Italy, and the friends of the necessitous, will rejoice to learn that in God's providence persons eminently fitted to superintend the Orphanage have been raised up to undertake this duty as soon as required.

Subscriptions towards this work of mercy will be thankfully received by

F. A. BEVAN, Esq., 54, Lombard-street, City, London;
ELIOT HOWARD, Esq., J.P., Walthamstow, near London;

of whom also inquiries can be made respecting the work.

P.S.—A kind response for the Orphanage Fund has already been received. May others follow till all needed has been received.

THAMES CHURCH MISSION.

INSTITUTED 1844.

President—The RIGHT HON. the LORD MAYOR.
Chairman—CAPT. the HON. F. MAUDE, R.N.
Secretary—REV. H. BLOOMER.

Object—To win Souls for Christ.

Twenty-three Agents are constantly at work in the Port of London. The results of their previous efforts, made in simple faith, show that they have been greatly blessed by God.

FUNDS ARE URGENTLY NEEDED.

Numbers of THE CHRISTIAN, Magazines, Tracts, &c., are most necessary, and will greatly assist the Chaplains and Missionaries.

The Secretary will be pleased to give an account of the Work either at School Room, Lecture Hall, or Drawing Room Meetings.

Offices, 31, New Bridge-street, Ludgate Circus E.C.

"MOON'S" SOCIETY FOR EMBOSSING THE SCRIPTURES AND OTHER BOOKS FOR THE BLIND.

DR. MOON'S simplified type, suitable for all ages and capacities of the Blind, is of universal application. It has been adapted by him to 251 languages and dialects. More than 160,000 volumes of the Word of God, and other books, have been supplied to the Blind of numerous countries.

Subscriptions and donations are urgently needed to carry on this daily increasing work, and will be gratefully received by Dr. W. MOON, 104, Queen's-road, Brighton (Acting Trustee); also by the Editors of THE CHRISTIAN.

That Little Bow of Blue.

IN FOUR VERSES.
(Reprinted from THE CHRISTIAN.)

MY heart was very heavy, for my children cried for bread;
I wept to see my little ones go supperless to bed;
I listened for a footstep, as I'd often done before,
Waiting for a staggering man to stumble through the door;
But his step was firm and steady, and his eye was clear and true,
And on his ragged coat he wore a little bit of blue! Extract.

Mr. Congreve will give ONE RECENT CASE, NOT PUBLISHED in this journal BEFORE, EVERY WEEK.

CASE FOR THIS WEEK.

CASE of Mr. J. LEADLY, CO. FERMANAGH.

Some time in the latter part of last year, this patient wrote me for medicine and advice. At that time he was suffering from all the symptoms of Phthisis; especially night perspirations, following a most harassing cough, were exhausting in the extreme. For this and other symptoms he was duly advised.

In a recent letter he says: "It is with the utmost pleasure I desire to bear my testimony to the efficacy of your treatment. The benefit I have derived from it is wonderful. I continued it four months, and am now perfectly well.—John Leadly, Sydare, Ballinamallard, Co. Fermanagh."

TESTIMONY of Mr. T. WEBSTER, PADIHAM.

This patient applied to me when in a forward stage of Phthisis. In several months he resumed work, and by perseverance entirely recovered.

Writing me, March 12, he says: "I have to thank you very much for all your kind advice and medicine, which completely restored me. I have kept well ever since. I have given away many of your books on Consumption, and shall recommend the treatment to all I can."

NOTE. — Days of Consultation. — TUESDAY, THURSDAY, and SATURDAY Mornings ONLY, at Coombe Lodge, Peckham. Patients from any long distance should choose either of the two former days. Everyone is expected to have seen the book first.

NUTS TO CRACK.

For Infidels and Freethinkers.

By AN OLD DEIST.

Extracts.

2. I cannot gainsay the fact that human nature is bad, and as bad as the old book makes it. Of course it is not the duty of deists and freethinkers to admit this; because, having no remedy for it, why should they tell that the old fortress is rotten at the foundation? But let us admit it; it is too hard to be cracked.—Page 5.

* * * * *

10. We are also asked to explain, on the ground of Evolution, whether the bird laying eggs came first without eggs, or the eggs without fowls. If we say eggs first, where did the egg come from? Or if we say the fowl first, then did the fowl not come from an egg? It would puzzle the natural philosopher to say how it could possibly come without an egg.

* * * * *

19. Why is it that dying men never regret being Christians? And why do deists often on their death-beds mourn over the fact that they were not Christians?

* * * * *

24. I cannot gainsay the fact, that the London Shipping Gazette has admitted that no ship is capable of meeting great storms and carrying heavy cargoes "that differs far from the proportions of Noah's Ark." How came the proportions of that great ship to be so worthy of attention in this nineteenth century?

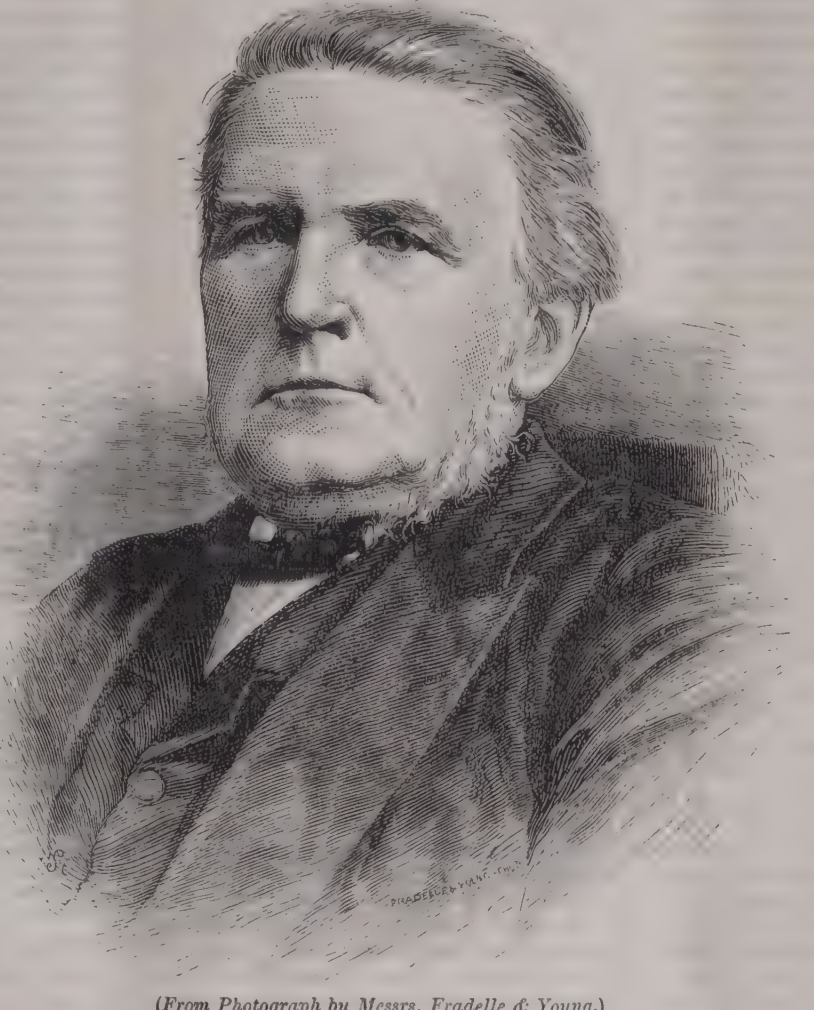
THE LATE REV. J. P. CHOWN.

THIS will be a black year in the history of the Baptist Church in England, because it must record the deaths of three of the leading divines in the denomination. Stowell Brown, with his large heart and bold utterance, and Charles Stanford, of saintly memory and thrilling eloquence, have been called from the work they loved so much and did so well. And now Mr. Chown has followed them. He was in many respects like unto his brethren. He had the manliness of the first and the consecrated fervour of the second. We intend to give our readers a short sketch of his career of usefulness, in the hope that it will point out "foot-prints on the sands of time," which will guide and stimulate their activity.

JOSEPH PARBERY CHOWN was born in December, 1821, at Kingsthorpe, a village in Northamptonshire. He was early brought under the influence of Divine truth, and was baptised at the age of nineteen in the river where, fifty-seven years before, Carey had been baptised. "Those river baptisms," says Rev. C. A. Davis, of Bradford, "were picturesque and impressive scenes. The deacons used to wade into the river first with way poles to find a firm standing-ground, and when the minister conducted the candidate into the water, the people reverently lined the shore, looking on. These solemn services more nearly resembled in their picturesque beauty the baptism of our Lord in Jordan, and the baptisms performed by the Apostles, than do the administrations of the ordinance performed nowadays within our chapels."

Mr. Chown began to preach as soon as he was converted. His gifts of oratory, his earnestness, and above all, the tokens of blessing which accompanied his words, led him to choose the pulpit as his sphere of service for Christ. He undertook the pastoral charge of the congregation at Ravensthorpe, a small village in the neighbourhood of the place of his birth, without any special theological training. His success there was immediate and striking. It made his friends think he would do better and greater work with fuller intellectual equipment. His early education was limited, though it had been broadened, by careful reading in various departments of literature. He was persuaded to enter Horton College, Bradford, to pass through the usual curriculum. So he came to the town where he was, in after years, to be a force on the side of righteousness. He profited much by the lectures and counsels of his teachers. He was as diligent in the class-room as he was earnest in the pulpit. On the Sabbath he was always ready to preach, and his services were eagerly sought after. He was a special favourite in Sion Chapel, the pastorate of which became vacant during his term of study. He was asked to fill the vacancy. The call was so urgent and unanimous that he felt bound to accept it. Then began a pastorate of seven and twenty years, the responsible duties of which were discharged with rare fidelity and increasing power.



(From Photograph by Messrs. Fradelle & Young.)

When Mr. Chown commenced work in Bradford, his church had 301 members; when he ended it, in 1875, the membership had risen to 817. He received 1311 men and women into the fellowship of the congregation. These figures say much, but they do not say all. The souls he was the means of saving, the lives he blessed, and the influence he wielded in the busy Yorkshire town cannot be reckoned by statistics. He at once leaped into such popularity as was enjoyed by few of his brethren. Crowds flocked to hear him, and went away feeling better because of what they heard. He was as true to the fundamental truths of evangelical Christianity as the magnet to the pole. The first text from which he preached in the old chapel was "The Cross of Christ," and his last text before leaving for Bloomsbury was, "The Cross of Christ." He knew nothing save "Christ and Him crucified." That unvarying and unflinching fidelity to the proclamation of the Gospel was the secret of his success. Few men realised more keenly than he the urgency of the message he bore. In season and out of season he exhorted sinners to repent and believe His appearance and elocutionary powers added to the force of his sermons. The manly pose of his figure and the thrilling pathos of his words compelled attention. He often used illustrations, and they were always apposite and beautiful. He had marvellous fluency in speaking. The idea in his brain was quickly clothed in fitting language. His eloquence was as free and bracing as the sweep of the wind over the sea. When emotion stirred him, he would burst into an impassioned tide of rhetoric, which drove objections aside, and carried the congregation captive. These qualities, dominated and energised by dependence on the Holy Spirit, made his pulpit ministrations strong.

The work of the Holy Spirit was a favourite subject with him. He never wearied of showing how the Church's vital prosperity was bound up in the realisation of the place and power of the Spirit given by the risen Lord. In a memorable sermon at the autumnal session of the Baptist Union at Plymouth, he used these striking words: "Let the Church exemplify the power without which she is hardly worthy of her name, that she may call a nation she knows not, and that nations which know not her may run to her. She will never dishonour the name she bears by whispering it with bated breath; standing as the living embodiment of Christ in the depravity of sin around her, she will never cringe and crouch and ask of an ungodly world for leave to live and have a being amongst those whom she is sent to fill with life and blessing. Let her be true to herself, and God shall so order all things that I believe the press, the railway, the post, the telegraph, shall assuredly be amongst her instrumentalities—as the Sunday-school and the tract—messengers to bear her winged words abroad through all the land around, to fulfil the Divine purpose of Him who has given these wondrous powers to man, till her praise shall be declared, and the Saviour known the wide world through. I cannot tell what I felt, and what possibly suggested the thought to me, when some year or two ago, in my own church, I was pleased to receive a telegram from the visitor of one of the candidates to appear before the church. He was away distant and unable to arrive in time, and give personally his evidence of the work of Divine grace in its reality, and he went to the telegraph-office, and the wires brought along the glad tidings of the operations of the Holy Spirit in having led that inquirer to Jesus; and, as I read out that telegram in the church meeting, it seemed to me an earnest of the time when these wires shall flash other messages from one spot to another, the tidings of the myriads that are brought to Jesus; the revelations of the work of Divine grace in which men shall rejoice amid the growing triumphs of the Redeemer's kingdom, till the whole earth shall be filled with his glory, and all men shall call Him blessed." In an age when the work of the Holy Spirit has not the prominence it should have, these glowing words should be pondered carefully and prayerfully.

Mr. Chown's popularity on the platform increased his power in the pulpit. He was one of the very few men who could fill St. George's Hall, in Bradford. He had the knack of so putting what he had to say that it fascinated his hearers. His "Penny Lectures" got to be a standing institution. They drew crowded audiences of working men, to whom he spoke cheerily, frankly, and boldly. He did not hesitate to give a home-thrust, but it was done in such a kindly manner that it served its purpose without offending. He never forgot that he was a preacher, but always remained true to his high calling. The lectures helped to swell the attendance at the church, and the advices of the week-day paved the way for the appeals of the Sabbath. Every good cause met with his support. He was a fearless champion of temperance when its friends were less numerous, and its enemies more bitter, than they are now. He was specially interested in Bands of Hope. He loved the young, and they loved him. He sought to lead them to form early habits which should strengthen and bless their after years; and in many cases his efforts were crowned with success. He took an active part in the social and philanthropic agencies of the town. He did not lose sight of the life that is in that which is to come. Whatever made men happier and more prosperous enlisted his sympathies, and secured his co-operation.

Arduous and varied as were the duties which fell to his lot, he never allowed them to interfere with his pastoral work. He visited every member of the congregation twice a year. He was so systematic in doing this, that it could be told any week at whose house he would be at a given hour. He was a model pastor. His bright face and cheery words carried comfort wherever he went. The children flocked to his knee, and the parents welcomed him eagerly. He would ask affectionately after the welfare of each individual in the household, shun gossip as he would a deadly poison, speak consolation tenderly, or rebuke gently, and end his visit with a prayer which brought the family into the very presence of God. It was no wonder that such a man was loved warmly and esteemed highly.

As his reputation grew, his services were in demand far beyond the town in which his labours lay. He preached anniversary sermons, went on deputation to all parts of the country, and lectured in most of the large cities. One lecture—that on "William Carey"—was often repeated to the delight and edification of those who heard it. It was a masterly sketch of a noble life, and full of inspiration. It showed that the four characteristics of the great missionary were self-culture, self-consecration, self-denial, and self-renouncement. These characteristics were dear to the lecturer, for they were woven into all his activity. He could speak about them with thrilling power, because his words came out of the depths of his own experience.

He practised what he preached. His self-renunciation appeared in his action in 1863, when he sent 110 members from his own church to form the new church at Hallfield Chapel. Nor did his unselfishness end with sacrificing part of his congregation; he also made himself responsible, first for £500, and then for £200, to aid the infant cause. He knew that Hallfield was a growing suburb, and that his wealthy friends would go there, yet he remained in the old chapel, simply because it would be the harder charge. Self was buried out of sight. His reward came as the years rolled on. In 1873 he opened the spacious new chapel in which the congregation he gathered still worship, free of debt, and named it Sion Jubilee Chapel. God honoured his self-denying devotion with a success which was at its height when he was summoned to another sphere of labour.

Mr. Chown, like all popular ministers, received calls to vacant congregations, but he steadily turned a deaf ear to them. In 1875 there came an invitation he could not dispose of so easily. He was asked to go to Bloomsbury to carry on the work associated with the name of Dr. Brock. After careful consideration he decided to go. His decision was a blow to Bradford. His congregation could scarcely realise that the bond between their beloved pastor and them was to be severed. They parted from him with tears, and followed him with their best wishes and prayers. So ended what Mr. Davis, Mr. Chown's successor at Bradford, has called "one of the most successful of modern pastorates."

Mr. Chown's work in Bloomsbury extended over ten years. It was characterised by all his old energy and consecration, and by the ripened maturity of Christian thought which comes from sitting at the feet of Christ. Fragrant memories of the Sabbaths on which he broke the bread of life will long linger in the lives of those who gathered to hear him preach. The old prosperity of the church was renewed under his ministry. The buildings were restored at a cost of £4000; fresh life was infused into the various congregational societies; the contributions increased; and, best of all, 600 members were received by conversion alone. Bloomsbury became once more a centre of evangelistic and philanthropic usefulness. It was a light set on a hill, throwing healing rays on the darkness round about.

As in Bradford so in London, Mr. Chown did good service outside his own congregation; but the prominent position he filled as a leading Baptist turned his energies, in a special degree, into the channel of denominational activities. He was a zealous member of the Baptist Missionary Society's Committee, guiding and enlarging its operations. In 1879 he was appointed President of the London Baptist Association, and during his year of office the chapel at Brondesbury was erected. In 1883 he was called to occupy the chair of the Baptist Union. The duties connected with that honour were discharged with a grace and dignity worthy of it. The subject of his address was "Christ in Christians," and the memory of its weighty counsels and eloquent appeals is still fresh.

The strain of incessant work gradually told on Mr. Chown's constitution. Symptoms of disease made their appearance. His friends got anxious about him, and, towards the close of 1885, made an effort to secure a suitable colleague for him; but that effort was unsuccessful. He saw it to be best to resign. That step caused great sorrow in the congregation, but its wisdom was generally acknowledged. The disease rapidly progressed, but he was able to preach to the end. On the Sabbath before his death he stood once more in Bloomsbury pulpit, and delivered a discourse bright with Gospel hope, and tender with touching pathos. It was his last sermon. The week that followed was one of pain. On Monday and Tuesday his heart troubled him very much, and he had difficulty in breathing. On Wednesday he felt better, and was strong enough to go into the garden. On Thursday he was able to see callers, and to talk to them about work he longed to do. After dinner he sat down in a chair in the dining-room, and fell asleep. He slept to see, for he awoke with God.

What Mr. Chown did is his best memorial. We do not care to weave garlands of empty praise to fling on his grave, but we gladly rejoice in the testimony he bore to the truth, and the services for God and man he accomplished. He had a large heart and strong convictions. As a preacher he combined glowing eloquence with evangelical fervour. In his work for Christ he had an enthusiasm which never grew cold and an energy which knew not weariness. He is now with the Master he served so well on earth, and he has left to us the legacy of an inspiring example.

IDOLATRY IN SPAIN.

AS IN ISRAEL.

The present religious condition of Spaniards is in some respects analagous to that of the Jews at the time of their captivity to Babylon. They are "mad upon their idols." Every city, town, and village, is under the protection of a tutelar saint—"according to the number of thy cities are thy gods, O Judah" (Jer. ii. 28). The summits of hills are crowned with pillars, on which are images, and, under the shade of green oaks and poplars by the wayside, the traveller constantly comes across bowers containing one or more images—"and they set them up pillars and Asherim upon every high hill, and under every green tree" (2 Kings xvii. 10); "They sacrifice upon the tops of the mountains, and burn incense upon the hills, under oaks and poplars and terebinths, because the shadow thereof is good" (Hos. iv. 13). Street corners are often embellished with a niche containing an image, before which lamps are suspended and incense is burnt; and on feast days temporary altars are erected in squares and market-places, where crowds bow down to images of wood and stone—"According to the number of the streets of Jerusalem have ye set up altars to the shameful thing, even altars to burn incense unto Baal" (Jer. xi. 13). Rare woods from Manilla, Fernando Po, and Cuba are employed in making images, together with the cypress, cedar, oak, fir, and ash —"He heweth him down cedars, and taketh the cypress and the oak . . . he maketh a god, and worshippeth it . . . and prayeth unto it, and saith, Deliver me, for thou art my god (Isa. xliv. 14—17). Women give ear-rings, brooches, and bracelets that the goldsmith may make them an image, and when set up, they cover them with broidered garments, put jewels upon their fingers and crowns upon their heads; burn incense and oil before them, and prostrate themselves in their presence—"Thou didst take thy fair jewels of my gold and of my silver, which I had given thee, and madest for thee images of men . . . and thou tookest thy broidered garments, and coveredst them, and didst set mine oil and mine incense before them" (Ezek. xvi. 17, 18). Pictures and images are put up behind doors—"And behind the doors and the posts hast thou set up thy memorial" (Isa. lvii. 8).

THE QUEEN OF HEAVEN.

Women are passionate devotees of the Queen of Heaven; they burn incense before her altars, and make cakes upon which her figure is pourtrayed—"The women knead the dough to make cakes to the queen of heaven" (Jer. vii. 18). In times of trouble they make vows before her image; the Queen of Spain, the princes, and grandees, burn incense to her in the streets of Madrid, and everywhere throughout the country the same idolatry is practised—"But we will certainly perform every word that is gone forth out of our mouth, to burn incense unto the queen of heaven . . . we and our fathers, our kings, and our princes in the cities of Judah, and in the streets of Jerusalem" (Jer. xliv. 17). The Queen of Heaven, formerly Capitana Generala of the Spanish army, has been raised to the rank of Field-Marshal and Empress of Cataluña.

Bull fights are generally held upon the Lord's-day, and once or twice during the season a benefit is given for the Queen of Heaven. The faithful are earnestly invited to attend, being informed that the proceeds will be devoted to the cult of Our Lady of Mercy. A short time ago the walls of Seville were decorated with flaming posters, having a picture of the Virgin Mary in the centre, with an espada, or bull-fighter, at her right hand, and a wounded bull on her left. The lances, swords, and darts, &c., used in the performances, were carried to the bull-ring in the form of a cross, accompanied by a vast concourse of men, women, and children singing couplets to the Queen of Heaven!

The Madrid newspaper, La Corresponcia de España, says: "Every year the image of the Virgin of Tarrasa is presented with an outfit by the inhabitants of that town. This year it has been paid for by the tradespeople. It consists of a walking costume composed of rich grenadine, trimmed with expensive lace; white shoes, a fan, and a magnificent pair of diamond earrings.

In Murcia, the priests hung upon the flagstaff of the Cathedral a beautiful mantle worn by an image of the Virgin, to scare the cholera away; but the disease made greater ravages in that city than in any other.

While a special service was being performed before an image of the Queen of Heaven in Barcelona, its dress caught fire, and was with difficulty extinguished. Yet the folly of praying to an image incapable of saving itself never seemed to occur to those present.

In Puig, Valencia, is an image of the Queen of Heaven, before which is always kept a lighted lamp. Last year someone suggested that the oil used in the lamp ought to keep away cholera. The demand for this oil accordingly became such that several shopkeepers supplied it, the priest receiving part of the proceeds. The business promised lucrative results until the sacristan who dispensed the "blessed oil" was stricken with cholera and died.

The writer has two scapularies of the Queen of Heaven, from Begona, near Bilbao; they are common playing cards covered with stamped calico.

"IT IS A CURSED THING" (Deut. vii. 26).

In church processions, images are borne by men, who, when tired, ease their shoulders, and kneel down and worship the figures they have borne—"They have no knowledge that carry the wood of their graven image, and pray unto a god that cannot save" (Isa. xlv. 20). Santeros, or image-makers, bargain over their wares. San Anton is manufactured for swineherds, St. Elmo for sailors, and Santa Barbara to keep off lightning. There are images for every day in the year, and for every ill to which flesh is heir. People carry their gods in brooches, in boxes, and in their pockets, and in the house occasionally pin a handkerchief over them that they should not see—"Their land is full of idols; they worship the work of their own hands, that which their own fingers have made: and the mean man is bowed down, and the great man is brought low" (Isa. ii. 8). When known devotees of certain saints were struck down by cholera, the people of Granada ran from image to image, hoping that by turning to many they would be sure of safety—"My people doth not consider" (Isa. i. 3). While an image of San Sebastian was recently carried in a procession it struck against the branch of an olive tree, and was dashed to pieces. During last Corpus procession at Villareal the famous image of San Christobalon fell to the ground, its wooden head rolling among the feet of the spectators. In the church of San Andrés de Palomar several images were recently shattered by lightening. A few days afterwards an image of St. Joseph, in the church of San Gil de Guadalajara, had its head struck off by lightning also, yet, by the time these lines appear, another head will probably have been glued on, and multitudes have bowed before it. During last Semana Santa, or Holy Week, the municipality of Madrid voted 35,000 francs to defray the expenses of image processions.

In times of drought images are carried into the fields, and implored to send rain. They know not that it is written: "He giveth you the former rain in just measure, and he causeth to come down for you the rain" (Joel ii. 23).

Civil wars, droughts, inundations, blasting, and mildew; the caterpillar and locust, earthquakes, fearful storms, and "the sword of the Lord, even pestilence" have stricken the land, the last-mentioned striking down over 100,000 persons with death—"Yet the people hath not turned unto Him that smote them, neither have they sought the Lord of hosts" (Isa. ix. 13); "Why will ye be still stricken that ye revolt more and more?" (Isa. i. 5).

But as in the days of old, the Lord has still a remnant. They are the little leaven amid millions of idolaters, and are blessed of God in their labours. The Bible steadily finds acceptance; many cast their idols to the moles and to the bats, and those in this land, who have so long and faithfully striven to make known the Gospel of Jesus in Spain, may thank God and take courage for what He hath wrought.

A SONG AND A SOUL.

AN INCIDENT OF GOSPEL WORK.

Full sweetly on the evening air
Rang out the well-known strains,
"There is a fountain filled with blood
Drawn from Immanuel's veins,
And sinners, plunged beneath that flood,
Lose all their guilty stains."

Thus sang a little company,
Whose hearts by grace renewed,
Had gathered in an upper room
To tell their gratitude
To Him, by whose atoning love
Their sins had been subdued.

A weary man who passed that way,
Bowed down with weight of sin,
Who long had asked how such as he
Relief and rest might win,
Heard the glad sound, so sweet, so clear,
Amid the city's din.

"'The dying thief rejoiced to see
That fountain in his day,
And there may I'—O what is this,
A thief, a thief, they say?
'And there may I, though vile as he,
Wash all my sins away.'"

As thus he speaks, the room he finds,
And, e'er in prayer they bow,
He cries: "Oh, friends, for me so lost,
Plead you for mercy now."
They bid him pray; "Alas," he says,
"To pray, I know not how."

But, taught by loving lips the way,
He learns to pray at last,
And on the Saviour of the lost,
His weight of guilt to cast;
As from his contrite heart goes up
The prayer of ages past:—

"O God, be merciful to me:
A sinner, Lord, am I;
In my despair and helplessness,
To Thee, my God, I cry.
Lost, helpless, ruined, hear my prayer,
Lord, save me, or I die."

The God who heard the publican,
Heard this heart's honest prayer,
And he who came, a child of wrath,
In sorrow and despair,
Went forth a free and happy man,
And God's own child and heir.

O ye who have the art of song,
The talent ye possess
Ye well may consecrate to God;
How would you dare do less?
If used for Him, oh! who can say
How greatly He may bless?

OPEN-AIR MEETING.—After the ordinary Sunday morning service in the different churches of St. Agrève and St. Voy, July 25, about 3000 persons gathered together in the Sayères Wood, where 140 years ago their ancestors, the persecuted Huguenots, assembled to worship God. Seven pastors and evangelists spoke of the glorious, though suffering past, and the present comparative religious liberty, at the same time emphasising the necessity of the new birth.—Le Christianisme.

A GOSPEL TENT MISSION.—Mr. John Wooldridge is now holding daily tent services at Leytonstone-road, East London. On Bank Holiday a tea was given to a number of poor people and afterwards a service was held near the Leytonstone road. A good number gathered round the speakers, while others listened at a distance. The meeting was transferred to the tent, which was filled with an attentive audience. Various speakers gave earnest Gospel invitations, Mr. Wooldridge and other friends singing solos; and at the close four men gave themselves to the Saviour. Mr. Wooldridge wishes to give free teas to some of the poorest, and any friends desirous of helping in this work may address Mr. John Wooldridge, 19, Grove-road, Mile-end, E. Personal help is also needed, as several of the workers has been "taken home" during the past two years. B. B.

THE AGAPEMONE.

Many very estimable people seem to be drifting into chaos as regards their religious views; and, as views and doctrines find their inevitable outcome in practice, we may expect some deplorable results in the near future.

The crazy fanaticism of Mrs. Girling was only likely to attract the ignorant, but cultured people are caught in snares more subtly prepared for them. We have before us a printed letter, which is an endeavour to rehabilitate the exploded delusion (not to use a stronger word) of the Agapemone.

This letter is a glorification of "Brother Prince," of whom it is said that "those most intimately associated with him for the last forty years, and who have seen him under the most trying circumstances possible, bear testimony to their never for one moment having seen anything save the holy and lowly Spirit of Jesus in him." Another letter is quoted, which says, "O how good it is to hear a sentence from his lips, to catch a glance from his eye! It is a reflected ray of the light, the life, and the love of Him from whom it emanates. O, my beloved brother, what must our dear Lord be?" "It is, indeed, a joy and privilege to be in the presence of one who is thus truly filled with the spirit of Christ; in whom not the slightest trace of any other spirit is ever seen. . . . It is not properly a question of what Brother Prince has done, for he is nothing; but of what Jesus, in his sovereign grace and pleasure, has done in and through him, by the fulness of the Holy Ghost."

The effect of such praise as this of a man must inevitably tend to take the gaze off the Lord Jesus, and to fix it on the man. How totally unlike is that flattery of the creature to anything that prophets, Apostles, or evangelists ever wrote.

It is not surprising to find that fundamental doctrinal error should result from such vain pretensions. The italics in the following quotation are ours:—

> So now the Lord Jesus had possession of one who had been enabled by grace so wholly to live in the Spirit, and so utterly to die unto self and the world, that there had been fulfilled in him, by that Spirit, all that the Gospel had been appointed to do in man. He consequently became, in the will of Christ, his chosen witness to the passing away of the Gospel dispensation!

Whatever this may mean, it is folly or blasphemy—perhaps both.

Forty years ago, Mr. Prince's brother-in-law and fellow-student at Lampeter College, published a narrative entitled, "The Rise and Progress of the Heresy of Rev. H. J. Prince. By Arthur Augustus Rees, minister of Bethesda Free Chapel, Sunderland." Mr. Rees was called to his rest only two years ago, but permission has been given us to reprint this important narrative at any time, if necessary, and, now that Satan as an angel of light is drawing away some very earnest souls, we think the necessity has arisen, and Mr. Rees's narrative will be given in our next. The following is the preface, which shows the tender and wounded spirit in which the narrative is written:—

PREFACE.

> My sole object in writing the following narrative is, first, to alleviate as much as possible the grief of those of the Lord's people who are personally acquainted with Mr. Prince, and who cannot but feel deeply afflicted at the fall of one they formerly so justly loved and admired.
> Secondly, to check the taunts of those who, retaining the form, but denying the power, of godliness, are ever on the look out to defend themselves in their carnal security behind the lapses of the poor and erring children of God.
> Thus they are likely to argue with respect to Mr. Prince. Here is one notorious for his pretensions to eminent holiness; but see the result! To aim after superior sanctity, and to set up a peculiarly high standard of piety is a dangerous thing; therefore, in order to be safe, we will abide where we are, and henceforth frown on all who are singular and conspicuous in religion.
> Thirdly, to repress the triumphs of the profane, who will not fail to be elated and strengthened in their impenitence, when they hear of the extravagancies of one so devoted as Mr. Prince, and witness the emptiness of his terrible denunciations. Instead, however, of triumphing in his fall, they should tremble at the reflection that, "if the righteous scarcely be saved, where shall the ungodly and the sinner appear?"
> My heart is ready to bleed when I think of the lapse of this dear brother; and often have I secretly applied to him the doleful words of Isaiah: "How art thou fallen from heaven, O Lucifer, son of the morning!"
> O quam mutatus ab illo!

STUDENTS AT MOUNT HERMON.

(FROM OUR SPECIAL REPORTER.)

This Summer School for Bible study is drawing very near its close, as these lines are being written, but its effects will by no means cease when the last meeting has been held, and the 250 students have scattered to their homes. A little conversation with the college "boys" shows that it has been a great event in their lives, and they mean to make the most of it. One says he is to set aside the next six weeks to the amplification of his numerous notes and to meditation on them. Another will devote the month of September to the like object; and these, I suppose, are but indications of the general feeling. I have been much interested in meeting with a sturdy young fellow of Scotch birth, whose father now owns a farm in the State of New York. This young man felt the call to a higher ministry than that of the plough and the reaper, and he is educating himself with the view to become a preacher of the Gospel. He works on his father's farm in vacation times, and thus earns money enough to support himself and pay his fees during the winter sessions. This is the first real vacation he has had since he began his studies, and great has been his enjoyment of it.

In the course of the school, Mr. Moody has taken his large class through the Gospel by Matthew. One or two chapters are read and studied each day. At the leading assembly of the day Mr. Moody cross-examines the students on the contents of the chapter, now and then returning to the beginning of the book and rapidly reviewing the whole. His aim is to induce the systematic reading of the Word of God, and memorising its leading facts and doctrines, so as to be able to "locate" any of these when occasion arises. He most rigorously keeps abreast of this study himself, so that he can check the correctness of the answers and supply omissions. With so many things to attend to it is wonderful how he is able to find the time for all, but he does it nevertheless.

Every speaker on these heights has his own peculiar charm. Dr. Brookes finds favour with the "boys" because of his thorough-going beliefs and his unflinching defence of the faith. Dr. Pierson's encyclopædic knowledge, and his brilliant presentation of facts and figures, make him a great favourite. The distinguishing characteristics of Dr. Gordon are the gentle gracious presence of the man, his unction and deep spirituality of thought. His addresses are not argumentative, but they are convincing by their felt adaptation to the highest needs of the soul, and the comfort they bring. I have stated that Dr. Gordon's was the first voice to which I listened on reaching Mount Hermon last Sunday morning. He spoke on "the threefold appearing of Jesus Christ" as the Great High Priest of his people. Aaron, the High Priest, said the Doctor, was a type of Christ, and we read that in his priestly work he appeared three times: first, at the altar; second, before God in the Holy of Holies; and thirdly, outside the curtain when his intercessory function was complete: which things were a picture of the High Priesthood of Christ.

First, He appeared to take away sin by the sacrifice of Himself. He was no unwilling victim; He was a volunteer. A French sceptic once said: "My permission was not asked whether or not I should come into the world; if it had been I should have declined, considering the misery and suffering I see around me." It was not so with our Lord. When the Father said, "Whom shall I send?" the Son willingly, and without restraint, replied, "Here am I, send me." From the cradle to the grave He never faltered. He was a son, and he learned obedience by the things He suffered. The deepest question ever asked is this: "How can God be just, and the justifier of the ungodly?" Jesus Christ alone could answer that question, because He only could satisfy the perfect righteousness of God. God is just as well as merciful, and justice knows no such word as forgiveness. Who ever heard of mathematics or the multiplication table pardoning a man? They are inexorable. Jesus, by his perfect life and atoning death, blotted out the handwriting of ordinances—nailing them to his cross.

Secondly, he has gone into heaven, there to appear in the presence of God for us. He is still carrying out the work begun on the cross. Having on earth completed our justification, He sent down the Comforter to sanctify his redeemed people, while He appears before God on their behalf with their names written on his breast and his wounds pleading their cause. When his purposes in this dispensation of the Spirit are completed He will again appear without sin unto salvation. In closing, the Doctor made a solemn appeal to all that they should be ready for this third and last appearing, so that while others are taken they should not be left.

DR. GORDON'S CLOSING ADDRESS

was on "The Holy Spirit." Justification and sanctification, he said, are two parts of one great Divine transaction. Sanctification means a consecration, or setting apart. Aaron, the high priest, was sprinkled with the blood of the slain lamb to symbolise cleansing from sin, and then with the oil to signify consecration to the service of God. Every true believer is a priest unto God, and needs to be anointed with the consecrating oil of the Holy Ghost. See how Jesus Himself, our Great High Priest, was dependent on the working of the Holy Ghost. First He was begotten of the Holy Ghost. Then He was baptized with the Spirit at Jordan. He is our exemplar and model in all things. In many parts of the Acts of the Apostles, we read of them receiving the Holy Ghost, after they were regenerated and justified. It is described as the baptism, the healing, the anointing, and the filling of the Holy Ghost. How may we become possessed of this gift of the Spirit? By faith and prayer. We read that it was when Jesus was praying that the Spirit descended on Him as a dove. It came on the disciples at Pentecost as fire, to symbolise its cleansing and purifying power; there was no need of this cleansing in the case of Jesus, so the Spirit came upon Him as a dove, the symbol of purity and gentleness.

We read that the disciples were filled with the Holy Ghost. If we are thus filled, all thoughts and desires with respect to self will be expelled, and we shall be delivered from the constraints of a sinful life. Then we shall be led by the Spirit. We shall get our orders direct from God every day so certainly as a servant gets instructions from his master. Let us be in such communion with our Heavenly Father that we can easily find out what He wants us to do.

If we have this baptism we shall also be empowered by the Holy Ghost. We shall not work in the energy of the flesh, or the power of intellect, but in the might given to us by God, the Holy Ghost. Then we shall accomplish that which would be impossible to us through our own unaided strength.

MR. MOODY ANSWERS QUESTIONS.

These young intellects on Mount Hermon's hill are very keen, and very inquisitive. If there is any point they do not quite grasp they are not slow to send up questions. Mr. Moody by no means discourages this; he rather invites it. It is not given to every public speaker to be able to answer a pile of questions right away, but Mr. Moody seems to revel in it. He is almost at his best when in the witness-box, replying to the cross-examinations of these young fellows, and many of his best and sharpest sayings are thus elicited. No need (he said, in response to these queries) to stop your work in order to wait for this enduement of power; but do not be satisfied till you get it; let it be the cry of your heart day and night. I remember a friend in England who got stirred up on this subject. He had not had much blessing in his ministry. He made up his mind that he would have this gift of the Holy Ghost. He shut himself up with God, and when he came out his face literally shone. The first time I heard him speak I don't think there was a dry eye in the meeting. It was not so much what he said, but the way he said it. It got noised about that he had been wonderfully blessed, many people were attracted to his church on the next Sunday, and within a month not only every seat but the aisles of the building were crowded. Wherever he went, God gave him souls; I suppose more were blessed under his ministry within six months than during the twelve years before. Young men, you will get this blessing when you seek it above all else. There will be no trouble about knowing when you have got it. You will soon find out if the audience are interested in what you are saying, and if you are having any fruit. I would advise you to keep short accounts with God. If you think you have grieved the Spirit, go to God and find it out and get restored. As the Spirit always testifies of Christ, so a man filled with the Spirit will exalt Christ; he will not be talking much about himself. Sometimes it is a very fine line that separates the leading of the Spirit from the promptings of our own feelings and emotions; we must, therefore, keep ourselves well acquainted with God's Word, so as to be guided by its principles in any particular course. Be careful in choosing the time and place when you speak to individuals about spiritual things; great harm is sometimes done by speaking at the wrong time. If you are guided by the Spirit you will know how to act. Remember that you can draw people, but you cannot drive them. It takes much wisdom to win men to the Saviour. We should not have to wait long for this baptism of the Spirit, if we did not have to come to the end of ourselves; sometimes that is a long road. If God were to endue us with power when we are full of conceit, we should become as vain as peacocks, and there would be no living near us.

A STRIKING REMINISCENCE.

Mr. Moody proceeded to tell some of his own experience, a thing that he is not greatly given to, but it seemed specially appropriate when addressing so many young men. This blessing came upon me, he said, suddenly—like a flash of lightning. For months I had been hungering and thirsting for power in service. I had come to that point that I think I would have died if I had not got it. I remember I was walking the streets of New York. I had no more heart in the business I was about than if I had not belonged to this world at all. Right there on the street the power of God seemed to come upon me. I was filled with a sense of God's goodness, and felt as though I could take the whole world to my heart. I took the old sermon that I had preached before without any power: it was the same old truth, but there was a new power. Many were impressed and converted. This happened years after I was converted myself. It was in the fall of 1871. I had been very anxious to have a large Sunday-school and a large congregation, but there were few conversions. I remember I used to take a pride in having the largest congregation in Chicago on a Sunday night. Two godly women used to come and hear me. One of them came to me one night after I had preached very satisfactorily, as I thought. I fancied she was going to congratulate me on my success, but she said, "We are praying for you." I wondered if I had made some blunder that they talked in that way. Next Sunday night they were there again, evidently in prayer while I was preaching. One of them said, "we are still praying for you." I could not understand it, and said, "Praying for me! Why don't you pray for the people? I am all right." "Ah," they said, "you are not all right. You have not got power; there is something lacking, but God can qualify you." I did not like it at first, but I got thinking it over, and after a little time I began to feel a desire to have what they were praying for. They continued to pray for me, and the result was that at the end of three months God sent this blessing on me. I want to tell you this. I would not for the whole world go back to where I was before 1871. Since then I have never lost the assurance that I am walking in communion with God, and I have a joy in his service that sustains me and makes it easy work. I believe I was an older man then than I am now; I have been growing younger ever since. I used to be very tired when preaching three times a week, now I can preach five times a day and never get tired at all. I have done three times the work I did before, and it gets better and better every year. It is so easy to do a thing when love prompts you. It would be better, it seems to me, to go and break stones than to take to preaching in a professional spirit.

Of course there are degrees in this power; I wish I had ten times as much as I have. The more a man has the more he wants. There are, of course, differences in the capacity to receive it, but our capacity grows larger by reception and use of the power we have. One danger is that many are looking for the experience of other men; that is a great mistake. No two men were ever converted, or endued with power in the same way. There is no gift that you can possess to be compared with this gift of power for service. Let us seek, and let none of us be satisfied till we get it. A man can accomplish more in one year with this power than he can do in forty years without it. Jonathan Edwards said he was enabled to do more in Northampton in one week than he did in seven years before the Spirit of God came upon him for service.

Culture is all very well, but it is like high cultivation of the land; you may plough and harrow it all the time, but unless you put in the seed it will produce nothing. There are so many workers who are fishing all night without catching anything. They let down the net, but they never draw it up to see if they have got any fish. Since 1871 I have had no difficulties with the Bible. I heard a minister once say that a man came to him with a lot of questions about the Bible, and said: "If you can answer them I will become a Christian?" The reply was, "You are beginning at the wrong end; accept Christ first, and then we will see to the questions." He received Christ, and after a little while the minister said: "Now let me have your questions." He looked at them again, and found they were all answered; the difficulties had all disappeared.

At the request of some friend in the audience Dr. Gordon also told, though with reluctance, how he had received a baptism of the Spirit at one period of his ministry, and how the Lord blessed his labours afterwards. If my memory serves me right, I reported the details from Northfield last year (see No. 816, Sept. 17).

In answer to other questions sent up, Mr. Moody urged the young fellows who were wanting light as to their future course not to take counsel with man, but to wait upon God for direction. Without exaggeration at least 1000 young men had come to ask his advice about going into the ministry, but he always declined to give advice. Let all such go to work where they are, in the Sunday-school, or tract distribution, or cottage meetings, or wherever they had the opportunity, and they would soon find out if they had a call to the Gospel ministry. If they were enabled to win souls in the lower sphere, that was a pretty good sign that God would have them give their lives to such work. Their power to lead others would come with success in winning men's hearts to God, and to themselves. It was hard work for a man to manage a church if he had been there a good while, and no one had been converted through his ministry; he greatly pitied such men. The pulpit stands higher than the throne; no true and successful minister of the Gospel would change places with the greatest potentate on earth. When he was converted he thought that was the greatest joy he could experience, but he learned that a greater joy still came from leading others to the Saviour. The Christian has a three-fold joy: first, that of his own salvation; next, the salvation of others; and, better still, the joy of seeing one's spiritual children walking in the faith, and being used in God's service.

CONSECRATION MEETINGS.

So great was the interest excited by the running fire of questions and answers, that the lapse of time seemed to be forgotten by speaker and hearers alike, and it was nearly half an hour beyond time when this service broke up. Before closing, Mr. Moody said a desire had been expressed by some that an opportunity should be given for definite consecration and prayer for the baptism of the Spirit for life and service. The matter rested with themselves; if a number of them desired, a meeting for this purpose would be arranged. It will not be out of order to forestall the order of events and state here how this thought developed. The desire grew and spread, so that Mr. Moody fixed six o'clock on the Thursday morning for the consecration meeting. The early hour, he said, would put the reality of their feeling to the test. No hour seems to be too early for the evangelist himself; though he had to drive from Northfield, between three and four miles distant, he was at the meeting place here before the time appointed. One of the rooms of the Recitation Hall was crowded with some one hundred and fifty young men, and a most solemn hour it was. Confessions of failure and aspirations after the enduement with power came from many in subdued and faltering accents, and no one could help feeling that God was present, and that a rich blessing was in store. These early meetings were continued on the three remaining days of the session, and were seasons of great and manifest spiritual experience. On the last morning, the time was largely taken up with short expressions of thanksgiving to God for the revelation of self, and of Himself; for a deeper insight into the teachings of the Word, and a clearer realisation of the power of prayer; and for the gift of the Holy Ghost as shown in willingness to be laid on the altar of service, and to obey the call of God whithersoever that call might lead.

With such an embarrassment of spiritual riches crowded into every day, it is very difficult to know where to draw the boundary line. The young fellows here who watch me taking notes are often anxious to know if I am to give this or that address in full; to judge from their appetites for evangelical and stimulating speech, one cannot but conclude that they are not overdosed with it, either in their seminaries or from the pulpit. I am glad, as I close this letter, to be reminded by Dr. Pierson that these remarkable meetings with the college boys are something like the first-fruits of the circular letter on world-wide evangelisation put forth from last Northfield Convention, and an answer to the prayers then presented.

M. COILLARD'S ZAMBESI MISSION.

Dear Sir,—Let me cordially thank you for the notice you have taken from time to time of our Zambesi Mission. So long as we had not reached our destination, I hesitated to intrude upon your time and space. But it may be that some direct news from this distant corner of the mission field would interest your readers and those who follow us with prayerful interest, but who do not read our French monthly, Le Journal des Missions.

You are perhaps aware that we crossed the great river in August. But owing to the disturbed state of the country, we found it impossible to proceed to the Valley. As our tents were rotten or burnt by the sun, we had to put up some shelters for the rainy season. In a few weeks we had three rooms with a roof over our heads, all made of reeds and grass and poles. Our delay gave us the opportunity of giving a helping-hand to Mons. Jeanmairet, who is to stay at Sesheke.

Another revolution has brought back to power the expelled King Lewanika, but not without bloody battles. Most of the leaders of the first revolution perished in the fight; those who escaped were pursued and put to death. There was no mercy, not even for those who gave themselves up, and implored the King's pardon. Even now the vengeance of Lewanika is not satisfied. He has sworn to spare no one belonging to the families of the rebels. Fearful atrocities have been committed upon women and little children. One's heart aches at the tales of woe, at the sense of danger, and the terror that overshadows the land. Everyone looks with suspicion at his neighbour.

I say nothing of the stealing going on in broad daylight. The slaves steal for their chiefs, therefore there is no justice, no redress. We have suffered much of this awful state of affairs. Our cattle were stabbed openly, our own clothes carried off almost before our eyes. We see them occasionally on the backs of some petty chiefs. But what can we do? This piecemeal looting, a trial of every day, is most difficult to accept meekly. Ask for us such a measure of grace that we shall be able to submit gladly, for our Master's sake, to the spoiling of our goods. One thing is certain, we shall never lack what is absolutely necessary. The Lord shall provide. No one goes to war at his own expense. All this convinces us more and more that we have come to the right place to preach the Gospel of love and peace.

The King, since his return, was most anxious to see me. After many delays and annoyances, I was able to start on March 6 for the capital, and returned on April 17. The Lord blessed and prospered my journey. I had many opportunities to preach the Gospel in the several villages which we passed; my own boatmen, ten in number, seemed also to take some interest in religious things. Every evening I would sit with them by the fire, teach them some Gospel hymns, and speak to them of Jesus. No one can form an idea of the intense darkness of those minds. It makes one sad to see them laughing at the notion one tries to give them of sin and repentance. But the Spirit of the Lord shall work, and there also light shall dawn.

The King and the Queen, his sister, received me warmly. The King, especially, made many inquiries about the Gospel. The only notion he seemed to have of it is that it condemns polygamy and his raids in the Mushikulumboe's country. The ten commandments struck him very much. As the Barotsi keep the feast of the new moon, he understood the keeping of the Lord's day, and on Friday evening made a proclamation, through his public crier, to the effect that the next day they had to prepare, as on the day following, being the Lord's day, no one would be allowed to grind, to travel, or to work. We chose a spot for our mission station which gives us some guarantee of healthiness. He has had already the road through the forest cleared for us, and ordered the chiefs of Sesheke to give me seventeen bullocks, which I am afraid I shall never receive, owing to the destruction of cattle that has taken place.

Do not think, however, that we build upon these good dispositions of Lewanika. He is fearfully superstitious and self-willed, as all tyrants. If ever his disposition change, we may expect hard times and tribulations. Whatever may be his motives in receiving us in his country, we are thankful to the Lord to have opened such a wide door before us. We shall enter and push on, trusting in Him and leaning upon Him. He will never fail us.

Let Christians in England, interested in the evangelisation of the Dark Continent, remember us. We need their help and co-operation.

A STORY OF MR. HAMMOND'S MISSIONS.

At the close of one of Mr. Hammond's services for children, many stayed behind to listen to the singing of the choir, and others, who for the first time had felt anxious about such matters, wished to hear more of that "Old, old story."

Here and there a teacher was surrounded by a group of boys and girls, telling them of the love of Jesus, whilst Mr. Hammond moved about giving exhortation and encouragement here and there. Scores of little kneeling figures might also be seen thanking the Lord, in their simple language, for his great love to them. And many a happy face told of the peace and joy which came to them in those hallowed hours.

I with others was seeking for anxious little ones to whom I might give help and encouragement, when my attention was attracted to a little boy on one of the benches, evidently wishing that some one would come and speak to him. I sat down by his side, and after a few remarks on what the preacher had been saying, inquired, "Do you love this loving Jesus?"

"No, sir," came the answer, sadly enough. Then, as simply and lovingly as I could, I told him all the story of his need of a Saviour and of God's wonderful plan of meeting that need, by sending his own dear Son Jesus to take the sinner's place and bear the sinner's punishment. He listened very eagerly and attentively, and when I had finished sat very thoughtful and still.

"Now," I said, "don't you think that not to love that One who did so much for you is very wrong and displeasing to God?"

He said he felt it was, and thought he should like to love Him. I said, "Let us tell Him so," and we knelt down together. When we arose from our knees, I quoted a verse or two of Scripture, such as "Him that cometh to Me I will in no wise cast out," and after a few words of advice and counsel, bade him good night.

Some evenings later I saw him again, and asked, "Well, my boy, how is it with you? Do you think that the Lord heard and answered your little prayer on Monday?" "I am sure He did, sir." "Well, I am glad to hear you say that, but what reason have you for thinking so?"

He answered eagerly, "I'll tell you, sir. I have a little sister Florrie at home. Every day, at dinner time, when I come home from school, I have to clean the knives and forks for dinner." "Yes," I said, wondering what all this had to do with my question. "And," he continued, "it's pretty hard work, sir. Sometimes I get very tired and ask Florrie to help me, but she's very unkind at times, and will never lend me a hand. Last Monday evening, sir, after I found Jesus, I felt very happy, and when I woke up on Tuesday morning I thought that, as you told me to pray to Him for everything I needed, I would just tell Him about the knives and forks, and ask Him to put it into Florrie's heart to help me that day with them." "Yes," I said, "and did He?" "That morning, sir, after I came from school I felt very tired, but I began cleaning the knives, and wondered whether my prayer would be answered; when soon Florrie came up and threw her arms round my neck, and said, 'Can I help you to-day, Horace, dear?' I was so glad to think my prayer was answered, and now, sir, I take everything to Him, and I feel so happy, and I am sure He heard my prayer last Monday night and took my sins away."

And indeed he looked happy, and seemed full of childish faith and joy.

Some nights afterwards I saw my little friend coming quickly towards me, leading by the hand a little girl, who, from the resemblance to her brother, I at once knew to be Florrie. Indeed, as though to remove any doubt I might have felt, he at once said, "This is Florrie, sir." "Ah," I said, "and are you the little girl who helps her brother to clean the knives and forks now?" "Yes," she said, "and, oh, sir, I am very happy, for I have found the loving Saviour." And then they talked much to me, in their own childlike simple way, of all the joy they found in their new Friend, and when at last I had to suggest that their mother might be getting anxious if they stayed much longer, with bright, beaming, holy faces, they bade me "good night," and simply taking hold of each other's hands they left the hall.

* * * * *

I have often thought of these two dear children since, but little Horace and Florrie P—— are but two of many of those young ones who at those happy meetings learnt to sing—

"I've found a friend in Jesus,
He's everything to me."

BIBLE STUDIES.—26.

JONAH REBELLIOUS.

Jonah i.

vv. 1, 2.—God's servants must not question his messages, and may not choose their own errands. Their spirit should be "Thy servants are ready to do whatsoever my lord the King shall appoint" (2 Sam. xv. 15). "I can do all things through Christ which strengtheneth me" (Phil. iv. 10).

v. 3.—Disobedience makes men fear God's presence. Compare Gen. iii. 8. "Adam and his wife hid themselves from the presence of the Lord God." But "whither shall I flee from thy presence? . . . If I take the wings of the morning, and dwell in the uttermost parts of the sea; even there shall thy hand lead me, and thy right hand shall hold me" (Ps. cxxxix. 7—10).

v. 4.—"Stormy wind fulfilling his word" (Ps. cxlviii. 8). When we will not listen to his voice in gentle tones, He has to overtake us with louder accents. The sheep must keep close to the Shepherd to hear the words of love meant for each individually.

v. 6.—Jonah could not be God's messenger of hope and comfort in the storm, because he himself was in the wrong. Contrast Paul's conduct and words of cheer (Acts xxvii. 21—26). The vessel which is to carry living water to thirsty souls must itself be clean and pure, and so made "meet for the Master's use" (2 Tim. ii. 21).

v. 8.—If Jonah had been about his Lord's work, giving his messages, the sailors would not have needed to ask him, "What is thine occupation?" As it was he had only told them what would be against his Lord (ver. 10). It is a solemn question to ask ourselves, "What impression am I giving to the world around of my King and his service?"

v. 10.—The world is quick to see failure in the lives of those who profess allegiance to Christ.

v. 12.—Jonah hears God's voice in the tempest, and is convicted of sin. This is the first step towards return.

v. 13.—Contrast, John vi. 21—"Then they willingly received Him into the ship: and immediately the ship was at the land whither they went."

v. 14.—In each chapter we see trouble driving men to prayer; here the sailors "cry unto the Lord in their trouble, and He bringeth them out of their distresses" (Ps. cvii. 28). How many can say, "Sweet affliction brought me to my Saviour's feet!"

v. 17.—Jonah sought to flee from God's presence; God cut him off from all human intercourse, and shut him up to himself. Often He is obliged to bring his people "into the wilderness," that there He may "plead with them face to face" (Ezek. xx. 35), and so lead them to know themselves, and to know Him, that they may "come up from the wilderness, leaning upon their Beloved" (Cant. viii. 5).

OBITUARY.

MADAME ANDRÉ-WALTHER.

The Christian Church has just suffered a severe loss by the death of Madame André-Walther, who breathed her last on the 6th inst., after a short illness.

The name of that gifted lady is familiar, no doubt, to most of the readers of our paper. It had long become a "household word," as much in England as in France. On terms of close friendship with the late Lord Shaftesbury, Lord Radstock, Captain Trotter, Sir Culling Eardley, and other leading representatives of evangelical Protestantism on this side of the Channel, Madame André-Walther was honoured and appreciated by all those, of whatever nationality, who take an interest in the conversion of souls, and in works of Christian philanthropy. It is not too much to say that her whole life had only one object, viz., to win sinners to the Saviour, and to do good to those whom Providence placed in her way. Her two great qualities were love and decision; and whilst she never hesitated to tell the truth to every one, and to caution those whom she found wandering from the right path, she did so with an affection, a sympathy, which were perfectly irresistible.

It would be impossible to describe the good done by Madame André-Walker at Tours, at Versailles, at Paris—in fact, wherever she resided; and at the time of the Franco-Prussian War, in 1870-1871, she devoted herself to the relief of the poor, the sick, the wounded, and the forsaken without any distinction of creed, and of party. The terrible episode of the Commune, as it taxed to the utmost our friend's Christian energy, brought out in their full beauty the qualities of firmness and goodness which distinguished her so pre-eminently above all others. To the wretched creatures driven out of Paris, and crowded together at Versailles, she gave away, without stint or reserve, her time, her means, her influence, her advice—in fact, all the treasures of a loving and generous heart.

The funeral service took place at Versailles on Sunday, the 10th inst., in the presence of her family, and an immense gathering of friends.

G. M.

She was converted (says a correspondent of The Record) through Pastor Louis Meyer's ministry. She was in the full éclat of her youth and worldly success. One day Pastor Meyer visited her. "Madame, you are suffering," said he. "Yes." "What is the cause of your pain?" "I do not know." "It is God who seeks you. He wishes to save your soul." "What must I do?" she replied; "I go to church." "You must pray, and read the Word of God on your knees." "I do not know how to do it." "You must!" Soon after she felt peace taking possession of her soul, and since that moment she gave herself up entirely, and without a minute's interruption, to the Lord. She leaves a heavy inheritance of devotion to Christ and to his cause, but her children's hands, with the help of God, are ready to accept it.

A MISSIONARY FAREWELL.—On August 18, a large missionary meeting was held in the Free High Church, Inverness, to take farewell of Mr. James G. Mackays, medical missionary, and his young wife, on their departure for Madagascar in connection with the London Missionary Society. Suitable addresses were delivered by Rev. Dr. Black, Inverness, Rev. Dr. Kennedy, Vice-President of the London Missionary Society, and others. Mr. Mackays is a native of Inverness, and was one of the most active workers in connection with the Free High Congregation. The best wishes were expressed for the success of the young missionaries in their new sphere of labour.

SOUTHEND, ESSEX.—The new mission house specially built for the work of the Christian Medical Mission, in Clarence-road, Southend, was formally opened on Friday, the 13th inst. The chair was taken at 7.30 p.m. by Bishop Gregg, D.D., who gave a short address on 2 Chron. v. 13, 14: Purity, Unity, Praise, Presence, Glory. Messrs. F. T. Gregg, B.A., Ingram, Eastwood, Tully, and Fairbairns likewise took part in the meeting, which was entirely of a dedicatory character. There was not any collection, but a sum of over £34 was voluntarily handed in by different friends to the treasurer. Since the commencement of this Mission in January, 1885, over 4000 cases have received advice and medicine, and the work is steadily increasing. All the workers, including the physician, give their services gratuitously.

BRITISH SYRIAN SCHOOLS.

It might interest and cheer some of your readers to hear of the good work that the British Syrian Schools are doing. Our ship, the Dreadnought, was at Beyrout for four days, which gave us an opportunity of seeing something of them. Personally I was not able to see anything of the schools there, at their headquarters, as taking the chance that offered to visit Damascus left no spare time. But I have been told that it would have done every Christian's heart good to hear the children singing hymns and repeating passages of Scripture. One little chap, standing, and reciting in English, with great feeling, "Hurrah, for Merry England," was most inspiriting. At Damascus, however, I can testify that to turn in from the dirty, squalid streets, to find well-ordered rooms, with desks, blackboards, &c., was a most pleasant surprise. Little girls, the daughters of Christians, Jews, and Mahommedans, all working together—one class writing, another, of quiet little dots, sewing—all getting good wholesome schooling, with the Bible at the head of everything. There was a spirit of cheerful happiness about the whole place; it spoke more than any words could, as to how Christian love and gentleness win the children; to see that when they were told that the visitors were English, they quite looked on us as friends at once (there are only about a dozen Europeans in the place of 150,000 inhabitants). They sang, and sat down to answer questions, but, unfortunately, none of us had courage to ask them any, being unused to children. But they looked sharp enough, and the teaching is earnest and true, for in telling us how the children know their Bibles, the opportunity was not lost of putting the Gospel more or less before us. Last school year showed an attendance of 6,545. The Jesuits set up rival schools, and are very strong and rich.

This is no account of the work, as there are Bible-women, Scripture-readers, Blind Schools, &c., that I know nothing of, but I am certain that those who are not well acquainted with the "British Syrian Schools" would be as surprised as I was at their extent, and would see that it is a real and good work. At Smyrna, where we have since been, Miss Grimston's Sailors' Home is a bright spot. Passing by we saw a notice of a meeting every evening at seven o'clock. I went, and found about thirty merchant seamen, all listening to the telling out of God's love to them most attentively. Looking at all the cafés round, and considering that these men don't often get ashore, makes it appear wonderful that they turn up at all. I heard of one man who had given his heart to the Lord the night before, and that the work goes on steadily. There were some bright testimonies given, and we had a very happy evening. Miss Grimston has another Home at Constantinople; it is splendid to hear that the captains of many of the ships will give the sailors leave to land in the boat belonging to the Rest, to go to it, while not allowing any other leave. One can only conclude it is because they have found by experience it is good for the men to have been there. The Lord's work spans the world—here a little, and there a little. May we raise up our hearts in thankfulness to God, and take courage to press on wherever we may be.

MALDON, ESSEX.—Two years ago Rev. Sholto Douglas, of All Souls', London, held a mission at Great Potham and Heybridge with great success. Lady de Crespigny, who conducted a mothers' meeting weekly, saw the need of a hall for evangelistic services, and has had one erected at her own expense. The opening service was held on August 2—preceded by a free tea—by Rev. Sholto Douglas, who gave an earnest and interesting address. The hall was crowded; amongst those present were many from Maldon and Heybridge. An evangelist, who was a worker under Mr. Douglas, has been engaged to carry on the work.

ALEXANDRIA & GIBRALTAR TOILERS

The writer was recently detained in Gibraltar for a few days, en route from Tangier (where he is seeking to make known the glad tidings to the Moors and Berbers of "dark Morocco"), to England, for a little needed rest. From an incident or two of his stay there he gathered fresh assurance that sowing beside all waters is not in vain, but that truly "He that goeth forth and weepeth, bearing precious seed, shall doubtles come again with rejoicing, bringing his sheave with him." This encouragement he would share with the readers of The Christian, and with the dear Alexandrian seed-sower, should these lines meet his eye.

I was slowly walking along the main street of Gibraltar in the short twilight, looking out for an opportunity of recommending the precious Saviour to some one, when I observed a fine, stalwart red-coat, looking intently upon an open Bible in the window of the Bible Depôt. Something like the following conversation followed.

I said, "That is the best of books you're looking at. It shows us God's way of salvation."

"Yes, I know that. Thank God, I'm saved! I was just reading how they put the crown of thorns on his brow."

"I'm so glad to know you are saved, and to take you by the hand as a brother in the Lord Jesus. How long have you known Him?"

"Not long, sir. Last December I was as bad as could well be. Our regiment (the Royal West Kent) was in Egypt. We had rough times, I tell you, sir, and in plenty of danger. But I had a godly comrade, and it was through him I began to think of better things. I began to pray, and to look to Christ to save me. I was very ignorant. But I tell you, sir, one night, on the eve of the battle of ——, I found myself without any fear of death. But I did not get into the full light until our regiment went down to Ramleh, near Alexandria, and I have reason to bless God for ever for taking me there, and putting me in the way of meeting Mr. E——. Do you know him, sir?"

"No, my dear brother. I don't know him; tell me about him."

"Well, sir, he's one that has given up everything to the Lord. He is in a bank at Alexandria. He works hard there all day. Then he takes the train to Ramleh, where he lives. Every night in the week he opens his house to the soldiers, and has a service with them. Many a man has been blessed there, sir, besides me. Another thing I learned was that the Lord Jesus was coming again. I'm longing for that."

This conversation occurred as we walked to my lodgings, where, with other friends, we spoke together, and praised God for his grace to this man. He told me of another witness for Christ in his regiment; of how brightly he let his light shine; of how, when at prayer, they were persecuted in the barrack-room, boots being "shied" at them, and blankets and forms piled on them.

I afterwards met one of another regiment who, at Ramleh, was just on the verge of suicide, because of the hardships in Egypt, and disappointment that his friends had not bought his discharge as he had hoped. But through this same Mr. E—— he was deterred and saved.

Miss Aimers, of the Soldiers' Home, Europa-road, Gibraltar, is doing precious and successful work. Many have been brought to Christ. The Colonel of our regiment bore testimony to the marked improvement in the conduct of the men. A deep sorrow has fallen on this Mission in the recent sudden death of Miss Archibald, who had, but a short time before, joined Miss Aimers in her labours of faith and love.

We missed our dear brother, Mr. George Holmes, whose post is at the Soldiers' Institute, another Gospel agency on "the rock." He is now resting in England for a little.

Let God's people remember that faithful brother at Ramleh and these toilers in Gibraltar.

AN "EXETER HALL" FOR YOUNG WOMEN.

In May last we stated that steps had been taken to secure some very commodious and extensive "club" premises at the back of the popular Wellbeck Restaurant for young women. These comprise three large halls and several smaller rooms on the ground floor, besides three floors of offices and bedrooms. They are now undergoing needful repairs and alterations, which, when completed, will make them the very perfection of central head-quarters, not only for members of the London and provincial branches of the Y.W.C.A., but also for those of any branch throughout the world, who may find themselves in our great and perilous city.

In addition to the ordinary features of the Association's work, this institution will embrace a Servants' Home, a Business Employment Agency, and an enlargement of the already self-supporting Restaurant. In fact, the two latter have been in operation to a greater or less extent for some time past, and have proved such valuable adjuncts to the Christian work, as to render it certain that their development will prove an unqualified boon. The restaurant accommodation has long been inadequate to the demand during the dinner hour, whilst in the lodging department there is hardly ever a vacant bed.

In addition to the large halls for public meetings, there are also reading-rooms, class-rooms, and lavatories, and a large cloak and parcel room for the benefit of ladies shopping in the neighbourhood, which will, it is hoped, prove a source of revenue to the Association. The frontage is in Regent-street, directly facing the Polytechnic, and two other entrances are in Mortimer and Little Portland-streets. Out of the £7000 which were asked for in May, only £2000 are still required. Mr. Samuel Morley's interest in the scheme was shown in a very practical manner just before his sad illness, and his great desire is to see the institution opened free of debt. We warmly echo his wish, and trust that so important an object may be liberally sustained. The Hon. Secretary is Mr. G. L. Dashwood, Child's Bank, 1, Fleet-street, E.C.

THE GOSPEL ON RAMSGATE SANDS.

The popular services which have been held for several years by Mr. Nott and his friends, are now in full swing. A space on the wide-spread sands is the ground floor of his novel church, around the conductors' chairs and harmonium are placed seats for about 150, the sloping breakwater making a capital gallery, whilst the promenade above is thronged with our elevated audience.

An old friend of these evangelistic efforts, Mr. Wm. Hill (from the Metropolitan Tabernacle), came on the scene recently, after an absence of two or three years owing to illness, and warm were the greetings he received, and many the congratulations of his friends at his recovery. In the afternoon he spoke with his usual graphic power, holding the people for about forty minutes, as fixed as if they had been in the comfortable seats of a place of worship; again in the evening he and Mr. Bass, of Leicester, were the speakers, and were aided by plenty of good singing, the people remaining notwithstanding the rain.

Two services are held here each Lord's Day for about eight months. A noticeable feature is the mixed character of the audiences; the sturdy seaman, the humble working classes, the tradesman with his children from the great Metropolis, the well-dressed tourist, all deeply interested in the proceedings. The solo singing of Mrs. Bass is a great attraction, and a power for good at these meetings. A.

MR. RICHARD WEAVER addressed the fortnightly Gospel meeting of the employés of the L. & N. W. Railway, Liverpool-road, Manchester, on August 16. He spoke on the text, "To me to live is Christ, and to die is gain," and gave some experiences of his early life. E. H. L.

RESCUE SOCIETY.

There has been a considerable increase in the number of young women and girls brought under the care of this Society during the past year, no less than 530 having been helped, and thus given an opportunity of starting a better life. The balance-sheet is also more favourable than the two previous years, showing an increase in the funds of nearly £700. The latest report thankfully recognises the impetus given to this class of work by the revelations of the past year, and adds useful suggestions by way of furthering the objects of the Society.

To bring the rescued ones, by repentance and faith, to the Saviour, is the great aim of the Committee, who joyfully state that in a few cases these efforts have been eminently successful. One who was helped writes: "How can I ever repay you for all you have done for me? I was on the brink of ruin; the Society rescued me. Often and often have I blessed God for the Society, and for the home and friends I found there. If the girls only knew the worth and value of living for God, I think they would no longer harden their hearts."

As an instance of depravity in parents, a case is recorded of a poor girl who was driven from home through ill-treatment received from a woman who was brought home by the father, while the mother had eloped with another man. Mr. Wookey also secured the succour of two girls from Gibraltar, one of whom had fallen at the age of thirteen, and had lived an infamous life for seven years.

That parents are too often the cause of their children's ruin is abundantly shown, and also that public companies wink at their servants' sin. In some cases the poor victims have escaped from houses of ill-fame; others have gladly entered the Homes that they might be kept from continuing any longer in a course which had already brought them to the verge of an untimely grave.

The Secretary specially requests friends to assist in circulating the report, as a means of securing fresh subscribers. The testimonies borne by mistresses to the good behaviour of the servants they have selected from the Homes is interesting, and the new version of the poem, "Is it nothing to you, O Christian?" with which the report closes, is touching in a double sense, and well worth "sixpence to non-subscribers." The offices are 79, Finsbury-pavement, E.C.

RAILWAY MEN AT CROYDON.—Four years ago I organised a mission for the railway-men at East Croydon Station, and meetings were commenced in October, 1882; but soon after I opened them to all railway-men in and near Croydon. These gatherings, which commenced with Bible reading and study on Sunday afternoons, have been continued to this time, supplemented in the week by temperance and prayer-meetings, a library, and lately a work party, closing with Bible reading for the wives, and a Bible-class for railway-lads. As they are intended for all the railway men who will come to them, the work is necessarily carried on upon undenominational lines, and no meetings are held on Sundays during service, as we do not desire to draw the men from their various places of worship. That the meetings are appreciated is evident from the fact that more than 100 of the men have from time to time attended the Sunday afternoon meetings, and there is a fair average attendance, considering that many are engaged on duty. The directors of the L.B. & S.C.R. have kindly promised a piece of land, upon which we hope to erect an iron building, to serve as mission, reading, and club, rooms for all railway men in Croydon and the neighbourhood who like to join. There are nearly 300 railway men in Croydon, and probably over 200 more at stations within an easy distance, so that as the personal comfort and safety of travelling so largely depend upon the character of the employés, they are worthy of every encouragement. I shall be happy to supply further information to any interested friends.

MISSION WORK ON THE CONGO.

Mr. Joseph Clark, of the Livingstone Inland Mission, writes from Palabala Station a cheering account of God's work in the Congo Free State. He says:—"Permit me to cheer the Lord's children, who have so long prayed for the work carried on by this Mission, by telling of the Lord's working in our midst. About two months ago, at our Mukimbungu station, there were several candidates for baptism. Of these, five gave good evidence of a change of heart, and, being supported in their request by the resident missionary, they were baptized. Seven weeks afterwards two others at the same station were also baptized. We were greatly cheered at this, as some of these converts had stood faithfully by the truth amid a great deal of persecution.

Recently we have had a more widespread movement at Bauza Manteke, where our Brother Richards has laboured for about eight years. One after another has been brought in during the past twelve months, till there are now seventeen candidates for baptism.

And, to the glory of God be it told, a revival has begun within the past fortnight, and by the last report at least twenty professed conversion within that time. Mr. Richards, in his note, said, "I have no time to write—the house is full of anxious ones." He has had a visit from Brothers Harvey and Probert, but they could not stay. He, however, is in good health in spite of labours abundant, and finds great comfort and help amongst the earlier converts, especially one Lutete, who formerly was a "witch-doctor." This Lutete's wife is also converted, and lends very good help in dealing with the women, several of whom are among the converts.

Mr. Richards has just completed a translation of Luke's Gospel, and is now revising it for the press, while Mr. Harvey sends Mark's Gospel by this mail ready for printing.

All are in fairly good health, though some of our members are in want of a change. By this mail Miss Jessie Skakle, Mrs. Jos. Clark, two children, and Mr. P. Frederickson return to England pro tem. The ladies have been, say, nineteen months in the country, and both have had fairly good health. Mr. Frederickson has been five years in the field, and now takes his first rest. He and the others feel very sorry to leave, even for a time, as our work is deeply interesting and cheering; but experience leads us to decide thus for them. They hope to return in a few months.

Would the kind friends who send us The Christian please let us know their names, &c. We possibly could send them occasional notes of our work. Remember us also at the throne of grace, that we may have an outpouring of God's spirit at all our stations, and that we may each be a burning and shining light."

WORK AT PHILIPPOPOLIS.—Mrs. Mumford still maintains the schools, although the past year was one of great trial and financial embarrassment, the war having prevented the attendance of most of her pupils, who had hitherto been able to pay for their board and tuition. She writes:—"My feet are planted upon the 'Rock of Ages,' and I have no fear but the Lord, the Mighty God of Jacob, will provide." She is much encouraged by the fact that an out-station has been established by Miss Della Rolleff, a graduate of her school, in her native village, where hitherto there has been no Protestant. She teaches the women and children during the day, and the men in the evening, besides preaching the Gospel on the Sabbath. She writes: "The women and children come around me, and ask me to tell them about Jesus," and adds: "there are as many as fifty women and children who are delighted listeners to my Gospel readings and expositions. The people are very poor, and Miss Rolleff's work, being one of love, her faith is at times severely tested for the necessary means; but she is not discouraged, counting Him faithful who hath promised: "Lo, I am with you alway, even unto the end of the world." AFRICA AND AMERICA.

Rev. H. R. Traver, of Saratoga Springs, New York, whom we had the pleasure of meeting at Northfield years ago, writes thus :—

You may not be uninterested in knowing that your acquaintance at Northfield is now engaged in the work of education among the coloured people, and that The Christian is a most welcome visitor among us.

A recent tour—lecturing and preaching—through the States convinces me that there was never among the blacks a time of greater promise. There is great destitution it is true—financial, intellectual, moral, and of deep and well-founded religion—but there is great readiness to receive help and instruction.

In all the churches there are hungering souls that nothing but the Bread of Life can satisfy. Alas! that so often for a loaf they receive a stone. What a mission field for the Christians of America—Africa at our doors! He reads the signs of the times as indicated in the providential sky to but little purpose who does not see the future of Africa outlined. There is a genuine enthusiasm awaking among the youth of our schools upon the subject of missions—the development of our Father's land. "Not for ourselves, but for others," the motto upon the chapel walls of Leland, rings through all the testimony of our young men and women, and through the summer vacation they are doing valiant service as their letters indicate to us.

May it not be true that the future of America, as well as of Africa, may be intimately connected with the question of the negro in America. The solution of the problem is far from simple. All other races fuse. Shall this one confuse? Pardon the pun. Fuse it cannot. How else, in this land "of the people, can there be lasting peace?"

SCHOOL BOARD CONUNDRUMS.

Mr. Endean, at the last weekly meeting of the School Board for London, cited, as questions put to pupils in board schools, the following conundrums :—"(1) What would be now thought of crusades, trial by ordeal, and Smithfield fires? (2) How may a current of electricity be produced, and what magnetic, chemical, and mechanical effects may be brought about by means of such a current? (3) A sphere weighing 20 lbs., and having a radius of 7 in., hangs by a cord from a point in the wall, and leans against a wall. The point of contact of the sphere and wall is 2 ft. below the point of suspension. Find the length of the cord. (4) State all the conditions you know of which affect the climate of any place. (5) Why are the following pairs of words called 'doubles': example and sample, faction and fashion, diamond and adamant? (6) State precisely how you would proceed if you were required to prepare a sample of a problem and a theorem. (8) Describe the grievances which led to the Americans asserting their independence. (9) It is said that the sun never sets on the Queen's dominion. Taking a line from London eastwards, denote the points which would make this statement fairly correct. (10) Explain the terms—motion, velocity, acceleration, momentum, and energy." If such questions were really put, we venture to think the lowest abyss of dementia must have been reached by those who preside over the vagaries of our educators. No wonder Sir James Browne found the children had headaches.—Lancet.

OUT-DOOR PREACHING IN PARIS.—It has pleased God to raise up an earnest young brother as secretary of the English branch of the Y.M.C.A., to resuscitate that languishing Association. God is blessing him. Already he has surrounded himself with six young men, like-minded, and they proposed to hold open-air meetings in the city. The Prefect of Police, however, informed him that such a step is contrary to the law, but that they may hold services under a tent. My young friend is therefore anxious to obtain one, however old, or would purchase one second-hand, which a very small sum would secure. Perhaps some of your readers might be disposed to assist in this new effort to evangelise the needy population of Paris.—Yours faithfully, Geo. Pearse.

BRIGHTON TOWN MISSION.

This Mission has now been working in the narrow and crowded streets of London-by-the-Sea for thirty-six years, and its last report shows that it is vigorous and successful. Brighton and Hove are divided into districts, which are apportioned to the eleven missionaries, who work on similar lines to the London City Mission. A thoroughly evangelical Gospel is preached, and various are the methods used in different districts to further the spread of the truth. Services in mission halls, in the open air, on the beach, Sunday-schools, children's services, cottage meetings, and conversational Bible classes for adults, have all been pressed into the service. The house to house visitation has been systematic, no less than 43,102 visits being reported in 1885. The number of meetings held is also given as 1997, and of open-air services as 897, during the year. Of course, while these figures can give but little idea of the actual work accomplished, they show that the missionaries have been diligently taking the Gospel to the people. During the year ending March, 1886, the total income was £1060, and the expenses £1064. Of this amount, we are pleased to note that £982 was expended directly for the missionaries and of the remaining £82, the Disabled Missionaries' Fund received £35. Thus only £47 was diverted by rent and other incidental expenses, which sometimes take too large a proportion of a society's funds. Such a work deserves support, and visitors to Brighton who desire to aid in this work should address the hon. treasurer, Mr. E. H. Fosbery, Furze-hill-villa, Brighton.

POPERY IN VICTORIA.

Mr. John Hambleton, writing from Ballarat, says :—"The work which the Master has given me was never more needed. The ordinary forms of godliness there are in abundance, but the power thereof is lost in the universal whirl of pleasure. While Protestants have been fast asleep the enemy has been sowing tares, and settling down in the fattest places of the land, with papists in offices and government high places, till the powers that be are unable to restrain the growing lawlessness of larrikanism. The blasphemous infidelity from the lips of boys from twelve and upwards overleaps anything I ever heard in the old country. These two darknesses, in direct opposition to the true light as revealed in the Word of God, in thorough self and party interest are agreed to stamp out the Bible, and are at one against Christ, but in deadly conflict as to who shall be the greatest in political and worldly power.

The State schools give a free and good education, without the Bible. Romanists get all the children they can, and educate them into hatred against everything, both human and Divine, that is not Popery. The English Press sends out tons of novels and romantic fiction, which intoxicate the minds of young boys and girls. Every kind of excitement is provided for the people, who, if they see a text of Scripture or a Bible brought into their midst, manifest such a hatred, that you might almost hear or anticipate the cry, "Art thou come to torment us before the time?" In the midst of such an atmosphere the true servant of Christ needs to be "wise as a serpent." God has many children to be gathered out of these colonies, and I know of young men born in the colony, who have been converted, and who develop gifts of no mean order. Some are engaged in Gospel work, and are used of the Lord in winning souls to Him. The Lord has enabled us to scatter many hundreds of Bibles, Gospel books and leaflets. Mr. Stephen Menzies, of Croxteth-road, Princes-park, Liverpool, ships and forwards books to the Bible carriage.

SEAMEN'S MISSION, FOLKESTONE.—Mr. Henry Cook, of Gosport, has been visiting this town with his "Gospel-ship" Annie. This vessel has been pronounced unseaworthy for voyages, so he proposes to sell her to the above mission for a Seamen's Bethel and Home. Such a purchase would prove a great boon to the sailors and fishermen, especially during the herring season, when so many boats put in here, and the public-house is the only resort. The sum required for the Annie (£300) will go towards a new vessel for visiting the ports of England and France. Mr. Cook's visit was greatly blessed to the seamen of Folkestone.

TEMPERANCE NOTES.

The United Kingdom Alliance anniversary meetings are to be held on October 12 at Manchester.

The Revenue returns from April 1 till August 7 show a decrease in Excise receipts of £320,000 as compared with the same period last year.

At Bristol Assizes, Mr. Justice Hawkins said there were millions of men whose names would never appear in the calendars of crime were it not for drink.

The Court of Appeal has decided that where a property is held under restrictive covenants as to the liquor trade, any individual tenant may insist on their enforcement over the whole.

The Scotch parliamentary representation in the new Parliament will stand thus: In favour of Local Option, 22; for direct veto, 40; against efficient interference with the traffic, 10. Total, 72.

Sir Edward Watkin has devised a plan by means of which many employés are kept from the public-house. In connection with the South Eastern Railway there is a Savings Bank, in which the men may deposit part of their wages without having drawn the amount. Saving is thus made easy.

Sir Wilfrid Lawson has incurred the wrath of the trade by refusing (in the exercise of his magisterial discretion) some publicans an extension of hours in connection with a fair and an agricultural show. Correspondence on the subject has elicited from Sir Wilfrid a denial of the statement that he supplies intoxicants to his guests.

The Metropolitan Board of Works are deservedly severely censured for their treatment of the liquor interest in Shaftesbury-avenue, a new thoroughfare between Piccadilly-circus and Holborn. Instead of allowing the licences they have acquired to lapse, they have provided greatly increased, and unnecessary, accommodation.

In Wisconsin they have passed a law against "treating."

A Grand Lodge of Good Templars has been instituted at Reykjavik, the capital of Iceland.

The Woman's State Christian Temperance Union held a two days' camp meeting at Ocean Grove in July.

The close of the Heidelberg Festival was disgraced by what The Times calls "a general beer-swilling on a tremendous scale."

At Rio Janeiro, a town of 50,000 inhabitants, drunkenness is almost unknown, owing, it is said, to the great consumption of coffee.

Rev. J. Gelson Gregson has been compelled, by family affliction, to resign his pastoral charge at Mussoorie. This will be a heavy loss to temperance work in India.

The Revised Statutes of Ontario enact that any drink-seller furnishing any person with drink to excess, is liable up to 1000 dollars, as compensation for evil results.

The French Academy of Medicine strongly urges a large reduction in the number of licensed houses. The low-class cabarets are now poisoning their customers all over France.

Captain Lynch, who is fitting up a bar-room near Sands-street Methodist Church, Brooklyn, at a cost of over £6000, boasts that he has not tasted whisky for twenty-five years.

German, British, and American missionary societies have petitioned their respective Governments to adopt effective restrictive measures against the importation and sale of liquors in Africa.

The National Temperance Hospital, located in Chicago, is filled with patients. In no case has alcohol been used, and the death rate has been much lower than in other hospitals in the city.

The World's Women's Temperance Union petition to all civilised Governments against the traffic in drink will take five years to complete, and is expected to be the most numerously signed petition the world has seen.

The Grand Lodge of Good Templars of Norway, at their recent annual session, telegraphed a loyal message to the king. His Majesty sent a gracious reply, and expressed his wishes for the success of every effort against intemperance.

The House of Representatives at Washington had recently under consideration a bill of 363,61 dollars, extra expenditure by the Board of Visitors to the United States Naval Academy. A resolution was passed prohibiting the payment by Congress of any bill for intoxicating liquors.

In Illinois, recently, a man of fine character, apart from drink, after prayer on the matter with his wife, deliberately started for a Prohibition State, to escape the temptations of drink. He dare not bid his children good-bye, and he walked nine miles in the dark to a station before the saloons were open.

M. E. de Laveleye, the great Belgian economist complains that his Government does not make the drink trade contribute more than it does to the National Exchequer. The spirit duty in Belgium is one-fourth what it is in France, and one-fourth what it is in England, and the licence tax is trifling. In fourteen years the consumption of drink has doubled, and M. Laveleye thinks a heavier tax would favour temperance.

Notes and Comments.

OUR next issue will contain a portrait and biography of the late Admiral Sir William King-Hall, K.C.B.

Well-authenticated reports from the Worcester and Hereford hop-grounds point to there being more pickers than usual required to gather in the large crop this year. Past years have shown us the need of missionary effort there, and much was left undone. Are there not many residing in Malvern, Hereford, and other towns who, constrained by the love of Christ, can give a few days to the poor hoppers, perhaps one or two Lord's days? Are there not also many undecided where they shall go for a holiday who could find beautiful scenery and a splendid change in that district, and help in the good work at the same time? Mr. T. S. Heley, Wing, Leighton Buzzard, will be very pleased to hear from any Christians who will help as above.

A special correspondent of The Methodist Times heard Rev. Henry Ward Beecher's lecture at Exeter Hall on "The Wastes and Burdens of Society," and "yielded to the spell which the orator wielded over the thousands before him." A little exaggeration this, by the way, for the hall was by no means full. We are a little puzzled, from the quotations made, to know wherein the spell lay. We wonder that it should not have been dis-spelled by the weak and irreverent pun on the "illustration of the 'good-for-nothing,' who, remembering the Scriptural illustration to 'go to the ant,' goes off straightway to his 'aunt' and lives upon her."

We wonder more, however, at the concluding sentence in the following passage of the report:—

> The plea for relief from the bondage of subscription was pushed so far as to be practically a claim for emancipation from all dogmatic restrictions; in plain English, for full licence to preach anything and everything in the name of Christianity. No wonder that one distinguished clergyman gave unmistakable—though, of course, not audible—indications of his disapproval.

Why "of course not audible"? If the "distinguished clergyman" disapproved of a claim being made "for full licence to preach anything and everything in the name of Christianity," did he not owe it to himself and to the people to make his disapproval manifest? What are we coming to when "distinguished clergymen" and prominent Nonconformist ministers join in the vote of thanks, which "was carried with great enthusiasm," to the "great preacher" who had thus cut the ground from under them? For if there is "full licence to preach anything and everything in the name of Christianity," then the evangelical minister's occupation is gone.

"The peroration," we are told, "was very beautiful, expressing his own hopes for the future of Society, his own conviction that, through its successive stages, through its decays and reconstructions, it was gradually tending towards the realisation of an ideal far nobler than any form of it which the world had yet witnessed." In contrast with these vain hopes, for which no Scriptural foundation was claimed or sought, and which are expressly contradicted by the Lord and his Apostles in their dark pictures of the last days, we earnestly commend the study of Mr. and Mrs. Grattan Guinness's recent work, "Light for the Last Days." We do not find time to read through many bulky volumes, but we take this opportunity of expressing our fervent thanks to the authors of this most timely and invaluable book, which deals with the great outstanding, incontrovertible, and unquestionable facts of prophecy which have become history.

The details of an evangelistic journey in Sardinia, by Signor Quattrini, a Waldensian pastor, published by the Evangelical Continental Society, are painfully suggestive. The faith, we are told, of multitudes in Italy, is not that of revelation, but of conscience, which may be mere animalism. A gentleman of this profession had his album filled with the filthiest photographs. In Sardinia the priest and religion are despised alike. Towns abound in filthiness, misery, and immorality; there is the grossest ignorance about Jesus Christ; perjury can be purchased for a glass of wine, and persons can thus wreak their vengeance on one another. No wonder we read that there is more respect for a quadruped than for a priest; and this is the Church false Protestants in England would bring us to.

The Nonconformist gives an interesting story of the origin of the Spezia Mission, by Rev. Edward Clarke. He saw people in Italy in dark uncertainty as to a future state: he and his two colleagues were little acquainted with the Italian language; they were confronted with determined opposition; unity in prayer was their main resource; God's spirit was watched for guidance as to time and place; and now after twenty years they speak of the Spirit's workings in wonderful callings of things that are not as though they were. There are forty evangelistic stations and substations, eight Bible day-schools, eleven Sunday-schools, twenty-nine agents and Italian helpers, and a great and wide-spreading harvest-field.

The Samaritans in Palestine continue to decrease, and to-day they number only one hundred and fifty-one people, congregated at Nablus, and worshipping, as of old, on Mount Gerizim under the rule of a high priest. Thus another prophecy is approaching its fulfilment, and before long the Lord's words, "The hour cometh when ye shall neither in this mountain nor at Jerusalem worship the Father," will be verified.

We notice, with much regret, that since the departure of Lord Aberdeen from Ireland arrangements have been made for military bands to play in the Phœnix Park on Sunday afternoons, one result being that the unfortunate tramcar drivers and conductors, already greatly overworked, are brought on and kept employed during a large portion of the Sabbath hours previously allowed to them for rest. There was quite sufficient desecration of the Sabbath in Dublin without this official arrangement, and it is to be deplored that those in authority should take the lead in making the Lord's day a day of noise and compulsory labour. We should like to know who is responsible for the needless innovation, as it is not improbable that there will be an attempt to make a precedent of the step which has been taken in Dublin.

Our next issue will contain intelligence of special interest relating to Young Men's Christian Associations, and to missionary enterprise, from Mr. Moody's Summer School for Students at Northfield, where ninety-five young men volunteered for foreign missionary work.

A dear friend, who had long been walking in darkness and sorrow, has been comforted by these lines, and hopes they may comfort others:—

"O soul, if thou no sign perceive,
Only believe."
"Yes, if I only could believe."
"Then roll on Him thy care to-day,
And only pray."
"Yes, if I only could but pray."
"Then sigh thou to Him from the deep,
And only weep.
And if, in faith, in prayer, in tears,
The Saviour's help not yet appears,
Then only WAIT."

It is stated that the withdrawal of the British and Foreign Bible Society from Sweden has had the good effect of increasing the zeal and labours of the home society, and as it has been decided to withdraw from Denmark, it is hoped that a similar result may follow in that country. Last year the English Society's agents in Denmark disposed of no less than 11,700 Bibles, and nearly 17,000 "portions," and the Danish Society sold nearly 5000 copies. In France, however, there has been a still more striking success, the Society having spent, during the past eighty years, over thirteen millions of francs in publishing and distributing Bibles in France. The sixty colporteurs employed in France by the parent Society have, during last year, disposed of nearly 120,000 copies of the Scriptures, and for some few years back the number has been but little less. Surely in all this there is great ground for thanksgiving and confidence.

There is in one of Charles Kingsley's letters a solemn thought for those who are doing nothing to lessen the sorrow and sin around them, and who, day by day, simply extract all the selfish pleasure they can out of life without giving any consideration to the sad lot of others. He says,

> We may choose to look at the masses in the gross, as subjects for statistics, and, when possible, of profits. There is One above who knows every thirst, and ache, and sorrow, and temptation of each slattern, and gin-drinker, and street child. The day will come when He will require an account of these neglects of ours not in the gross."

Occasionally the prayer is heard respecting the Jews: "Restore them to their Saviour and to their land." The restoration to their land is the demand of prophecy. The following facts, offered on the authority of a special correspondent of The Birmingham Daily Post, possess interest in this connection. After the recent persecution of the Russian people against the Jews, Jacob Loebel received moneys which he invested in purchasing a tract of land in Palestine, not far from Cesarea, and led thither an Israelitish party. Troubles through legal and other difficulties arose. Loebel died. The Turkish Government hindered in every way. All, we are informed, is now changed. Baron Rothschild, of Paris, has placed himself at the head of the movement, and has ordered, through his agent, houses to be built, a synagogue to be erected, and schools also for the study of Hebrew. The domain is legally to be delivered up to the colonists themselves.

A SELECTION from the WORKS PUBLISHED by MORGAN & SCOTT.

And may be ordered of any Bookseller.

THE GOSPEL IN LEVITICUS.

Chapters on the Old Testament Foreshadowings of the Great Redemption. By the late Rev. Dr. FLEMING, of Kentish Town. Cloth, bevelled boards, 2s. 6d. New and Cheap Edition, 1s.

"The subject is set forth with a clearness, a directness, and a persuasiveness which leave little to be desired. Every lover of sound Scriptural theology, especially in regard to the momentous doctrine of the Atonement, will find in the book a rich treat."—Baptist Magazine.

JOHN, WHOM JESUS LOVED.

The Character, Writings, Theology, and Influence of the Beloved Disciple. New and Enlarged Edition. By Rev. Dr. CULROSS. With Chromo-Lithographic Views of the "Sea of Galilee" and the "Island of Patmos." Cloth, bevelled boards, 3s. 6d.

"It is altogether without reserve that we commend the work before us. It is not a bottle of milk for babes, but a portion of meat for men. A half-dozen readings will only make it more interesting to those who meditate upon what they read."—Sword and Trowel.

"THY FIRST LOVE."

Christ's Message to Ephesus. By Rev. Dr. CULROSS. With Chromo-Lithographic Frontispiece. Cloth extra, 2s. 6d.

"It is a heart-searching and stimulating little book."
British Quarterly Review.

"Its language is chaste and clear; its thoughts are fresh and invigorating; its tone is evangelical without being sentimental. While there is a genial warmth of devout feeling, there runs through its pages a healthy breeze of robustness."—Literary World.

BEHOLD, I STAND AT THE DOOR AND KNOCK.

Christ's Message to Laodicea. By Rev. Dr. CULROSS. Tinted covers, 1s.; cloth limp, 1s. 6d.; cloth extra, 2s. 6d.

"The exposition is fresh and original, displaying great critical skill and discrimination, together with happy quotations of Scripture. The style is all that could be desired—chaste and polished, yet full of force; here and there, as in the author's other works, we meet with passages of great poetic beauty."
Aberdeen Daily Press.

CALLS TO CHRIST.

A Series of Addresses by Rev. R. W. NICOLL, M.A. Tinted covers, 1s.; Cloth neat, 1s. 6d.

"Force and freshness are eminently the characteristics of these 'Calls to Christ'; they are also brief to a proverb, and hence they may be of great service to a earnest evangelist who knows how to use another man's thoughts."
Kelso Courier.

THE NUMBER "SEVEN" IN SCRIPTURE.

Compiled by S. A. BLACKWOOD, Esq., C.B. Paper covers, 1s.; Cloth limp, 1s. 6d. PRESENTATION EDITION, Cloth bevelled boards, gilt edges, 2s. 6d.

"Many other attempts have been made in tabulating the circumstances connected with the word 'seven' in the Bible, but we cannot think of any one which is so complete, so concise, and so systematic as in the small volume compiled by Mr. Blackwood. From Genesis i. to Rev. xxii. all the many times the word occurs are duly noted, and each book is dealt with seriatim, so that reference is easy. One object of the book is, 'to stimulate search and to arouse inquiry,' and with this book by the side of the Bible one course of study can be made very profitable indeed."—The Rock.

CHRIST LIFTED UP.

Meditations on the Death, Resurrection, and Ascension of our Lord Jesus Christ. By Rev. ROBERT GILCHRIST. Cloth, bevelled boards, 2s. 6d.

"An earnest, practical exhibition of the Gospel under a variety of aspects. Christ lifted up on the cross, and at the Father's right hand, is the grand theme, and affords scope for setting forth a wide range of Gospel teaching. The writer does this in an interesting, while simple style."—British Messenger.

"Old-fashioned divinity presented in a pleasing form. May its readers be many."—Sword and Trowel.

LIFE, WARFARE, AND VICTORY.

Specially written for the Help and Guidance of Young Christians. By Major D. W. WHITTLE. Tinted covers, 1s.; Cloth, 1s. 6d.

"Major Whittle seeks in this little work to give instruction in Bible-reading to young converts, for their more careful study and permanent use."
Literary World.

READINGS FOR THE SICK-ROOM.

By Dr. WALLACE. Tinted covers, 1s.; Limp, 1s. 6d.; Cloth boards, 2s. SEVENTH THOUSAND.

"Will be found very helpful and profitable to the numerous class for whom the publication is designed. This little volume has the recommendation to the invalid of being printed in a clear type, so as to be easily read, and of being light to the hand, so that it may be held without fatigue."—The Revival.

BIRDS OF THE BIBLE.

Chats with the Children about Bible Birds.

By JAMES BOWKER, F.R.G.S.I. Cloth, bevelled boards, gilt edges, 2s.; With Coloured Frontispiece, and Twenty-nine other Illustrations. AN ELEGANT GIFT BOOK.

"We delight in books of this character. Scripture and nature are set side by side, and the young are made to see the one illustrated by the other. Fine type makes these pages pleasant to the eye of the old, and simple language adapts it to the taste of the young."—Sword and Trowel.

"This book . . . is illustrated in very good style, the coloured frontispiece of the swallow being specially good. The list includes seagulls, peacocks, cuckoos, sparrows, ravens, and others."—Bookseller.

THE KING'S PALACE.

A Series of Readings for each Day of the Month. By Rev. J. H. ROGERS, M.A. With Carmine Borders. Cloth limp, 1s.; Cloth boards, 1s. 6d.; with gilt edges, 2s. Leather binding, gilt edges, 3s. 6d. FOURTH THOUSAND.

"Its counsels are wise, loving, and direct. Its aim is to lead the reader to have a clean heart and a clean life—to consecrate all to Christ. . . . All that art, taste, and skill can do to make the theme attractive has been done by the well-known publishers. The result is that, within and without, 'The King's Palace' is simply perfect."—Irish Congregational Magazine.

NEW WORK BY A. L. O. E.

PEARLS OF WISDOM FROM THE PARABLES.

By A. L. O. E., Author of "Rescued from Egypt," "Exiles in Babylon," "The Young Pilgrim," &c. With Twenty-four Illustrations, specially designed for this Book. Handsomely bound in cloth, bevelled boards, 3s. 6d.; with gilt edges, 4s.

"These expositions of, or rather lessons from the Parables, have been written since A. L. O. E. went to India as a missionary. They were intended to aid in bringing Hindus and Mohammedans to the faith of Christ, and are written from an Oriental point of view. Nevertheless, English readers will enjoy and may profit by them. All will rejoice to receive a fresh work from the hands of so old a favourite as A. L. O. E."—The Record.

THE BIBLE REMEMBRANCER.

A very compact Bible Handbook, intended to assist the memory, and to provide in the most ready manner for referring to any Biblical incident or event. Tinted covers, 1s.; Cloth boards, 1s. 6d.; Cloth, bevelled boards, gilt edges, 2s. TENTH THOUSAND.

"A more helpful book for Sabbath-school Teachers and others we can scarcely think of."—Presbyterian.

Honorary Secretary: THE REV. W. TYLER.

This, the oldest of all the Evangelistic Societies in London, is largely engaged in taking the Gospel to two classes, viz., those who cannot, and those who will not, attend ordinary places of worship. The former are met with in workhouses, infirmaries, and suchlike places; the latter in the open air, common lodging-houses, &c., besides in rooms and mission halls, where every sort of religious, social, and benevolent efforts are in daily operation, by 150 volunteer workers and a large contingent of lady helpers, who visit 12 workhouses and infirmaries, with 12,000 or more inmates.

During the winter, an earnest and most successful effort has been made to reach the "Outcast" from whom the "Bitter Cry" has come. Thousands of them have been sheltered all night, and fed in the Mission Hall, Thrawl-street, Spitalfields. Many have been secured work, and assisted in other ways. To sustain this and the general work, Funds are urgently needed.

Subscriptions and Donations will be most gratefully received by the Treasurer, F. A. Bevan, Esq., at the Bank; by the Secretary, Mr. James Atkinson, 10, Enfield-road South, Kingsland, N.; by the Bankers, Messrs. Barclay, Bevan & Co., 54, Lombard-street, London, E.C.; or the Editors of THE CHRISTIAN.

ORPHANAGE FUND.

THE SPEZIA MISSION FOR ITALY AND THE LEVANT.

At a meeting recently convened at the Bank of Messrs. Barclay, Bevan & Co., J. G. Barclay, Esq., in the chair, it was felt that, while the Spezia Mission for Italy was doing such excellent work in the country among the young and adult population, it was now most desirable that a Mission so signally blessed of God, which had entered on its 21st year of Christian labour, and which had gradually secured such hearty co-operation of Christians of various denominations, should now become more extensively known as an Agency largely adapted to be a blessing to the Italian people. It was also considered that—as the orphans Mr. Clarke took on himself the responsibility of supporting after the visitation of the cholera some two years since are not as yet able to enter the Home, because it is yet unfinished for lack of the requisite means—it is most important to make known this fact, and to urge the importance of soon raising the remaining sum of about £1,000 for the finishing the Home, the building the necessary School-rooms, and the furnishing of the same, &c.

The friends of the orphan, friends of Italy, and the friends of the necessitous, will rejoice to learn that in God's providence persons eminently fitted to superintend the Orphanage have been raised up to undertake this duty as soon as required.

Subscriptions towards this work of mercy will be thankfully received by

F. A. BEVAN, Esq., 54, Lombard-street, City, London;
ELIOT HOWARD, Esq., J.P., Walthamstow, near London;

of whom also inquiries can be made respecting the work.

P.S.—A kind response for the Orphanage Fund has already been received. May others follow till all needed has been received.

A Sunday or two ago, Canon Westcott, preaching in Westminster Abbey one of a series of sermons upon "Aspects of social life," took for his text Ephesians iii. 14, 15—"I bow my knees unto the Father of our Lord Jesus Christ, of whom the whole family in heaven and earth is named." In the course of an excellent sermon he asserted that the popular estimate of family life showed the state of society, and, claiming that the relationships of father and child included "those of masters and servants, employers and employed, governments and peoples," spoke of the "isolating competition eating away the repose of English life, and selfishness poisoning its springs;" but he yet was able to "thank God the teaching of the family life was still left to England," and that "its ties were still held sacred by popular sentiment."

We join in this thanksgiving, and we trust that the day is far off when there will be any attempt to recognise a condition of things in our midst which in any way may reflect upon the sanctity of the family. Signs are not wanting of deliberate and studied attack upon this bulwark of happy home life; and, although in most instances those who have ventured to set themselves in opposition to the instinctively pure-minded general opinion with regard to the family relations, have been the men and women who forget God, it is none the less deplorable that respectable publishers should aid in the dissemination of such corrupt and pestilent views. One of the most recent pamphlets on the subject, which professes to be written from the standpoint of Socialism, and the emancipation of women, bears upon its front page the name of a high-class firm; we can only hope that they never read the manuscript, so evil are some of the insinuations, and so vile some of the suggestions contained in the pages.

The authors of the pamphlet, and one of them, we regret to say, is a woman, advocate the substitution of a purely private contract "without the intervention of any public functionary" for the present legal and religious marriage ceremony, and they do not hesitate to contend "that chastity is unhealthy and unholy," and to assert that "most Socialists" are with them in such views. We should like to know what William Morris, and Rev. Stewart D. Headlam and his colleagues have to say to this new statement of Socialism.

During the lull of political strife, and while London has been deserted by its thousands, Canon Liddon has continued, to immense congregations in St. Paul's, his expositions of Old Testament history, and thus turned to the best account his late Eastern travels. On a recent Sunday he dwelt on the disinterestedness of David in his preparations for the building of the temple. The aged king has an idea of the unapproachable magnificence of God; a sad whisper of memory enforces the justice of his exclusion from material celebration of it; he does not shrink from making the humbling confession to his son; and, while he is not to have the credit of the great undertaking, he will at least have the expense and the trouble. Was it not, we are led to ask, this unselfishness that, spite of his fall, was the basis of David's character, which made him "a man after God's own heart"?

On the previous Sunday the Canon, without justifying them, gave a view of the fascination of Egypt to the Israelites, which ought not to be lost sight of. Egypt was a land of amazing productiveness; its varied life of civilisation must have had an attraction for a rude people; its antiquity also must have acted on them as England does now on an American. We would add to this the inquiry, whether, in conducting the Israelites into the wilderness, God did not intend to exercise that self-denial which he requires from every soul whom He would lead into entire trust in Himself?

At the Brighton meeting of the British Medical Association, Dr. Withers-Moore, the president, made some remarks on the higher education of women which have awakened considerable attention. He said there was an eagerness about girls with respect to competitive examinations which was full of danger, and the present methods were raising a cry of remonstrance from one end of England to the other. The vital forces which nature had made woman's endowment, which were less than man's, and were indispensable to maternity, were being drawn away. Mothers would be incapable of being mothers at all in any true sense, and the excess of modern education in relation to women would inevitably weaken the race of Englishmen. Exception has been taken to this warning, but it ought not to be ignored, as the address was supported by many strong facts.

Tennyson's line about "honest doubt" may have comforted here and there one, unwillingly resting under the clouds of scepticism, and earnestly longing for and striving to reach the sunlit heights of faith; but it has given rise to a tendency to speak unwisely of doubters, as being noble by reason of their isolation, though in only too many cases their position is due to the fact that they take more trouble in creating doubts than in endeavouring to dispel them. There are, perhaps, no doubts which careful study of God's Word, earnest prayer, and work, will not remove, but there are pharisaical sceptics, proud of their antagonism, who do not use one or the other, and to speak of them as "honest" is simply to misuse the word, and to apply it to persons who determine to disbelieve.

The disgraceful outrages committed for some time back upon the Chinese residing upon the Pacific Coast have called forth a protest from the Evangelical Alliance of China to the Evangelical Alliance of the United States. It points out that the recent treatment of the Chinese labourers and tradesmen is in contravention of law and treaty, that it is inconsistent with professions of Christianity, and that it is contrary to the interests of the Christian religion. The members of the Alliance appeal to the American people to put a stop to such wrongs, and surely it is not too much for them to ask that the Chinese in America should be treated at least with fairness and humanity, if not with Christian love.

We are glad to learn, therefore, that the Committee of the American Alliance have presented a memorial to the Houses of Congress, praying that prompt and efficient action may be taken, that reparation for the past may be given, and such security afforded for the future as shall befit a Christian people, and advance the beneficent progress of Christian civilisation.

The Evangelical Alliance of America claims to represent "millions of loyal American citizens who hold to the truths of Christianity as revealed in the open Bible, and who believe those truths to be the historic basis and only sure bulwark of civil and religious freedom," and we do not doubt that their protest and prayers will be successful, and that the country which sends missionaries to teach the religion of Christ in China, will no longer sanction the brutal outrages which for so long have characterised the treatment of the Chinese in America. The action which has now been taken will help on the cause of Christian China, just as apathy on the part of Christians in America, in the face of the wrong-doing, would have had the effect of retarding missionary work, and it may be that good will result in more ways than one from this trouble. Christianity ought to rise superior to ignoble economic considerations, and, when it does not, those upon whom it is being pressed may be excused if they doubt its sincerity, or its accordance with the utterances of its Divine Founder.

A WORLD'S UNION OF WOMEN.

It may not be known to all our readers that a World's Union of women interested in temperance and other allied reforms has been organised.

At the last annual Convention of the British Women's Temperance Association, a Society numbering 16,000 women, the following resolution was passed:—

Resolved, That the British Women's Temperance Association do cordially respond to the proposition of the American Women's Christian Temperance Union for a world-wide federation of all women interested in any phase of temperance work throughout the whole world, under the name of the "World's Women's Temperance Union," and we do hereby ratify our part in the same.

Mrs. Margaret B. Lucas, a sister of Mr. John Bright, is President, and Miss Frances E. Willard, President of the American Women's Christian Temperance Union, numbering 200,000 women, is Vice-President.

The motto of this World's Union is "For God and Home and Humanity;" the methods are preventive, educational, evangelistic, social, and legal, and the time of united prayer is noontide.

The hope is that such a concert of action may eventually be secured among the women of every land as to circle the world with an unbroken band of mother hearts united together to save their homes and their children from the curse of drink and all its allied evils.

The idea of a universal federation of all nations in the interests of peace, and of other reforms, has long been a dream of far-seeing philanthropists, and this action of the women may be the first step towards its fulfilment. When women, the whole world round, are united together in a federation of reform, surely it will not be long before the nations will be drawn into a similar federation, when

> The war drums throb no longer, and the battle flags are furled,
> In the Parliament of Man, the Federation of the World.

REQUESTS FOR PRAYER.—For blessing on an officer in the army desiring to do God's work among English soldiers in the Punjaub.——For blessing on a mission at the Edinburgh Castle, Limehouse, E., from September 11 to 30, to be conducted by Mr. H. R. Francis.——That doors may be opened for preaching the Gospel, and much blessing given, during tne coming autumn and winter (2 Tim. iv. 1—5)

GOSPEL WORK IN BRITTANY.

Sir,—A remark which you made in reference to the missions at Saragossa during your tour in Spain, comes to my mind with much force just now. "Bible day schools are the backbone of all Gospel work in Spain; no mission can make headway without them." Now, mission work in Brittany depends even more upon these Bible day schools, because the educational authorities in France withhold all aid to schools in which the Bible is taught, or which are opened by prayer. The French branch of the Breton Mission, which for fifty years has been subsidised by the Baptist Missionary Society, has two such schools, with about forty scholars in each, and a female itinerant teacher for the girls at home. This Society abandoned the schools a year ago, and now withdraws from the mission altogether, just at the time of fruitage. A few friends formed themselves into a small Society, and so have saved the schools during the year; but the financial burden which will now fall upon us is more than we can well bear without further help.

That it is worthy of support, the following facts will show. The missionary, M. Lecoat, has translated the whole Scriptures in such a manner that the representatives of the four divisions of the Bretonic language can read it intelligently. The New Testament has been published by the Trinitarian Bible Society, and thousands of Gospels and New Testaments given away at some risk, or sold.

Now the cry for further instruction comes from all parts beyond the thirteen stations which comprise the mission proper, and the Crystal Palace Bible carriage is now en tour throughout that dark land of our neighbours. Thousands of good tracts have been translated and circulated by M. Lecoat's colporteurs, and now "Bunyan's Pilgrim's Progress" is published and added to the list of translations, its coloured illustrations and low price speaking for it a wide circulation. Ten believers were baptized upon a profession of their faith about a fortnight since, and four are about to follow. The schools are sufficiently popular to induce the parents (Roman Catholics) to risk priestly excommunication. At a public examination recently conducted in the presence of a company of English visitors to the mission, seventy Catholic children competed for the prizes offered for the best recitation of chapters from the Breton Scriptures. Can we wonder at conversions? Will English Christians help us, that a work full of such encouragement may not fall through? The premises of the mission are good and ample, and the Baptist Missionary Society kindly offers them at a nominal rent.

SYDNEY CITY MISSION.

The annual meeting of the Sydney (New South Wales) City Mission was held on July 6. The large hall of the Y.M.C.A. was crowded, and the report, read by the secretary, Rev. J. Blanksby, highly satisfactory; while the speeches were able and to the point. Bishop Barry presided, and in his address spoke of the excellent work which the Mission had accomplished. He felt that it deserved the heartiest support of all Christians, because it had been the means of effecting a class of work which the Christian Churches were unable to cover in their present sphere of operations.

Revs. R. Sellors and C. Bright followed in much the same strain, and trusted the end of dissension had come. They exhorted the audience to give their prayers, their sympathies, and help to the work.

Rev. G. Littlemore said that, being a new comer, he did not know much about Sydney life, and gave an interesting account of his experiences of mission work in the East-end of London, as a City missionary during a period of two years.

Mr. N. B. Downing delivered a short but stirring speech, and affirmed that, while the crying sin of England was undoubtedly intemperance, those of Sydney were infidelity and impurity.

Mr. William Noble, who received quite an ovation, was the last speaker. The moment he rose, the audience seemed to rise with him, and, as he dealt with the trinity of evil—impurity, infidelity, and intemperance—his hearers reached a high pitch of enthusiasm, cheering and applauding heartily. During the evening a collection was taken up on behalf of the Mission, while at intervals some capital selections of music were given by the Sydney United Evangelistic Choir.

NOTES FROM MANITOBA.

After visiting many of the farming districts of Ontario, I came up here by way of the Lakes. Owing to the long-continued drought this summer, the forest and bush fires have been very destructive. After passing through the long, ever-winding, beautiful river Sault Saint Marie, which connects lakes Huron and Superior, we saw many miles of forest trees burning on the southern and northern shores of the latter lake.

I left Montreal with our party of emigrants by the first through train from the Atlantic to the Pacific, inaugurating the commencement of regular daily traffic by the Canadian Pacific Railway, one of the wonders of the world, taking passengers and freight 2920 miles through fertile prairies, primeval woods, and noble mountains, from Montreal to Vancouver without change of cars. The completion of the railway now brings England much nearer to India, China, Australia, and Japan, and will give us through our own Dominion a quicker route to the East, and already two tea-ships have left China for Vancouver, whose cargoes will be sent home over the Canadian Pacific Railway, instead of by the old all-sea passage. Therefore you can easily understand how great an event in the progress of Canada the starting of the first through train was looked upon by the inhabitants of Montreal. The train kept time during the six days it took to reach the Pacific Coast, a warm reception being given at each important station.

I have visited many of the young men who came out to this province to learn farming, riding many miles over prairies on a buck-board. A buck-board is a very peculiar vehicle used by farmers, the body looks as if it were made of the staves of a barrel placed lengthwise, about two feet above the centre of which is placed a seat, narrow enough for two persons, and having no rim to support the back. The young men I visited are some who determined to emigrate to learn farming in order to work their own land, and being informed before leaving home as to the kind of work and nature of the life, they received their introductory letters and are located here with these Canadian farmers. Those I saw had been at this work from two to four months, some twelve months, and I am glad to say, with three exceptions, were happy with the farmers, and the farmers with them. I found a few cases where some marked men had the name of engaging hands and not paying them; but the law-courts here are easily available, and the judges are deservedly severe on such cases.

I have had the pleasure, while here, of placing several young men from Manchester, who came out later than I expected (the spring is always the best time), and there is ample room in this province for hundreds more, if strong, steady, and willing to work. The farmers here are like all Canadians, very hospitable; they mostly came out years ago, to Ontario, cleared farms there, sold those improved farms at from 60 to 100 dollars per acre, then came here where there is no clearing to do, took up land, and in most cases are doing well. In spite of the long drought, the crops look wonderfully well, for the snow in winter (which is recreation time here) stays in the ground, and its moistening influence remains.

AN OPEN DOOR.—Dear Sir,—May I, through your columns, enlist the sympathy of lady district visitors, &c., for a large parish, 10,000, all very poor, where work is conducted on Protestant principles? No ladies living in the parish, there is a wide field of usefulness for those who wish to engage in the Lord's service. A large mothers' meeting needs a lady superintendent, while classes for working girls require warm-hearted Christians to carry them on, and in the homes of the poor lady visitors are sadly needed. The over-burdened vicar earnestly appeals to those who have leisure, and a desire to win souls to Christ, to come forward and help in this mission parish, which is easy of access it being within three minutes' walk of the Waterloo-station, and omnibuses from Clapham, Brixton, and the West-end passing through it. Also young ladies who desire to be usefully engaged will find interesting work in connection with the "Flower Mission," visiting work-rooms, and helping in a childrens' weekly sewing-class and Gospel meeting. Will friends thus disposed kindly communicate with Mrs. Starey.—Yours faithfully, (Rev.) JAMES R. STAREY.

"ALL DAY LONG."

"I must work the works of Him that sent Me, while it is day: the night cometh, when no man can work."
John ix. 4.

"All day long I have stretched forth My hands unto a disobedient and gainsaying people."—Rom. x. 21.

Right in thy headlong, downward way,
Stretching his hands out, all the day,
Royal in beauty, power, and grace,
Standeth thy Lord before thy face.

Not in some far-off heaven dwells He,
But at thy heart's door, close to thee;
"Come unto Me!" He stands to say,
Stretching his hands out, all the day.

Thou hast grown cold of heart to Him;
Love is enfeebled, faith is dim:
Yet doth He call, while thou dost stray,
Stretching his hands out, all the day.

Hast thou not felt their secret power
Drawing thee back in danger's hour—
Back to the safe, the narrow way?
Do they not touch thee now, to-day?

Hast thou ne'er pushed those hands aside,
Sinned against mercy in thy pride?
Hast thou not turned from Christ away,
Stretching his hands out, all the day?

Yield, for thy life-day will not last!
Yield, for thy sun is sinking fast!
Yield to those piercèd hands, I pray,
Stretched to thee only, "while 'tis day."

"While it is day!" Ah, cold and drear,
Shadows are lengthening, night is near;
Still doth He wait, through twilight grey,
Stretching his hands out, all the day.

Sinner, those hands were pierced for thee;
Canst thou reject a love so free?
Turn thee to Him, no more delay:
Stretch out thy hands to Him to-day!

BIBLE AND GOSPEL VAN WORK.

I had often heard of the Bible carriage work, but never had an opportunity of sharing in it until last month, when I joined the carriage of Messrs. James Wharton and Leonard Weaver in "The Potteries," Staffordshire, for a fortnight of my holidays, and which time I shall ever have cause to thank God for, as being one of unmixed happiness, in seeing the Word scattered broadcast, and blessing resulting therefrom. The objects of this work are, as you are aware, the circulation of the Scriptures and other Gospel literature amongst the masses, at the lowest possible prices (causing a yearly loss on the sales of £200), as well as preaching the Gospel to the people, as they gather round the Bible carriage. Messrs. Wharton and Weaver were, and are, at present, accompanied by my old friend, Mr. Perrott, who now gives much of his time and sympathy to this work. In Longton, one of the Pottery towns, I was perfectly astonished to see, night after night, the people gather around the carriage in hundreds, to buy the books, and hear the Word of Life. The interest displayed was wonderful, and the last evening there was a memorable one. Four of us spoke, one after another, to a crowd of from 1000 to 2000. At the close, when the people were asked if any had received blessing during our visit, scores held up their hands and many waited behind to tell us how they had been blessed; others to ask "the way to the City." The parting scene was the most affecting I had seen for many a day. One gentleman told me that the churches had got a great blessing and the power of the Word had been felt in the lowest parts of the town. I may add, in one evening we sold over 900 penny Testaments.

I would strongly recommend those interested in the salvation of precious souls, who can spare the time, to see this work for themselves. It is worthy of sympathy, and I am sure Messrs. Wharton and Weaver, who are now at Llandudno, would be delighted to let them see how the masses can be reached and interested in eternal things through this means.—Yours truly, Tralee. E. F. M. Melville.

MISSIONARY ECONOMICS.

Dear Sir,—Will you permit me to draw the attention of the section of the Christian public interested in, and subscribing to, the Missionary Societies, to two books, "Self-support in Bassein," and "Studies in Missionary Economics," recently published in America by the Rev. C. H. Carpenter, late of the American Baptist Missionary Union of Boston, and for many years a successful missionary among the Karens in Burma. The latter book was originally published in pamphlet form, at short intervals, but all the pamphlets are here collected, and issued under one cover.

Very wide and very important are the points raised, and they may possibly apply with equal force to the work carried on by our societies, as to the A.B.M.U. I am not in a position to say how far the leading English societies fall into the mistakes here specially referred to, but it is significant that the cost of each missionary employed by some of our societies is even greater than the average per man disbursed by the A.B.M.U.

I do not want to burden you with my own views and words, but I annex for the guidance of your readers one or two extracts from Mr. Carpenter's books, to show the lines he takes up, and a few opinions of missionaries themselves on the book and their teaching as a whole.

Mr. Carpenter writes in "Mission Economics" (p. 17) as follows :—

> Will it be believed that to-day we are expending on schools in Asia, with the approval, apparently, of the executive body, more than twice as much as we were expending in 1878, and many times more, both in money and missionary time, than we were expending prior to the check given to educational work in 1854? English, also, is freely taught in nearly all our mission-schools, and fancy work in most of the schools for girls.
> To assist in the education of a native ministry, and to give some aid to converts who are striving, to the extent of their means, to educate their children, is one thing. To go beyond this, and make expensive provision for the education of children and youth, the large majority of whom are from heathen families whose parents will not accept Christianity for themselves, and are presumably opposed to having their children accept it; to buy land, erect buildings, provide costly American teachers and native assistants, furnish food and all the appliances of a native boarding-department, and then receive back from some of the pupils a tuition of ten, twenty, or forty cents a month, and from some others a dollar or two a month, towards the cost of the food which they eat—to expend so many thousands of dollars in this way, I say, that we are unable to send out the men who are needed to enter open doors for preaching the Gospel in "the regions beyond," may not be absolute waste, but it cannot be the highest form of obedience to the last command of our Lord.

Again the same book (p. 99) :—

> I will add another case, not of moral delinquency, but as illustrating the tendency of the existing system to cultivate a mercenary spirit in a class of men who ought, above all others, to be free from it. One of the best-known, and for many years one of the most trusted, preachers in the Maulmain Burman mission was Moung Reuben. For nineteen years the Sunday-school connected with the First Baptist Church in Cambridge, United States, gave him a liberal support.
> It appears that, through his salary from this country, and partly in other ways, perhaps, this preacher acquired what would be a comfortable property for a Burman; so that, besides a good native house, he has considerable sums of money to loan. At a recent date he is said to have been holding for a few years, notes against a missionary for Rs. 4800, of which Rs. 2900 were used in completing a school-building on mission ground.

Once more (p. 127) :—

> My remark as to ocean passages also has excited somewhat vehement opposition. The Watchman says that "it would be an indelible disgrace to the American Baptist Missionary Union to ask any-one to" [take a second-class passage]. The China Inland Mission has both allowed and recommended lady missionaries, as well as gentlemen, to go out third-class by the French mail steamers, with no loss of character to the society or to the missionaries, I believe. The Missionary Union may not do that, forsooth; but it may ask men and women, who are engaged in a constant struggle to keep the wolf from the door, to contribute money to pay for first-class passages and first-class salaries. It may ask parents, who can by no means give their own children an education, to give money for Christ's sake to maintain expensive boarding-schools for the children of native Christians and heathen. It can circulate coloured charts, bearing this truthful legend, "The heathen are dying at the rate of a hundred thousand a day. Christians are giving to save them at the rate of one-tenth of a cent a day." It can then take money given by the poor or the selfish who could be moved to give by no less urgent plea, and use it for the purposes already named, without a blush or a qualm; but it would feel itself "indelibly disgraced" to ask a missionary to go second-class in "the excellent state-rooms on the forward main-deck" of the Anchor Line steamers, and to sit at the "good, plain table," where there would be far more comfort than is likely to be found in jungle-touring!

The following are a few opinions given by missionaries which will doubtless tend to prove that the books are worthy of careful perusal, and the suggestions contained in them of careful consideration :—

> I have read your tracts with a great deal of interest. I want to express my sympathy with you in the bold and important task you have undertaken. It is my conviction, and has been ever since my own residence in India, that we are entirely off the real Gospel base in doing missionary work . . . Missionary evangelism waits for the revival of the heroic spirit, as evinced in Judson, W. C. Burns, and other such men. But 3000 dollar secretaries and 5000 dollar pastors are not the men to awaken such revival. It will come, when it does come, through other channels . . . I believe that the salaries which make the missionaries independent are the greatest source of their weakness. They keep them from God.—Rev. Dr. ——, formerly a missionary, now a pastor in the West.
> Many thanks for "No. 2." I have read it with interest and profit. I felt the tendency toward undue extravagance while on the foreign field."—A Returned Missionary.
> I am glad you have the courage of your convictions. I can only help by shouting "Amen."—Another One.
> I have read your "No. 2" with a great deal of satisfaction. It will awaken a good deal of hostile criticism, especially from missionaries; but it tells a great deal of truth. I have always felt that our missionaries should be just as much a subject of investigation and discussion as ministers at home, but they seem to think otherwise. Four hundred dollar men should not be sent out at all. There are many noble men on the field, and, as you and I know, some trash.—Another One.
> You have my full approval. Conscientious men cannot be required to work for ever under the protest of their convictions. I am glad you have the moral bravery to speak out, and take the consequences.—Another One.

The following reviews refer to the "Self-support in Bassein :"—

> The study and experience of all the years that have transpired since we went to India lead us to welcome this volume, and devoutly thank God for it. It is the largest contribution to the work of foreign missions within our knowledge since the days of the Apostles and the early martyrs—larger than a gift of a million dollars in solid cash. Let the lessons of this history be duly studied and applied by every foreign missionary, and we may look for the speedy evangelisation of the entire heathen world. — Rev. Dr. Wilder, Editor "Missionary Review."
> Very suggestive and instructive. A valuable contribution, not only to the history, but to the philosophy, of missions. It is the most historically accurate and carefully written book that has yet been published on the missions in Burma. We wish every secretary of a missionary society, every director, and every missionary, could read it.—Chronicle of the London Missionary Society.
> Subsidy enervated the churches; self-help, on the other hand, invigorated them. We wish that every promoter of missions could trace for himself the proof of this statement in the admirable history of the Bassein Mission by Mr. Carpenter. In a narrative of intense and romantic interest, it presents a distinct view of one of the best missions of the century, carried on by Christian heroes, who shortened their lives by devotion to the cause they loved so well. The adoption, gradually and wisely, of the principle of self-help in all our missions, would, we are persuaded, inaugurate a new era of progress throughout the world.—Sword and Trowel.

In conclusion, I venture to assert, from my own experience, which has been considerable in various parts of the East and Africa, that the best and most effective work is not by any means always done by those societies whose average outlay per man is highest, but that, broadly speaking, the most efficient and the most economical work go together and vice versâ.

Commending the whole matter to the careful, inquiring attention of Christians generally,

H. W. Fry.

MR. WILLIAM NOBLE.

After a somewhat boisterous seven days' voyage from Wellington, New Zealand, Mr. Noble arrived in Sydney, New South Wales, on June 27, and was accorded a public welcome on the following Friday, when several of the local ministers and many prominent ladies and gentlemen interested in the temperance movement in and around Sydney were present at the hall of the Y.M.C.A. Mr. W. J. Foster, M.P., who presided, explained the object of the meeting and extended to Mr. Noble the right hand of fellowship, and a resolution was passed welcoming him to the colony, after which Mr. Noble delivered a short address.

On Tuesday, July 6, Mr. Noble spoke at the annual meeting of the Sydney City Mission (referred to elsewhere), and on the following evening he commenced his mission in the Y.M.C.A. hall. Although rain fell heavily during the evening, the hall was well filled, and, as events turned out, the meeting was composed mainly of teetotallers, for when Mr. Noble asked the audience to rise, and then suddenly requested all abstainers to resume their seats, only about a score were left standing. These he earnestly exhorted to enlist on the other side. Mr. Noble's remarks, which were listened to throughout with great attention, were mainly based on the Gospel, and while he urged some strong points against the use of alcohol, either moderately or immoderately, he was principally engaged in explaining that he wanted, on the first night, to show that his mission would be conducted entirely on Scriptural lines. Rev. A. Gardiner, Moderator of the Presbyterian Assembly, presided, and expressed full sympathy with Mr. Noble in the work.

LOWESTOFT.—The Y.M.C.A. here had a most successful gathering on Monday, August 16, in connection with the opening of their new building. The Mayor (W. Youngman, Esq.) occupied the chair, supported by Lt.-Colonel Henry Seppings, Capt. W. F. Larkins, R. B. Nicholson, Esq. (Town Clerk), Rev. T. A. Nash, M.A. (Rector and President), who opened. Mr. W. Hind Smith (London), Mr. S. Cole (Canada), and a number of influential supporters from other towns. The tone of the meeting was excellent, and the Association, now in a healthy condition, expects great things.

THE SYRIAN ORPHANAGES at Jerusalem have received a total income for 1885 of £1790 10s., and the expenses being £1726, left a balance of £64 10s. in hand. The report shows that during the past twenty-five years 414 destitute orphans have been received, fed, clothed, and taught; they are all trained to some kind of manual labour, and do most of the work of the school and garden. There are now six elementary and two advanced classes, also Blind-school. An interesting statement gives the occupation which the orphans have adopted after leaving the institution, from which we see that four have become preachers, fourteen school teachers, three surgeons, 154 mechanics. After they leave, Pastor Schneller keeps sight of them, visiting their homes. Those of our readers who have collecting cards are asked to return them when filled to Rev. Theodore Meyer, 49, St. Charles-square, Notting-hill, W.; and it is suggested that those who have been kindly collecting stamps might take collecting-cards instead, as the value of stamps has decreased to such an extent as to be unremunerative to the Orphanages.

Letters to the Editor.

PREACHERS AT THE THEATRE.

DEAR SIR,—You ask "whither are we drifting" when two exalted preachers of Evangelical profession are seen seated together in a theatre. It is so hard to believe this. Is it true, indeed? For no man has written sterner words of reprobation of the theatre than H. W. Beecher, in his "Lectures to Young Men," words that, when I was taken in my youth by that seductive snare, helped me to break through its gilded meshes.

But if it be true, the only answer is, "We are drifting on to that awful condition of utterly blinded Godlessness which cannot discern between good and evil."

How can these two shepherds justify this leadership? Will they who proclaim themselves ambassadors from God plead for Baal? "Let Baal plead for himself." He wants not for prophets of his own to assert the praises of his temple. Or will they say that they sat in the world's pleasure-house in accordance with that will of God for their own and others sanctification which they profess to be the purpose and end of their ministry?

One of your many titles to the gratitude of the Church is the firm ground you have always held on this matter.

May God now endue you with that Godlike lack of respect for persons which dares to call the chiefest to account, for surely it is time. The Moabites are indeed in the camp of Israel, if it be true that in the theatre these preachers of the Saviour from sin have stood, crying aloud, by public example, "Follow me."—Faithfully yours,

F. J. SHIELDS.

GOSPEL WORK IN HOUNSLOW.

SIR,—In your issue of the 5th inst., a paragraph appeared under the above heading, in which Rev. H. Layton, Vicar of St. Stephen's, Hounslow, invited those who intended contributing towards the mission-room which our late reader, Mr. Whittaker, is seeking to erect in St. Stephen's parish, to communicate with me before doing so.

This paragraph [rather the letter of which it was an extract.—ED.] was forwarded to you for insertion without any previous intimation to me, and I only knew of its appearance by visits and letters of inquiry at this office from several persons.

As, notwithstanding the subsequent notice in your columns that we are not responsible for Mr. Whittaker's present work, inquiries are still addressed to me on the subject, it becomes necessary to ask your permission briefly to state:—

That Mr. Whittaker was approved by Mr. Layton as Reader at St. Stephen's, and appointed in 1885.

That, more recently, difficulties arose between Mr. Whittaker and his Vicar, owing to divergent views, which occasionally led Mr. Whittaker to act independently of his clerical superintendent, and contrary to the rules of this Association by whom he was employed.

That his attention was more than once drawn by Mr. Layton to his apparent failure to comply with the letter and spirit of his engagement, and, I am bound to add, after perusing the correspondence in the most conciliatory terms.

That I also, as representing the Committee, had several friendly conversations with Mr. Whittaker on the subject, and, with a view to prevent a schism which I foresaw would otherwise occur, gave him more than one opportunity of removal to other spheres of work. These, however, he did not accept, and, being apparently unable to act in harmony with his Vicar, he ultimately anticipated a compulsory severance of his connection with the Association by resigning his appointment.

Since then neither the Vicar of St. Stephen's nor ourselves have had any responsibility for, or control over, Mr. Whittaker and his work, and, after this purely explanatory letter, I must decline any further correspondence, public or private, on this matter, which, after all, is of entirely local interest.

As, however, the paragraph which originated this correspondence appeared to many to convey somewhat of a reflection upon Mr. Whittaker's integrity, I feel bound to add that, though greatly regretting and disapproving the steps he has thought proper to take in establishing himself in what is naturally regarded as opposition to the Vicar under whom he formerly laboured, and who gave him a position in his parish, I believe that his motives are good, and his personal character is beyond reproach.—Your obedient servant,

T. MARTIN TILBY,
Lay Sec. C. of E. Scripture Readers' Association.
Office, 56, Haymarket, S.W., August 19.

SUNDAY POST-OFFICE WORK.

DEAR SIR,—As a professed Christian of fifty years' standing, and also as a solvent man of business, I have often considered the question of Sunday postal work, and now submit the following suggestion to Post-office authorities:—That letters posted on Saturday for places having a Sunday delivery be delivered on Monday, except such as are specially marked "Sunday delivery," and double stamped. This would probably rest half the staff every Sunday in turn.

After trial for a reasonable time, it might be seen how far the demand for Sunday delivery exists, and further action determined accordingly.

Lancaster. THOMAS JOHNSON.

SYSTEMATIC INTERCESSION.

SIR,—For some weeks past it has been laid on my heart to write and thank you for blessing received in my own soul through the columns of THE CHRISTIAN.

After having read Dr. Somerville's address on the Evangelisation of the World, as published in that paper, I was led to follow out his advice and plan, in some measure, by consulting my atlas, and making a list of places to be prayed for, dividing them over the several days of the week. I believe blessing has resulted from this in many ways. First, I believe, that prayer offered in Christ's name can never remain unanswered.

Secondly, feeling the need or desire to remember special work, or to have a centre of interest in each country prayed for, I have been stirred up to fresh interest in work of all kinds carried on at home and abroad, and I have looked eagerly each week as THE CHRISTIAN came in for fresh news of work, or to hear of work begun in such countries as Greece or Austria, where as yet I knew of no Christian work.

Lastly, in praying for light to be poured out upon these countries, I have been shown more than ever before, the great privilege of prayer, and have learnt to love more communion with our dear Lord. It has seemed likely to me that others may have made a like list; and may I say that when lately in your paper there appeared accounts of two revivals to be attributed to no special cause, I could only look up and tell our Father that I took it straight from Him as an answer to prayer offered in his Son's name. Surely He would have us thus expect an answer, and recognise it when it comes. May I also say how since quite young I have read and always loved THE CHRISTIAN, because of its interesting news and unsectarian principles, and have learnt to value it more and more.

A. M.

OPPOSITION TO OPEN-AIR WORK.

SIR,—I wish to direct attention to the increasing hostility of the "powers that be," viz., magistrates, town councils, &c., to those who preach the Gospel in the open air.

In many towns the local authorities have adopted a bye-law which prohibits open-air meetings within the borough. Margate, Ramsgate, and Dover have such regulations in force. At Margate and Ramsgate the sands are the only suitable places for open-air meetings. As the cold weather sets in, the services will be discontinued, and for six long months those who do not attend places of worship will be left with very little, if any, effort being made to lead them to God. In Dover, under a recent bye-law, it is illegal to stop in the streets, even for a few moments, to sing a hymn, or play any instrument to attract the people. This last regulation was adopted by the Council to prevent the Salvation Army (who are shortly expected there) from using their band.

Each of these towns is at the present time harbouring troops of niggers (so-called), who sing, dance, and play in the chief streets and thoroughfares, without let or hindrance! These frequently cause a real obstruction to the traffic; but to this the police and magistrates are blind. Yet they break the regulation.

Surely there is some remedy; these things ought not to be suffered by the Christian public in a Christian country. What is the result of this local legislation? Rulers are becoming a terror to good works rather than to evil! For if God's children decide as Peter that "they ought to obey God rather than man," then fine or imprisonment awaits them. The many thousands who do not enter a place of worship from one year to another have souls as well as professedly religious people, and will soon pass to the judgment bar of God. They are without God, and without hope in the world. If walking in the Spirit, God's children will realise a solemn duty to these—even to warn them continually, "in season and out of season," undeterred by fines or imprisonment, but rather rejoicing in that they are counted worthy to suffer shame for his name. While the ambassador of an earthly king is received with honour, whatever may be his message, the ambassador of the King of kings is often treated as a felon, and sent to jail.

The recent prosecutions at Ryde, I.W., afford ample testimony to this. A few members of the Salvation Army are haled to prison for singing hymns in the streets. They had obstructed no thoroughfare; they were living peaceably with all men, they were obeying their great Master. Truly did the gaol chaplain remark that they were suffering for righteousness sake!

Such God-dishonouring treatment as this should be rendered impossible by Act of Parliament. When we go to France, Spain, Italy, or Russia to preach the Gospel, we are prepared for Christ's sake to suffer loss; but in England, a country which owes its greatness, its security, and its great privileges to the Gospel, such acts of intolerance are an insult to God. GEORGE LINE.

DEAR SIR,—The London police have summoned us for conducting open-air services on our own property facing a thoroughfare. The case comes on before the magistrate at Worship-street Police Court on August 27, at 2 p.m. Therefore we ask, with humility and earnestness, the prayers of the faithful in Christ Jesus, that the Holy Spirit may be in us all, and that the good hand of God may be upon us. We ask not for "triumph," but we do wish the Lord to be with us, the God of Jacob to be our refuge.—I am, yours very truly,

WILLIAM ADAMSON.
The Vicarage, Old Ford, E.

OFFENSIVE STREET SALES.

SIR,—Too much credit cannot well be accorded to our new Home Secretary and our present Chief Commissioner of Police for their promptitude in suppressing an evil which on former occasions has been allowed to proceed unchecked.

On Thursday last there appeared in the Strand, Charing-cross, Fleet-street, &c., &c., numbers of hawkers with large bundles of a most objectionable sheet of prints. Standing at intervals of but a few yards from each other they rapidly disposed of their wares to the passers-by, so that in the course of the day many hundreds if not thousands must have passed into the hands of ignorant or prurient readers.

Early next morning the matter was brought before the notice of the Home Office by a strong representation from this society, and by letters from the editor of THE CHRISTIAN and others. On the evening of the same day some action was taken by the police, and on Tuesday and Wednesday several of the culprits were convicted for selling these prints, and sentenced to pay a fine of 40s. or undergo a month's imprisonment. The result is that the thoroughfares are now clear of this pest, and that another pamphlet professing to reproduce the scenes of a recent case in the Divorce Court has failed to make its appearance to-day in the streets.

It is not unlikely, however, that the filthy stream dammed up in the Metropolis may find outlets in the country districts, and it behoves all those who would wish to restrain its overflow to invoke the assistance of the magistracy and police. Now that the magistrates here have in all cases decided to punish the offenders, there can be no difficulty in obtaining the like repression elsewhere. It is to be hoped also that in future cases the police will not wait for special instructions, but immediately pounce upon those who may attempt to disseminate such impure literature.

But it needs the watchfulness of all truly anxious to secure our streets from pollution, in order that the authorities may be early supplied with information when any breach of the law occurs.

Should difficulties arise, or obstruction be offered, assistance or advice may be obtained from this Society. STEPHEN BOURNE, Secretary.
Central Vigilance Society,
15, York Buildings, Adelphi, W.C., August 19.

ORPHAN HOME FOR LITTLE GIRLS.—Established just a year ago, with three little girls as inmates, the Home now accommodates twenty. The purpose is to shelter, clothe, and educate little girls over four years of age who, having lost one or both parents, are in need of such care, and so to train them as to fit them to earn an honest livelihood. In some cases part payment is made by friends, £57 having been received in this way during the twelve months. Such agencies are the evidence of a living faith, and of a Christlike desire to care for the fatherless in their affliction. The Home is situated at 86, St. James'-road, Croydon.

Notes on Daily Readings.

SUNDAY, AUGUST 29.—2 KINGS V.

1.—By him the Lord had given deliverance, &c.—From the Assyrian monuments we learn that just at this period Assyria subdued Syria, and that, after a few years of subjection, Syria rebelled and regained her independence (see "Ancient Monarchies,' vol. ii. pp. 344 and 361). It was most probably in this war of independence that Naaman gained his great victories. Observe the deep suggestiveness of the words, "The Lord had given." They teach us to trace the hand of God in heathen as well as Christian history, and that the realm of his providence is long as time, and broad as the earth.

2—4.—Had brought away captive . . . a little maid, &c.—The destruction of this poor child's home, and her captivity, must have seemed at the time a disaster to which there could be no explanation and no relief. And yet it enabled this little girl to bring about a great event, to be an important and necessary instrument in the writing of a brilliant page of sacred history. But this result would not have followed if she had not risen above her sorrows, and had not been a child of faith.

8—19.—Observe (1) "Naaman's near failure of cure, by reason of his having settled in his own mind the mode in which it was to be done, and his scorn of the simple and naturally inadequate instrumentality prescribed by the prophet."—Kitto. (2) God's way of dealing with men. They need humbling; hence He requires them to seek deliverance by most unlikely means, and simply because He has ordained these. What He desires is the obedience of faith. (3) Naaman came very near to preferring his own way without a cure, to God's way with its certain promise of deliverance. Yet he was very much in earnest. So now, many are ready to do anything for salvation except to cease from doing, and to receive it as a free gift. (4) The lengthening out of faith's trial. Six times he dipped without result—only on the seventh did the cure appear (see Josh. vi. 3—20, and 1 Kings xviii. 43). (5) His gratitude. It was thirty-two or thirty-three miles to Jordan, so that returning to Elisha involved two or three days' extra journeying (see Luke xvii. 15).

MONDAY, AUGUST 30.—2 KINGS VI.

1—7.—The iron did swim.—Some object to the comparatively trivial object of this miracle. But we must remember the value of an iron axe-head at that time, the great inconvenience to the builders which its loss would bring, and the probable poverty of the loser. The story is beautiful as showing a great prophet's keen sympathy with a poor man beset with a common-place trouble, and reminds us of Elisha's great Anti-type, and his first miracle (John ii. 1—11).

14.—Therefore sent he thither horses and chariots, &c.—Believing that Elisha was endowed with supernatural, yea, almost divine power, he still thought to hunt him with horses and chariots! He acknowledged him as the servant of a mighty God, and yet he sought to catch him with "a great host"! To such folly do men naturally descend when they fight against God.

15—23.—The deliverance at Dothan.—This is an acted parable of extreme beauty. First comes trouble—swift, unlooked for, and seemingly overwhelming. Then is seen in vivid contrast the man of sight and the man of faith, the earthly and the spiritual. "Alas, my master! How shall we do?" is the natural cry of the one: as natural is the grandly quiet reply of the other: "Fear not: for they that be with us are more than they that be with them." Then, in answer to the prophet's intercession, spiritual sight is granted, and the glorious vision of heavenly allies is seen. Often, in answer to good men's prayers, a similar change has come to their friends in sore trouble. The vision of faith has been given. In a heaven-given assurance of the encompassing host of God between them and their enemies (Ps. xxxiv. 7) they have grown strong and calm.

TUESDAY, AUGUST 31.—2 KINGS VII.

1—16.—To the uttermost part of the camp, &c.—I.e., "Its boundary towards the city."—Keil. Kings of the Hittites.—"A general designation of the northern kings of Canaan on Lebanon and towards Phœnicia."—Idem.

9.—We do not well: this day is a day of good tidings, and we hold our peace.—Every reader feels the force of this saying. Had they continued silent amid such plenty, while a whole city-full of their brethren were dying in the horrors of starvation, words would have failed to tell the shame of their sin. What, then, shall we say of ease-loving Christian professors? This day is a day of good tidings of great joy which are for all peoples. Our neighbours starve and die of worse than bodily hunger. Shall we hold our peace? Can we?

12.—And the king said, &c.—The suspicion was natural. Still, he would have acted far more like a man of faith had he been as ready to believe that this was truly the deliverance promised as he was to doubt it. At any rate, he might have called Elisha and asked his advice.

This story tells of man's strait and God's deliverance. The strait was terrible. Within the city, famine, horror, despair; without, no allies: only the cruel foe. Hope was impossible, except to the godly. They could not even imagine how relief could reach them. Yet all was simple and easy when God began to work. Whether an actual noise smote their ears, or whether they were made to imagine such a sound, as some think, it matters not. It was God's work, and it was complete and wonderful. It is beautiful to see how He employed four outcast, starving lepers as his agents. Note also that Samaria was not merely delivered: it was greatly enriched as well. God's mercies are large and generous.

In the doom that falls on the unbelieving lord, we see God's estimate of unbelief. He dies accursed on the very threshold of deliverance, and in the midst of universal gladness. His awful death teaches us afresh how great is the sin of questioning God's power or faithfulness, of limiting the Holy One of Israel.

WEDNESDAY, SEPT. 1.—2 KINGS VIII.

1—6.—Once more we are taught that God will allow no one to be in his debt, and that He repays with "good measure, shaken together, pressed down, and running over." For her kindness to Elisha a son had been given to this Shunammite lady. That son had been restored from the dead. And now two more great blessings are added. She is shielded during seven years of famine, and lastly, her estate is restored to her on her return. Three out of four of these great mercies came to her through the gifts of prophecy and miracle-working. Yet the fourth and last was no less the gift of God because more natural in its method. It was God Himself who ordained that Gehazi should be telling the King about this Shunammite at the very moment of her coming to the King.

12.—Thou . . . wilt dash their children, &c.—"The intention is to enumerate the ordinary horrors of war, as it was conducted among the Oriental nations of the time. (Compare Ps. cxxxvii. 8, 9; Isa. xiii. 16—18; Hos. x. 14; 2 Kings xv. 16)."—Sp. Com.

13.—But what, is thy servant a dog? &c.—This is a mistranslation. It should be, as the R.V. has it: "But what is thy servant, which is but a dog, that he should do this great thing?" "He does not shrink from Elisha's words, or mean to say that he would be a dog could he act so cruelly as Elisha predicts that he will. His only doubt is whether so much good fortune ('this great thing') can be in store for one so mean."—Sp. Com.

15.—He took a thick cloth, &c.—"Hazael was no more obliged to murder Benhadad because a prophet announced to him that he would one day be king of Syria, than David was obliged to murder Saul because another prophet anointed him king in Saul's place."—Sp. Com.

18.—And he walked in the way of the kings of Israel . . . for the daughter of Ahab was his wife.—See 2 Chron. xxi. 2—4. Also note ver. 27, where the terrible results of this ungodly marriage are traced in the history of the second generation.

THURSDAY, SEPTEMBER 2.—2 KINGS IX.

7.—And the blood of all the servants of the Lord.—"We gather from this passage that besides the murder of the prophets there had been general persecution of the worshippers of Jehovah at Jezebel's instigation. The allusion cannot be to the single case of Naboth."—Sp. Com.

10.—And the dogs shall eat Jezebel.—"The fate of Jezebel had been prophesied by Elijah (1 Kings xxi. 23; 2 Kings ix. 36, 37). Its announcement as imminent forms a worthy climax to this grand prophecy of Elisha's. Hers was the chief guilt. From her had come the whole of that terrible sin which had now overshadowed both kingdoms. What more fitting, that now, when evil was come to a head, and divine wrath was about to burst forth and sweep away the entire impious brood, she should be selected for a punishment of extraordinary horror, a punishment which would never be forgotten—which in Jewish eyes was the most terrible that could befall humanity."—Idem.

In the portion of Jezreel.—"There most fitly would she suffer—at Jezreel, the scene of her idolatries; there, where she had set up her temple and her grove, had maintained her 400 prophets and her priests, had threatened Elijah with destruction (1 Kings xix. 2), and, above all, had stirred up her husband to commit murder" (1 Kings xxi. 7—15). —Idem.

26.—The blood of Naboth, and the blood of his sons.—This is the first mention of the death of Naboth's sons. We may be sure that Jezebel would do her best to remove not Naboth only, but any possible heirs also. Her object in accusing Naboth of both treason and blasphemy, seems to have been to secure the death of his family as well as his own. As the sin was against Naboth and his house, so the doom falls on Ahab and Jezebel, and their house. "Though the wheels of God grind slowly, they grind exceeding small."

FRIDAY, SEPTEMBER 3.—2 KINGS X.

1—4.—Jehu is not sure of the chief men of Israel, who are now in Samaria, the capital. To test them, and also to bring matters to a crisis while things are favourable to his cause, he boldly challenges them to choose their king and prepare to fight with him.

5-7.—On their electing to side with him he commands them to slay the seventy princes, descendants of Ahab (for the word "son" is commonly used in the Old Testament with the wider meaning of "posterity"). He does this not merely because he wishes their death, but, probably, to test their loyalty, and even more to implicate them in his designs.

9.—Ye be righteous, &c.—"'Ye are just, and can judge aright. Judge between me and the party of Ahab who accuse me. I indeed slew my master, but they have slain these seventy youths.' Jehu unfairly keeps back the fact that he had commanded the execution."—Sp. Com.

14.—Neither left any of them.—"These princes were descendants of Ahab, through Athaliah, and so included in Elijah's sentence."—Idem. This was true, at least of some of them. Again we trace the evil that resulted from the marriage of the son of godly Jehoshaphat with a true daughter of Jezebel.

15.—Jehonadab the son of Rechab.—"He is to be regarded as the patriarch of the Rechabites, since he prescribed to his sons for all time to come, to dwell in tents, to till no ground, and to abstain from wine, which rule they held so sacred that the prophet Jeremiah held them forth as an example, . . . and was able to promise them, in return for their faithful adherence to their father's injunction, exemption from the calamities of the Chaldee invasion (Jer. xxxv.)."—Keil. He belonged to the nomadic tribe of Kenites, to which Hobab, father-in-law to Moses, also belonged.

17.—According to the saying of the Lord.—Jehu did God's will, and for that he is rewarded (see ver. 30); but he did it selfishly, with no true desire to please God. For this he is punished in his posterity (see Hos. i. 4).

SATURDAY, SEPTEMBER 4.—2 KINGS XI.

In this chapter the woeful consequences of Joram's marriage is still more clearly seen, working both in the second and third generations.

1.—Athaliah, &c.—"She had inherited the spirit of Jezebel, her mother. As wife of Joram and mother of Ahaziah, she had guided the policy of the Jewish kingdom; she had procured the establishment of the worship of Baal in Judea (2 Kings viii. 18, 27), and had maintained a close alliance with the sister kingdom (2 Kings viii. 29, x. 13). The revolution touched her nearly. . . . The death of Ahaziah deprived her of her legal status in Judea, which was that of queen mother, and transferred that position to the chief wife of her deceased son. . . . But her hereditary spirit asserted itself. Instead of yielding, she resolved to become the assailant. Exterminating the family of David, she seized the throne."—Sp. Com.

3.—And Athaliah did reign over the land.—"We gather incidentally from 2 Kings xii. 5—12, compared with 2 Chron. xxiv. 7, that Athaliah used her power to establish the exclusive worship of Baal through the kingdom of Judah, and to crush that of Jehovah. She stopped the Temple service, gave over the sacred vessels of the sanctuary to the use of the priests of Baal, and employed the Temple itself as a quarry from which materials might be taken for the construction of a great temple to Baal, which rose in the immediate neighbourhood." —Idem.

12.—And gave him the testimony.—Omit "gave him" and read "put upon him the crown and the testimony." The "testimony" was "the Book of the Law," kept in the Ark (Deut. xxxi. 26), which was placed on the boy's head by Jehoida to show, probably, as Stanley suggests, "that the king was not to be above, but beneath the law of his country."

North-East London Gospel Mission—(Holiday Home) Moffat, N. B. £1; North Wales, 5s.

MAIDSTONE.—"The People's Mission," organised for unsectarian evangelistic work on Gospel lines in this town has been hitherto entirely supported by the voluntary offerings of the workers. The work has steadily progressed, and been extended, during the year, under the leadership of Rev. T. H. Carstairs. Some sixteen meetings are held weekly, as well as open-air services in adjacent villages where no special effort has hitherto been made, in a persistent and methodical manner. There are many small places in this county where the only services are those of the church on Sundays. These we are endeavouring to reach by a systematic effort. Will some of your readers help us to purchase a tent to hold about 200 people, which, with lamps, would cost about £20? Many young men are anxious to enter into the work and be trained for village missionaries. Any gifts will be gratefully received and acknowledged by Mr. J. Leaver, corn merchant, High-street, Maidstone; or, Rev. T. H. Carstairs, 46, Hardy-street, Maidstone.

Morgan & Scott's Publications

Searching the Scriptures,

In Order to Abiding Communion with God.

Also Suggestions for Bible Reading and Study; and a Plan for Consecutive Daily Readings. By Dr. Anderson, M.R.C.S. Cloth, bevelled boards, 3s. 6d. Second Edition.

"Full of valuable thoughts, tersely expressed; evinces a thorough acquaintance with the original tongues; and contains many practical suggestions for Bible Reading and Study."—Word and Work.

Marriage and Home.

A Volume of Kindly Counsels to the Newly-Married.

In cloth binding, gilt edges, in white and light delicate tints, 2s. 6d.; Leather binding, in white, scarlet, purple, or blue, 4s. 6d. Each copy is sent out in a neat cardboard box. A very appropriate present for the wedding day; and equally suitable as a gift on the arrival of the bride and bridegroom at home.

"A pretty little bridal present, containing very sound and sensible advice." Watchman.

"A wedding gift, beautifully got up. A casket which contains within many precious pearls. It is all we could wish such a gift to be."—Our Own Fireside.

"A gem, both in print and binding; and full of wholesome counsel to those just about to enter upon the battle of life. This is an admirable wedding gift-book."—Gospel Magazine.

Bogatzky's Golden Treasury

OF TEXTS FOR THE CHILDREN OF GOD.

A Series of Scripture Texts and Meditations for Every Day in the Year.

Cheap Edition—Cloth back, 2s.; Toned paper, cloth boards, 2s. 6d.; Presentation Editions—Leather back, leatherette sides, gilt edges, 3s. 6d.; Whole bound in leather, gilt edges, 5s.

"Bogatzky's Golden Treasury" has been translated into nearly all European languages, and has obtained an enormous circulation in Germany and Great Britain. In this country very few books except the "Pilgrim's Progress" have been so largely circulated or so widely read.

"Out of Egypt."

A Series of Addresses and Bible Readings on the Exodus of Israel, and its Spiritual Lessons.

By Rev. Dr. Pentecost. Tinted covers, 2s.; Cloth limp, 2s. 6d.; Cloth, bevelled boards, gilt edges, 3s. 6d.; Parchment binding, suitable for presents, 5s.

"Dr. Pentecost's power as a teacher and expositor of the Word is anew displayed in these Addresses."—Word and Work.

The Tabernacle, The Priesthood, and The Offerings,

With the Spiritual Lessons derived from the Ritual and Ceremonies of the Old Dispensation.

By Henry W. Soltau, Author of "The Holy Vessels of the Tabernacle," &c. With four beautiful Coloured Illustrations and numerous smaller Engravings, and Memoir of the Author. Cloth, 5s.; Cloth, bevelled boards, gilt edges, 6s. Cheap Edition (without Coloured Plates), tinted covers, 3s.

"The book is full of teaching, spiritual and far-reaching; and we have much enjoyed reading it. The work is a good five shillings' worth." The Sword and Trowel.

THE 5s. EDITION OF

Cruden's Concordance to the OLD AND NEW TESTAMENTS.

The Special Feature of this Edition is the New Translation of the Proper Names of the Old and New Testaments, with their Meanings in the Original Languages.

By Rev. Alfred Jones, M.A., Author of "The Proper Names of the Old Testament Scriptures, Expounded and Illustrated," &c. Presentation Edition, handsomely bound in cloth, 7s. 6d.; Library Edition, half bound in leather, 10s. 6d.; Illustrated Edition, with Twelve exquisite Steel-plate Engravings, and Six Coloured Maps, cloth gilt, 10s. 6d.

"This large and most useful book for five shillings. . . . We need not say a word to commend Cruden's priceless work. Young men can now for a crown purchase a new copy of the best Concordance; whereas not long ago we thought ourselves fortunate if we could pick up a second-hand copy at that rate." Rev. C. H. Spurgeon, in The Sword and Trowel.

Foxe's Book of Martyrs.

A Complete and Authentic Account of the Lives, Sufferings, and Triumphant Deaths of Primitive and Protestant Martyrs in all Parts of the World.

By John Foxe. With Twelve full-page Illustrations. Complete in one handsome volume, cloth boards, 1083 pages, 10s. 6d.

"Messrs. Morgan & Scott deserve most cordial thanks for the production of this noble edition of a noble book; and we are specially pleased to observe that the aid of pictorial art has been invoked to attract to the volume the attention of the young. Only let this book have a place in every British home, and we may smile at the efforts of Rome and of the Anglican ritualists to undo the blessed work that was achieved for our nation and the world by the thousands of faithful witnesses to the truth who, in dark days of priestly domination, resisted unto death."—Christian Leader.

By Rev. E. Payson Hammond, M.A.

Gems of Praise.

A Choice Collection of 288 Hymns and Tunes suitable for Gospel Services, Prayer Meetings, Sabbath Schools, Christian Associations, and Family Worship.

Words only—Paper covers, 1d.; Cloth, limp, 2d.
A large number of both Hymns and Tunes are original.

"We have much pleasure in calling attention to this book, containing many new hymns and tunes which are certain to become favourites wherever known." Word and Work.

The Conversion of Children.

By Rev. E. P. Hammond, the well-known American Revivalist and Children's Preacher. Tinted covers, 1s. 6d.; Cloth limp, 2s.; Cloth, bevelled boards, 2s. 6d. New Edition.

"We devoutly wish that by some means or other a copy could be placed in the hands of every Sunday-school superintendent and every pastor of a church." Penuel.

"We are quite sure that this book is well calculated to encourage effort, and stimulate the Church to diligence in this direction."—The Methodist.

Gathered Lambs.

Showing how Jesus, the Good Shepherd, Laid Down His Life for us; and how Little Children have been Gathered into the Fold.

That Little Bow of Blue.

IN FOUR VERSES.

(Reprinted from THE CHRISTIAN.)

My heart was very heavy, for my children cried for bread;
I wept to see my little ones go supperless to bed;
I listened for a footstep, as I'd often done before,
Waiting for a staggering man to stumble through the door;
But his step was firm and steady, and his eye was clear and true,
And on his ragged coat he wore a little bit of blue! Extract.

SPECIAL CHEAP EDITION.

Unabridged.

With Portrait. In Tinted Covers, 1s

Neatly done up in Limp Cloth, 1s. 6d.

"It is the record of a life as strange and eventful as it is impressive and instructive. A more perfect knowledge of such a life cannot fail to strengthen the faith of some and to inspire the zeal of others. The book, apart from its value as a beacon to warn and a light to guide, is studded with passages of beauty—word-pictures, which are not easily forgotten."—Temperance Record.

"It is the most touching, thrilling narrative we ever read. Talk of the sensational in tales, novels, and romances—none of them is so stirring, or is filled with incidents of such extraordinary interest, as this life story.—Bolton Guardian.

Orations by John B. Gough.

Mr. Congreve will give ONE RECENT CASE, NOT PUBLISHED in this journal BEFORE, EVERY WEEK.

CASE FOR THIS WEEK.

EXTRACT from a LETTER of Mr. EDWIN R. HOSKIN (Author of "Hoskin's Guide to the Isle of Wight" and Manager of several Monthly Papers).

"When last in the Island I got into conversation with a young man who I found had been given up by all the doctors of his town (Romsey). He said: 'I owe my life to a gentleman named Congreve, of Peckham, near London.'—This I thought a good testimony to your practice."

LETTER RELATIVE TO CASE of Mr. HEMBERY.

The following is an extract from a letter written to Mr. Alexander Mutch in answer to inquiries relative to his case. (Mr. Hembery was under my treatment for about seven weeks.)

"My illness began with bad cough and spitting of green phlegm, soon accompanied with blood. After two weeks I threw up a large basinful of blood. I was pronounced incurable by two of the ablest physicians in the town, who could hardly credit it when they heard of my recovery. I held on to Mr. Congreve's medicine as a last hope. and it did not fail.—C. HEMBERY, BOSCOMBE GROVE ROAD, SPRINGBOURNE, BOURNEMOUTH."

CONFESSING CHRIST. WORDS BY WILLIAM LUFF.

I should like to be a soldier; but the flag I cannot bear:
I should like to win the battle; but the coat I cannot wear.
I should like to follow Jesus; but I think it would be best
I should wear my own black broad-cloth, and my own plain private vest.

AND

YE ARE CHRIST'S.

"Ye are Christ's!" oh, yes; I know it! for He bought me with his blood,
And I never can forget it, for He is my Saviour God.
In his hands I see the nailprints, in his face eternal love:
How I long to be just like Him in the Father's house above.

The above two pieces are printed on one 4-page leaflet, on tinted paper, 2s. 6d. per 100.

THE LATE

ADMIRAL SIR WILLIAM KING-HALL, K.C.B.

IF a man be upright and earnest, he is deserving of honour, whatever may be his position in life; still more is this the case when, having, by sterling integrity and manliness, attained a high position in his country's service, he uses the influence which his position gives to promote true religion and the welfare of his fellow-men.

Such a one was Admiral Sir William King-Hall. The son of a naval surgeon, he was born in London on March 11, 1816. Entering the Royal Navy in September, 1829, he served in the Mediterranean for several years, and, after some minor changes, we find him, in 1835, at Lisbon, joining the Viper as midshipman. This vessel was sent to the north coast of Spain, where he served during the first Carlist rising. In 1837 he returned to England and passed his examination for a lieutenancy. Then he took part in the Syrian war, afterwards serving as lieutenant on the North American Station until 1847. In the December of that year he was appointed Acting-Commander of the Growler, which vessel had arrived at Bermuda with her officers and crew suffering from yellow fever, her captain having succumbed to that fell disease. Lieutenant Hall had a severe attack, contracted when cleansing the vessel. He brought her to England, and his acting commission was confirmed. For a few years he was engaged on home service, and then he was ordered to the South African coast, and subsequently to Burmah. For these services he received two medals and gained his promotion as Captain. In January, 1854, he carried Sir Charles Napier's flag in the Baltic, and at the bombardment of Bomarsund he landed to receive the submission of the garrison. On this occasion he showed the kind of man he was. The Russian officers had strongly urged him not to display the British flag on the parapets, as their soldiers were excited and might shoot him, but he bravely disregarded their advice, and himself planted the colours on the ramparts.

The following year he was flag captain to Admiral Sir Michael Seymour, and subsequently carried the same Admiral's pennant in the China seas during 1857—9. In 1869 he was made Rear-Admiral, having been appointed Superintendent of Sheerness Dockyard three years previously, and in November, 1871, Admiral Superintendent of Devonport Dockyard, where he remained until 1875. He was gazetted a Vice-Admiral in 1877, Admiral in August, 1879, and was placed on the retired list in 1881. As a reward for his services, he was made a C.B. in 1855, and K.C.B. in 1871.

(From Photograph by Mr. A. Bassano.)

For many years he has been known as a temperance advocate, being led to adopt these principles by his observation of the terrible effects of drink on his crews. He was the pioneer of this movement amongst sailors, taking the pledge himself with several of his ship's company. The incident is best recorded in his own words, which we take from one of his speeches. He said:—

> When in command of H.M.S. Russell, at Falmouth, there was a great deal of drunkenness in the ship, and, in consequence, a great deal of crime and punishment. This arose from the numerous temptations which abound in that port, Falmouth being a port of call where ships touch for orders; and on one occasion I counted as many as four hundred sail at anchor at one time. The place was filled with public-houses and beer-shops, and the inducements to temptation caused much leave-breaking. At the commencement of my second year in command, the day after New Year's Day, I turned the hands up, and, with the defaulter's book in my hand, read the punishments of the past year, including many committals to Bodmin Gaol, cells, &c. More than two-thirds arose from drink. This surprised the men very much. I then said: "I know nothing about temperance, but you see all this disgrace and punishment, and misery to some of your families, is due to drink. If we give up the drink this cannot happen. If you consent to give up your allowance of grog, and avoid all public-houses and beer-shops, and drink nothing but water for the next three months, and sign your names and bring the list up to me, I will agree to give up my wine, and head the list with you. Take forty-eight hours to consider it, but when you've made up your minds stick to it." In a few hours forty-six of those men who had been most often under punishment signed the list, and we started our teetotal party. The publicans were surprised when the men landed to see some of their best customers pass by their doors, and, much to my delight, I was a witness of it. At the end of three months I again turned the hands up on the quarter-deck, and said, "I have kept my pledge; now how many of you have broken yours? You all know each other well, so there can be no deception about it." To my great satisfaction they said one and all that none had broken it, and thirty more men came across, saying, "I'll join your party, too."

When the Admiral went to Sheerness the same spirit animated him, and he was unwearying in his efforts |for the artisans. On his departure to Devonport, they showed their appreciation of his efforts by presenting him with a copy of "Kitto's Illustrated Bible," containing an inscription testifying their admiration of his consistent example. At Devonport, he was soon known as an enemy of the drink traffic and a friend of its poor victim. He established a Band of Hope for the sons of the artificers, which now numbers 300 members. At Sutton Bonnington, in Leicestershire, where he spent the later years of his life, he started a Temperance Society, which numbers 450 members, and built a hall and coffee-house, which were opened in 1883. As he himself tells us, he saw the crime, ruin, and misery resulting from drunkenness, and he felt it a privilege and a duty to work for Christ in this direction, looking for God's blessing and help. At public meetings he was a welcome speaker, bluff and hearty, but always to the point, carrying his audience with him by his evident earnestness. He was a Vice-President of the National Temperance League, of the United Kingdom Band of Hope Union, and also of the Evangelical Alliance.

During the great wave of temperance which a few years ago spread over Britain, Admiral Hall took an active part. In Leicester he was very active during the visit of Messrs. R. T. Booth and Caldwell, and by his upright manly advocacy of honouring God, won many to a better life. He frequently preached in the Temperance Hall of the Leicester Evangelistic Mission, and by his stirring stories of sea life, and of God's providence over him in great danger, delighted his auditory.

One of his last public works was his noble advocacy of Rev. Henry Bradford's cause. This servant of God had been practically dismissed from Princes-street Baptist Church at Northampton, for his unflinching opposition to the alliance, on political grounds, of infidelity and professing Christianity. Sir William threw himself enthusiastically into the breach, and, with the aid of some friends, collected £4000 to build a new church for Mr. Bradford, and those of his people who had remained faithful. In 1885 he laid the foundation stone of the Union Church, and on June 24 of this year he had the pleasure of opening the building, free of debt, for the pastor and people who had stood so boldly for the truth.

Although past the allotted span of life, his death was somewhat unexpected. He passed away on July 29, and was buried on August 2, in the little village which he had so greatly benefited and where, in his declining years, he had ministered to the wants of the people. The large number of people who collected at his grave was an eloquent testimony to the affection with which his memory is cherished, and we would fain add our tribute of respect to one who, throughout a long life, sought to serve his God and his country to the best of his ability. We can only thank God for his example, adding yet another stimulus for us to "adorn the doctrine of God our Saviour in all things."

A memorial sermon on the death of Admiral Sir William King-Hall, preached in the Union Church, Northampton, by Rev. Henry Bradford, may be obtained of the author (price 1d.) at 30, Watkin-terrace, Northampton.

Y.W.C.A., EALING.—We expect to move into our new Institute in October. We have much to thank our heavenly Father for in blessing already given, but we are looking forward to the coming winter, believing that still greater blessing is in store. We long to gather in many more young women, and to have a Home where they will always find a friend. This we expect our Institute to be, and we hope your readers will help us to make it so. (Mrs.) E. MR. MOODY'S SUMMER SCHOOL.

(FROM OUR SPECIAL REPORTER.)

Y.M.C.A. WORK.

The leading idea of this most unique gathering was the promotion of Bible study, but many accessory topics have clustered around the central theme. As I have already stated, the whole school is coloured with Y.M.C.A. aims and principles. A good proportion of the students are either engaged in some kind of Y.M.C.A. work, or are intending to enter on it, as secretaries or otherwise. It was quite refreshing to see the earnestness with which the questions bearing on this branch of work were received and discussed. Mr. Wishard and Mr. Ober, as the College Y.M.C.A. secretaries, took an active part in guiding these deliberations, and in answering the many questions put. Though the Y.M.C.A. movement has become very widely extended throughout the United States and Canada, there is still ample scope for pushing the war into unoccupied ground. It is expected that these meetings at Mount Hermon will give a strong impetus to the work of evangelising young men. The development of the work in the colleges during the past eight years has been remarkable, thanks to the consecrated zeal of Mr. Wishard and his co-secretary, Mr. Ober. These gentlemen devote the most of their time to visitation of the Colleges and theological seminaries up and down the vast extent of this country, stimulating the zeal of the student members, and suggesting fresh forms of usefulness.

THE VISIT OF MR. J. E. K. STUDD

to American colleges last winter is spoken of by the brethren here very warmly. He was enabled to do splendid service in fanning the missionary glow among the Christians, as well as in his Bible readings and Gospel addresses. At a remarkable meeting towards the close of the school, some interesting facts were given by Mr. Wishard with respect to Young Women's Christian Associations. It appears that in the past both young men and women students in the coeducation colleges have been accustomed to belong to one organisation. This practice has, perhaps, of necessity, somewhat crippled and hindered the growth of the young women's enterprise. Some two or three years ago they decided to step out and stand alone. Mr. Wishard reported that there are now eighty or ninety college Y.W.C. Associations in different States, and the movement is rapidly growing. It is designed to direct special attention to seminaries, and other educational institutions of a lower grade. After leaving Mount Hermon Mr. and Mrs. Wishard go to Lake Geneva, Wisconsin, to attend a National Convention there in connection with this work among young women. The college "boys" were greatly interested in hearing about the rising enthusiasm among the fair sex, and unanimously voted their congratulations and best wishes to be conveyed to the Lake Geneva gathering by Mr. Wishard.

THE MISSIONARY "BOOM."

This has been the event of the first Mount Hermon Summer School. I have already referred to it, but it well deserves all the notice that can be given to it, as an element of rare hopefulness for the near future, and as a complementary movement to that begun among the Scottish students through the visits of the "Cambridge seven." Since writing my last despatch I have learned a little more as to how it took shape on this mountain top. Among the students who responded to Mr. Moody's call there were some twenty who had resolved, from one prevailing cause or another, to devote themselves to the foreign field. The School had not long commenced when this devoted little band purposed in their hearts to do all they could in fostering the spirit of missionary fervour. They asked Dr. Pierson to give an address on the subject. He responded with one of his lucid sketches of the condition of the world and the progress of missionary effort, concluding with an impassioned appeal for volunteers to carry the Gospel flag into the dark corners of the earth. This fanned the fire and paved the way for what was to follow. The little band of prospective missionaries held several prayer-meetings, and had the joy of seeing their numbers swelling day by day. Then the remarkable missionary gathering, of which I spoke in a previous letter, gave a mighty impulse to the movement, leading many of those who were hitherto halting or undecided to enrol themselves in the growing ranks of missionaries-elect. Dr. Ashmore's mission speech came later on.

The tide rose day by day, until the original twenty-one had multiplied itself more than fourfold; and, finally, the number of those who took the important decision, and chose missions as their life-work, was NINETY-FIVE. One evening, near the close of the school, a meeting was held in the parlour of Crossley Hall (the large dormitory building), when many of those who had decided to go to heathen fields gave brief testimonies, explaining the reasons that had led to their decisions. These reasons were mainly three—the vastness of the need, the openness of the fields, and the urgency of the Master's call. One said he had communed with himself on the subject, and he could not discover any good reason why he should not go. A ruddy stripling told how his father had long been a missionary in a foreign land, but had broken down in the fight. He had felt constrained by what he had heard at Mount Hermon, to resolve on preparing himself as speedily as possible to go out and take his father's place. Several said they had for a considerable time cherished thoughts of mission work, but the influences of this Summer School had brought their convictions to a point, and carried them over the border line of definite resolve. It was a most soul-stirring occasion, and seemed in turn to swell still further the rising total. Many hearts were gladdened at the unprecedented outbreak of missionary interest, and it was the theme of much joyous conversation in the daily intervals of rest and recreation.

The leaders of the movement were not content with what had been accomplished; they came to the conclusion that something must be done to perpetuate and spread the flame among the thousands of young college men who had not been privileged to attend this Summer School. It was announced that a small "Mission Band" would be chosen from among the "ninety-five," who should be delegated to visit the colleges during the entire course of the next college year, and seek to impart to them some of the fire that had burned so brightly on these heights, now linked with such sacred memories and momentous resolves. A small committee was appointed to choose this band, but prayer was earnestly asked that God Himself would unmistakably designate the men to be selected for the |post of honour and responsibility.

On Sunday afternoon, the closing day of the School, a meeting was held to hear the report of the Committee. It was the last of the series of missionary assemblies, and a holy awe brooded over the company. I was never present at a more solemn meeting; it was even of historic interest. Mr. Wishard announced the result of their deliberations, and read out the names of the chosen four, stating at the same time that God had so clearly guided them in the choice, they felt the whole thing was of his arranging. Many fervent prayers followed for a special blessing to rest on the work that lies before this "Mission Band," each member of which rose in turn, and in accents of the deepest emotion, expressed his sense of personal unfitness for the task, beseeching that they might be sustained by the continued intercessions of their comrades. Mr. Wishard explained that it was partly this realisation of their own weakness that had caused them to be chosen, and the feeling of the meeting evidently ratified the choice.

It is not for me to predict the course of events for the next twelve months, but all the signs point to a large and widespread concern among the Christian young men of this American Continent on the subject of the Evangelisation of the World. In the latest issue of The Christian that has come into my hands, there is a sentence in the Notes, written on this very subject, which appears to have been singularly prophetic: "The whole world is now open to the Gospel messenger. Shall not Great Britain and America lead the way in a new departure for its complete evangelisation?" The recent stirrings at home, and this collateral movement in America, indicate that this question may soon be answered in the affirmative. Your readers will not be slack, I trust, in beseeching God that it shall be so.

THE SONG SERVICE

on Mount Hermon during these memorable weeks was a wonderful inspiration to the "fellows," as they familiarly term each other. Mr. Towner, ably assisted by Mrs. Towner, has been commander-in-chief of this department, and has displayed his well-known skill and energy in drilling the young men who have gathered from far and near. It was really something to be remembered, to hear these three hundred fresh and stentorian male throats sounding out the Gospel hymns. Mr. Towner has trained a small male choir from among the Mount Hermon boys, and these delighted the audience ever and anon with some striking piece. These were so numerous that I can scarcely particularise. Probably Mr. McGranahan's fine anthem, "I am the Resurrection and the Life" was the most effective of any. Mr. Moody declared one day that he had never heard anything that thrilled him more than this triumphant song of faith and hope.

Several new songs by Mr. Towner were sung, a special favourite being, "The way our fathers trod." It was stated on one occasion by Mr. Moody that the Gospel song on the hill had been plainly heard two miles away. The "Moody and Sankey" hymns are doubtless well known all over this great continent, but their strains will henceforth be carried into many a fresh home circle as a power for good.

Mr. Moody's fondness for this song service, as many of your readers know, is phenomenal, considering his personal non-acquaintance with music. An incident that brought this into bold relief happened on the morning after the closing of the school, just as the "fellows" were leaving for their distant homes. On the way from the Mount to the new and pretty little depôt about a mile away, Mr. Moody stopped a large contingent of them, and under the friendly shade of a roadside tree, started a final service of song. The spot was adjacent to the home of Mr. Moody's cousins, one of whom, Miss Fannie Holton, had been invalided, and unable to attend the meetings. Probably the arrangement was for her special benefit, and was quite characteristic of the thoughtfulness of the evangelist. After we had sung out with heart and voice many of the favourite hymns, Mr. Moody suddenly called on Mr. Towner for

A TALK ON "MUSIC."

The latter cheerfully and very effectively responded, giving the students much excellent counsel as to the importance of forming good Gospel choirs in all their college associations, and of studying to subordinate the music to the sentiment of the song. The need of having, in all cases, a fully consecrated leader was emphasised, and some strange facts were mentioned as to the church scandals that had arisen from having ungodly men to lead the musical part of the worship. So this Summer School was redolent of sweet Gospel strains to the "goodbyes" of the very last half hour. The only thing that came into competition with the song was the peculiar "war-whoop" of the fellows: "Hurrah, hurrah, hurrah, College Y.M.C.A., Mount Hermon!" This rang out whenever any special inspiration came upon them.

MR. MOODY'S TALKS

will linger as long in the minds and memories of the young men, I should judge, as anything they heard on Hermon's hill. His choice of subjects was admirable. One of the closing days he spoke on the best ways of dealing with anxious souls. Your readers are tolerably well acquainted with the evangelist's opinions on this vital topic, otherwise, I should transfer to these columns an outline of the address. As it is, I may content myself with the briefest summary of the leading thoughts. Every Gospel address, he said, ought to be followed up at once by an inquiry meeting. All who are interested in Christian work should be asked to stay for prayer or converse, as well as all who have the faintest desire to become Christians. Inquirers should be treated individually, and not in the mass; what will meet one case may be very unsuitable for another. Take plenty of time in dealing with the anxious so as to do the work thoroughly. The man who boasts that he has dealt with ten or a dozen cases in a single evening is clearly not fit for the work. Do not give the inquirer your own experience; take him right to the Word of God, where you can find some passage or passages that meet every conceivable condition of soul anxiety. Discriminate between cases; do not quote a gracious promise of rest to the impenitent, or thunder out the law to the soul that is already melted into contrition. In the case of a series of meetings wait till the interest is well aroused before you begin the inquiry work, so as to give it a good start. Never tell an inquirer he is a Christian because he has given a verbal assent to certain doctrines. Press the truth home upon him, and leave the Spirit of God to witness with his own spirit whether or not he is a true believer. Be very discreet in approaching those whom you wish to reach. Avoid "nagging" them, especially young men, or you may repel, instead of attracting. If you put yourself in God's hands for direction in every case He will guide you aright. Follow up personal talk by correspondence wherever possible. Above all, aim at thoroughness; it is far better to compass five real conversions than total up 500 sham ones. On many other practical points Mr. Moody gave his attentive hearers the benefit of his long and varied experience. Copious notes were taken; these will be digested and assimilated in the coming weeks and months.

Another day, Mr. Moody answered a shoal of questions on personal work, sent up by the students. They have a wonderful faculty of cross-examination, but the evangelist was equal to all the calls upon his advice. Let every young convert be entrusted with some kind of work. Begin with distributing tracts, or gathering the children together; be willing to do something. Keep clear of bad associates. Be out and out, at the risk of being considered "very peculiar." The example of Lot was held up as one to avoid, and that of Enoch commended. He walked with God in the midst of a scoffing generation; as Dr. Bonar quaintly says, God and he took a long walk one day and Enoch never returned; God liked his company so well that He took him to be with Himself. Paul was a man of one idea. If you want to have success as foreign missionaries win your spurs at home; the man who has never learned to be a soul winner at home is not fit to be a worker abroad. Do not wait for the beginning of your college year; get a school house or some other place and begin at once. Every one of you can win at least one soul within a week, if you lay yourselves out for it. If audiences do not come to you go out into the highways and byways, and "drum up" your own audience.

Here Mr. Moody described, in his peculiarly inimitable way, how in a populous part of New York last fall, he had gone out with a band of helpers and invited the street "corner men" to his meetings; this narrative was related in your columns several weeks since (July 15). The boys were greatly tickled as the speaker told how, from some of these loafers, "he heard a great many things about Moody that he never knew before." Some additional reminiscences of his early career, when he began public work by hiring some pews in a church and filling them on Sundays by his personal invitation, were received with most attentive and eager interest. Some counsel followed about directness of speech in Gospel meetings, and the importance of stopping before the people were tired out. If the students carry out one tithe of the advice given to them on these occasions, they will be heard of again before very long.

SUNDAY, THE LAST DAY,

was a full and memorable one. The six o'clock consecration meeting I have already alluded to. At ten o'clock Mr. Moody delivered his well-known sermon on "Daniel," which roused the enthusiasm of the young men to a high pitch. Who that has heard this graphic presentation of faithful devotion to principle and to God in the midst of the most difficult surroundings, can ever forget it? In the afternoon Mr. Moody again preached, taking his favourite theme of "Threefold grace" — grace for justification, grace for life, and grace for testimony. On the heels of this came the missionary meeting for designating the "Mission Band." At the farewell meeting in the evening Mr. Moody was again present, but spared himself much speaking. The time was spent in song, and in a perfect stream of individual testimonies from the students as to the blessing experienced during the course of the School. It seemed as if everyone present bore witness to some great good received—new views of the Word of God; greater delight in the study of it; revelations of sinful self, and of the grace of God; light upon the future path, and many such-like gifts from the Giver of all good. Then, last of all, Mr. Moody expressed his great thankfulness for the many mercies that had crowned the bygone weeks; and as a parting counsel told the boys that the best and only way to retain the spiritual influence they had received was to keep constantly at work for the Master.

Mr. and Mrs. Towner sang the pathetic song, "Some sweet day," and the first Summer School for Bible study on Mount Hermon was formally dismissed with the Doxology and the Benediction. An earnest wish was expressed to Mr. Moody that it would be made a permanent institution. I can conceive of nothing better fitted to advance the kingdom of our Lord Jesus Christ, and hasten that coming for which his Church longs and waits. I count it a high privilege to have witnessed the birth of a movement that is destined, I believe, to work out the most blessed and far-reaching issues.

By Monday midday, August 2, these hills, that had been such a busy scene for three weeks or more, were silent, and well-nigh deserted. That morning the great bulk of the students departed north, south, east, and west, for their scattered homes. A very small contingent remained to participate in the Convocation on the other side of the Connecticut, at the Northfield Seminary.

HOME FOR BLIND CHILDREN.—During the past year two children have left and seven have been received into Miss Rye's Home and School at College-avenue, Hackney. The children are admitted from two years of age, and the education is as much like that given to seeing children as possible. Dr. Moon's and the Braille types are used for reading, and Austin's and the Braille for writing. The girls are taught sewing. We see that a first-class certificate was awarded to the children for an entertainment they gave at the East London Industrial Exhibition. A sale of work, for the benefit of the school, is to be held in the last week of October, any articles for sale will be thankfully received by Miss Rye at the above address.

WITHIN THY GATES.

THERE are few lives more lonely than that of a domestic servant in a household, where no attention is given to her comfort, or consideration shown with regard to her needs; and unfortunately in only too many instances mistresses look upon the servants only as some one who lives in the kitchen, who is paid for performing certain duties, and with whom there need be no other relations of any kind than those immediately based upon the payment and the receipt of wages. In numerous households it is the fact that a kind word, either of inquiry or encouragement, is rarely given to "the girl" who frequently toils from early morn till late at night, uncheered by anything in the shape of friendliness or sympathy, and in many houses it would be considered quite out of the way for the employer to bestow a thought upon the surroundings or circumstances affecting the downstairs life of the dependants.

That it is a duty incumbent upon the mistress to take an interest in the well-being of the servant, no thoughtful person will doubt, but the very nearness of the duty increases the liability to overlook it, even on the part of those who endeavour, honestly and conscientiously, to walk in ways of justice and righteousness, for in these days of hurried, and, oftentimes, excited labour, there is a tendency to seek afar off opportunities of doing good which might be found near at hand and at home, and there is, therefore, the not infrequent sight of persons labouring for the welfare of those who are strangers to them, whilst, at the same time, those who are dependent upon them are left uncared for. This is far from being right, for our most important duties are invariably those which are nearest to us, and in failing to discharge these there is a deep responsibility.

There is, perhaps, no more painful reflection than that which is based upon the records of the Rescue Societies, that many girls have been led astray simply, or at any rate, to a great extent, because they were only too glad to get into the street, or to objectionable and dangerous places of amusement, from the cheerless and lonely kitchen, and because no interest was ever shown in the servant's employment of her little spare time, her dress, and her moral and spiritual welfare. The tawdry, and, in some cases, expensive and fashionable finery which many servants wear, may be taken, not only, as it frequently is, as a sign of a want of economy and modesty on the part of the wearer, but also as evidence of the want of a little wholesome and beneficial supervision on the part of the mistress, a few words from whom might have been helpful to one, perhaps at the same time, thoughtless and inexperienced. And in the same way a little timely interest with regard to the way of spending the "Sunday out," or the spare week-day evening, would keep many a girl from going to places of a doubtful kind, and making acquaintances there both undesirable and injurious. It is not a healthy feeling for a girl to have, that, toiling early and late, she is uncared for; and wise mistresses, to say nothing of Christian employers, will take care that no one who is dependent upon them is without the conviction that the house is a home, and that the mistress is a friend to whom a trouble or a sorrow could be confided, and in whom sympathy, of even a sisterly nature, would be found.

And, important as these matters may be, bearing as they do upon the temporal and moral welfare, there is yet another interest, and it is of a higher and holier kind, that of the spiritual condition and progress of those forming part of the household; and if it is incumbent upon employers to look after the bodily comfort, and secular occupations and pursuits of their servants, surely it is much more so with regard to the higher needs. In this respect, however, greater care is required, for in escaping from the sin of leaving such matters alone, the other extreme of unwise and undue interference must be studiously avoided. Opportunities of religious improvement should be afforded rather than enforced, and everything of the kind should be done in such a way as to ensure those concerned feeling that a privilege has been granted or offered, rather than a duty or a task insisted upon.

This, of course, is simply equivalent to saying that it should be carefully remembered that there is no room in work of a spiritual kind for the discourtesy which would not be permitted in association of the ordinary nature, and that into such dealings with those who are under our control and in our employ there should, if possible, be infused a finer feeling of consideration. The gentleness of Christ should always be closely imitated by the followers of Jesus, but it is never more desirable to aim at the attainment of that lovely tenderness than in cases when we are dealing with those who may have been taught, or who may have had only too good reason to regard, the religion of Christ as a thing of gloom and sternness. The very effort to do good should commend itself by its kindness, and the very heart which closes itself against force and unwisely directed interference is most likely to open before the genial influence of Christian love.

Efforts to do good in these directions are not trivial or unimportant because of their nearness, but rather the contrary, for the Saviour's command, to begin first at Jerusalem, may very properly be understood as of wider application, and as meaning that we should not go afar to find untilled ground to be made into a garden for Him, and at the same time leave untended, and over-run with weeds, the tiny vineyard of our own household, given to us that we might cultivate it for God. It was to friends and not to strangers that Jesus bade the healed demoniac tell what great things God had done for him, and though the man himself begged to follow Christ where strangers would be met, the Divine permission was refused, and the direction was given to "go to thy house."

JAMES BOWKER.

"HITHERTO."—Under the above title Mrs. Ginever has issued an account of her twelfth year's work for the orphans. The number of children in the Homes has increased from 106 to 122; some have been placed in service, and cheering reports have been received of some former inmates. Mrs. Ginever tells us that she has had a "novel" experience, having for five consecutive months of the year never been absolutely without money, and this although the year was begun without a penny in hand, and ended "worse than that," namely, a deficit of £11. During the year, the expenses at Manor-grove were £467 8s. 2d., at the Infants' Home, Tremlett-grove, £357 14s. 3d., and at Broadstairs, £506 7s. 6d. The Homes have no restriction as to nationality, and two German children are amongst the inmates, as well as some, of English parentage, from India and America. We are glad to note in this little record that some Christian friends have from time to time entertained the orphans. Friends who reside near such institutions might improve this suggestion in other directions. We cannot give details, but would refer our readers to this cheery report, which can be obtained from Mrs. Ginever, 3, Manor-road, Holloway, N.

"AS A WITNESS."

ONE who has for many years taken a prayerful interest in the cause of missions, may be permitted to suggest that it is not sufficiently observed and remembered by Christians, that the Gospel is to be preached as a witness to all nations before the end can come.

Is it not evident that evangelists rather than missionaries are the requirements of these last days? Do not men too commonly settle down in a place with the hope of being able by degrees to win converts, and establish a community of Christians, and thus plant a light that shall gradually spread through the world? God forbid that I should discourage those who do so—they shall have their reward from the Master in his good time; but if we really believe that "the Lord is at hand," we must see that by such means the perishing millions of China, Africa, India will never hear the glad tidings of a Saviour's love before He comes.

When I was a youth, a certain stranger passed through our city on foot, stopped at the corner of the principal streets, uncovered his head, and called out loudly, slowly, and distinctly, these words: "Repent! Repent! Repent!" and then passed on. Of course some said he was mad, but I can well remember what an excitement it created, and how much it was talked about. Had he given as his reason for his warning, "The Lord is at hand," and proceeded to declare the glad tidings of salvation in brief, but faithful words, is it not Scriptural to believe that souls would have been brought to Christ by his instrumentality?

Such is my idea of the want of the age, viz., earnest, faithful, apostolic evangelists, travelling from place to place in all countries thoroughly believing themselves and solemnly warning all with whom they come in contact, that the day of the Lord is at hand; then in few and simple words preaching the Gospel to their hearers, and leaving them to ponder what they have heard. Some knowledge of the language of those whom they address is the only indispensable acquirement. By such means alone it seems to me that there is any prospect of preparing the way of the Lord for his second coming. May the Lord bless these thoughts, if according to his will.

AN OLD DISCIPLE.

MR. AND MRS. C. KING have just concluded a three weeks' mission in a tent on Southsea Common. They were successful in drawing large and attentive audiences every evening to hear the Gospel, and I trust a goodly number have received lasting blessing. JOHN DENING.

FLOWERS would be most acceptable and gratefully received at the Kensington branch of the Y.W.C.A. Flowers with texts are the best way of gaining admittance into the largest work-rooms in the neighbourhood. It would surprise many who live in the country and who are surrounded with flowers in abundance, if they could see the pleasure that a few of these give to those who are confined to dreary rooms, toiling from early morn to late at night, from year's end to year's end, with little to vary the monotony of needle and thread. One member of the class (formerly in a work-room, now engaged as nurse) writing, says: "I have been looking about for wild flowers or green leaves, but cannot find any that are worth sending for distribution in shops and work-rooms. I should like to send some. The lovely flowers in Mrs. B——'s garden I should like to send, but cannot. I did tell her I could not find any wild ones, because I thought she might offer to give some, for they all die away without cheering anyone." We can but say to those who are now enjoying the lovely gardens, scenery, and bracing air, remember those who are less favoured. C. VIRGO, Hon. Sec.

EZRA AND NEHEMIAH.*

"THE re-building of the House" is the key to the Book of Ezra: "the rebuilding of the walls" to that of Nehemiah. The spiritual truth that underlies these phrases is the subject for us to-day.

I. EZRA AND THE RE-BUILDING OF THE HOUSE. The personal application of this to ourselves is made very clear in the New Testament: "Ye are the temple of God" (1 Cor. iii. 16). "In whom all the building, fitly framed together, groweth unto an holy temple in the Lord; in whom ye also are builded together for an habitation of God through the Spirit" (Eph. ii. 21, 22). "The house of God, which is the Church of the living God" (1 Tim. iii. 15). See also 1 Cor. vi. 19; 2 Cor. vi. 15; Heb. iii. 6; and 1 Pet. ii. 5. These passages point out the analogy between the Temple in the Old Testament, and the life of the Church, as well as of the individual believer, both of which are depicted in the building which was raised, destroyed, and raised again, upon Mount Moriah.

KESWICK CONVENTION TENT.

Ezra opens with the proclamation of Cyrus, in which he calls on willing-hearted Jews "to go up and build the House of God." In 2 Chron. i.—vi., we have an account of the builders and their difficulties, and also of the completion of the work and its dedication. Thus the token of God's presence and indwelling with his people, which had existed for four hundred—we may even say, for nine hundred—years, but which seventy years before had been destroyed, was now restored, and that, too, with promise of richer blessing than belonged to the former building—"The glory of this latter house shall be greater than the former, saith the Lord of Hosts" (Hag. ii. 9).

The story of the Temple, in its early glory, during Solomon's reign, in its varied condition but general decline during four centuries that followed, in its final destruction, in its rebuilding, and, lastly, in its final glory at the coming to it of Emmanuel, the Messiah, has many parallel applications. For instance, it symbolises the history of the Church or of the individual. As Solomon's newly-built Temple was filled with the visible glory of the Lord, so the newborn Church of Christ was full of the Spirit and glory through the manifested presence of the Holy Ghost. The gradual mingling of the Church and the world in the post-Apostolic and the Middle Ages — answers to the later history of the Temple. The Reformation gives us the parallel to Ezra's story of the re-building, while the Second Coming, that blessed hope of the Church, answers to that first coming which was the hope of all pious Jews.

Very similarly the story of the Temple seems to symbolise the course of many a believer's life: (1) the glow and gladness of its first love; (2) the gradual coldness and languor that followed, when frigid duty took the place of loving impulse, when things seen regained their power, the world's wisdom grew increasingly valuable and its devices necessary; the more decided declension which followed when bondage to sin, in habits and actions, was patent always to himself, and often to others, and when he gave the lying testimony to the world and to God that "the Lord was not able to bring his people into the land which He sware unto them;" and, lastly, the joyful discovery that Jesus was indeed made unto him sanctification, as he had before found him to be wisdom and righteousness. This last experience corresponds closely with the re-building of the Temple.

II. NEHEMIAH AND THE REBUILDING OF THE WALL.—Next to the book of Ezra comes the book of Nehemiah: next to the re-building of the Temple comes the re-building of the wall; and, in spiritual experience, next to the lessons taught by the one should be the lessons taught by the other. In the first we have Temple-lessons: in the second City-lessons.

(1) What is meant by the city of Jerusalem? The answer is: The whole body of believers in their relationship both to one another and to the hostile world without. "Now, therefore, ye are no more strangers and foreigners, but fellow-citizens with the saints (Eph. ii. 19). The fact that believers are called citizens implies that they jointly constitute a city. "Ye are come unto Mount Zion, and unto the city of the living God, the heavenly Jerusalem" (Heb. xii. 22). "Come hither, and I will show thee the Bride, the Lamb's wife. And he . . . showed me that great city, the holy Jerusalem" (Rev. xxi. 9, 10).

(2) What are the walls of this city? We may say, briefly, that they are the means whereby the city is defended and the foe kept at bay.

(3) Neh. i. 3 gives a doleful account of the city undefended: "the wall of Jerusalem broken down, and the gates thereof burned with fire." What picture could more aptly represent the present condition of the Church of Christ in their relation to one another and the world? Who is it that has entered the households of believers, and carried off one member here, and another there, into bondage and servitude? Who are the foes some of our churches are keeping out? What are the hostile camps into which the youth of the true Zion are so constantly enticed, cajoled, seduced, beguiled, or entrapped? As of old Assyria and Babylon were the two great foes that subdued all Israel, and out of whose clutches the little remnant returned by the reviving grace of God; so now our great foes are Scepticism and the Papacy, the Rationalist and the Romanist, the Lawless One and the Harlot Church. This is neither the time nor the place to tell you with what renewed energy and enormous supplies; in what serried ranks, well-disciplined forces, and firm determination, Rome is marching against our land. But it is so. Look round for yourself. Is there one household represented here of which you can say that no single member is touched or tainted by these evil things? Rome laughs at our defenceless position, and robs and spoils almost at will.

III. ARISE AND BUILD, "Come," said they (Neh. ii. 17) "and let us build up the wall of Jerusalem, that we be no more a reproach." If this is our utterance, too, let us turn again to Nehemiah as our pattern.

(1) Observe God's order. Ezra comes before Nehemiah: the re-building of the Temple before the re-building of the walls. We cannot invert this order, and succeed. It must be first the temple within, the heart right with God, the secret inner shrine cleansed, and indwelt of God, and then the walls without—then confidence that He will defend his own habitation. Why are the results of so much of our Protestant labour so small? It may be that we build the walls before we build the temple; we toil and strive to defend the faith before we have fully and unreservedly received it.

(2) Again, every good work was done in, and for, the Lord (Neh. i. 4, 5—11). There must be a humbling of soul before Him, in confession of sin and failure, and in claiming and relying upon his promises.

(3) When the work began (chap. iii.) what was the condition of success? Exclusion of the world from any share in the work, no dependence on the forces of the earth (ii. 20), and absolute unity of aim, method, and purpose. This building of the walls, if it is to be done here in England, can only be done by the united forces of all true believers in Jesus. What has hindered hitherto? Disgraceful and miserable enfeeblings and ruinous divisions, jealousies, and puffings up in and between those who believe in the same Saviour. It may be that only the sense of a common danger will bind us together whom love to a common Saviour has not so bound. The danger is great enough to unite all true Christians for defence as they have never yet been united.

(4) As to the method. In the story before us each built before his own house, and each ruler took oversight of the gate, and of the portion committed to his charge. This tells us plainly that our work must begin at home, and in our own circle of society. There we must each build our portion of the wall. There we must put up our barriers, that no business, recreation, books, friends, associations, or ties, be admitted that are tainted with the poison of the enemy, or that plot to gain him admission. If we are called narrow and exclusive, fanatical and Puritanical, never mind. Let us be narrow where God is narrow, and wide only after his manner,—exclusive, like Himself, when He will not share our love with the world. Then, shut in with Him, we shall hear Him whisper his comforts in reply to the taunts of the world.

(5) The difficulties. Often enemies will pass from mockery to wrath, and from open hostility to secret plots, as in the case before us. There will be half-hearted friends to discourage, and false friends to trick and deceive. But He who enabled "these feeble Jews" to finish the work, can do as much for us. The God of Moses and of Gideon, of David and Jonathan, of Jehoshaphat, Hezekiah, and Nehemiah is our God to-day. Come, let us spread before Him our need and helplessness: our need of unity, courage, and wisdom. Let us remind Him of his promises, and step out upon their solid truth. Let us commit this matter unto Him, and go out now to do his work, in his way and in his power. Let us arise and build.

THE AGAPEMONE.*

> "Know ye not that there is a prince and a great man fallen this day in Israel?"—2 Sam. iii. 38.
> "Wherefore let him that thinketh he standeth take heed lest he fall."—1 Cor. x. 12.

> "If thou be'st he; but oh, how fall'n! how chang'd
> From him who in the happy realms of light,
> Clothed in transcendent brightness, didst outshine
> Myriads, though bright!" MILTON.

MR. PRINCE entered St. David's College, Lampeter, in March, 1836, and from that time till May, 1843, we were bosom friends; nor did I ever see or hear of an individual more thoroughly devoted to God than he was during that period. From the day of his matriculation to that on which he quitted college, he was the glory of the institution, both in scholarship and piety; from first to last he exhibited such a steady, consistent, and well-regulated course of conduct, as commanded the approbation of his tutors and the respect of his fellow-students. His private life, of which I was a perpetual eye-witness, was in harmony with what he appeared to be in public. The forenoon was given to study, and the rest of the day to prayer, the Bible, and meditation. His conversation was invariably edifying; "alway with grace, seasoned with salt, and ministered grace to the hearers."

His heart burned within him to be more and more devoted to God; and what would have been tremendous difficulties to others in pursuing the same course were mole-hills to him. I never knew one who was so independent of the censure and praise of his fellow-creatures; he walked straight on, without being either checked or impelled in his path by the good or bad opinions of those who knew him.

He was unusually blessed, both in the edification of saints, and in the conversion of sinners, long before he entered the public ministry; and all who knew him previously to his sad defection from the truth can testify that he seldom, if ever, spoke without effect. He was eminently a man of prayer and self-denial; and few were more deeply acquainted with the Scriptures.

But now comes the painful inquiry: Where was the point of his departure from the truth? and when was that pernicious seed sown which has since produced such baneful fruits? I have reason to believe that even so far back as the year 1837 or 1838, Mr. Prince began to adopt false principles; and, if I mistake not, the occasion of this evil was as follows:—

About the time above mentioned, "The Life and Writings of Gerhard Tersteegen" fell into his hands, and he was enraptured with it.†

In his pursuit of holiness, a new path seemed to open up before him, and a new light to shine upon his way. I then noticed a change in him, and one which seemed to me to be for the better. Henceforward, he was much more desirous to perform the will of God, even in the minutest affairs of life; this desire increased apace, until at length he was determined to say or do nothing without a previous intimation of the Divine mind. He also became more abstracted in his devotions; so that, provided he could preserve his soul in a state of inward quiet and resignation, he did not deem it important to engage in external prayer. The Bible, too, became less his study, and by degrees it was regarded rather as a crutch or a sign-post to the ignorant and weak, than as an indispensable support and guide to every Christian in this life.

Whilst the Scriptures were thus practically depreciated, the Holy Spirit, as the teacher and sanctifier of God's people, was peculiarly magnified and exalted, and his immediate direction was sought, even in those cases in which the judgment was a sufficient guide.

For example—if Mr. Prince were about to take a walk, and there were every appearance of rain, he would not carry out his umbrella without first seeking the will of God; and, when he had completed his studies at college, he would not quit the village until he was divinely directed. Other Christians would have taken it for granted that in such cases the will of God accorded with their own judgment, but Mr. Prince now began to abandon his judgment altogether, and in doing so he doubtless believed that he was taking a long step in the way of holiness. On this principle he acted during the remainder of his stay at college, but as yet he was permitted to do nothing which made his admirers suspect that he was in error.

At length his theory of Divine guidance took another turn; and, from believing that in seeking to do God's will he ought to renounce his judgment, he came to the dangerous point of believing that he might be led to act contrary to it. The most bitter fruit of this was his second marriage, so unusually soon after the death of his first wife.

Undoubtedly this was diametrically opposed to his judgment; and it is equally certain that in taking this step he believed, not only that he was doing God's will, but also that he was bringing Him the very greatest glory.* On this principle Mr. Prince might have perpetrated the most atrocious crimes in the name and under the sanction of God; yet all this, in his view, was nothing more than absolute obedience and devotedness to God. Having pursued this course for several years, he was now induced to believe that he was under complete and conscious subjection to the Holy Ghost within him, and that he said or did nothing without his immediate direction.

This naturally led him to speak dictatorially to other Christians, and it was on beholding this result that I first began to lose my confidence in his teaching. In June, 1842, there was a meeting of the Lampeter brethren, at Swansea, for the purpose of considering the best means of increasing their usefulness in the ministry. At this meeting Mr. Prince took the lead, and minutes of the consultation were taken down. A few weeks after, each of the brethren received a printed copy of the minutes, drawn up in Mr. Prince's own language, without their sanction, and published without their consent. One of the articles of agreement was that we should unite in fasting once a week, with as many of the Lord's people as would join us. I did so; but I admitted to the meeting an individual, who, from ill health, was unable to abstain from food. To this Mr. Prince objected. I replied, that I did not feel myself bound to exclude her. He rejoined, that God had already made known his mind on the subject, and that to admit her was disobedience to his express will.

Hence I learned that the printed minutes, drawn up and published by Mr. Prince on his own sole authority, were regarded by him as the revealed mind of God towards the brethren, although they had no voice in compiling them, and that the least deviation from these rules was looked upon as disobedience to God. I now perceived that Mr. Prince assumed a new character, and I resisted it for a time; but I was so overpowered with the painful thought of being dissevered from him that I soon gave way, and yielded to his requirement. My confidence, however, was shaken from that hour, though I did not allow myself to think so; but a few months after, when I met him at Bath, what was already shaken was ere long completely subverted, for there I heard, for the first time, the awful heresy which has so recently been made public.† Still it was not till I had endured several weeks of mental agony that I could bring myself to believe that so holy and devoted a saint should be permitted to adopt such an enormous error; and yet it was only a further development of the principle which had long been actuating him.

The stage before was this, that the Holy Ghost had absolute dominion over his soul: the stage now was, that the Blessed Spirit was personally united to him, or, to use his own words, that he was "the Holy Ghost personified!" Thus, the false principle of 1837 gradually conducted him to the awful heresy of 1843; and it is easy to perceive the hand of the great deceiver in all this. That arch enemy knew that if Mr. Prince's ardent desire of holiness should be accomplished he would be likely to prove a mighty instrument of God in the conversion of souls; he therefore resolved to try his cunning in marring so bright a prospect; and he succeeded in seducing Mr. Prince to pant after devotedness in the wrong path. This began when he renounced his judgment in seeking the Divine direction; and yet it appeared to be an important step in the way of holiness. Then followed an undervaluing of the outward means of grace, such as the Bible and external prayer; then came a neglect of them altogether; next the dictates of the Spirit were obeyed in contradiction to the judgment; then came the [assertion of the] absolute control of the Holy Ghost; and, lastly, [of] His assumption of Mr. Prince in personal union with Himself.

As soon as the judgment and the Word of God were given up, a wide door was opened for the entrance of the devil; nor did that wicked spirit lose the opportunity thus presented to him, but at once walked in, took charge, and assumed the character of the Holy Ghost. Having thus obtained the complete control of Mr. Prince, he led him on step by step, in mockery of the blessed Spirit, to do and say the most outrageous things, in the awful name of God; and left him without any means of detecting the delusion, by having first persuaded him to abandon the only test by which he could discover it.

Thus fell that dear child of God, Henry James Prince, and thus he will remain fallen till Jesus signally interposes to deliver him. Alas! "The beauty of Israel is slain upon thy high places: how are the mighty fallen! Tell it not in Gath, publish it not in the streets of Askelon; lest the daughters of the Philistines rejoice, lest the daughters of the uncircumcised triumph." "I am distressed for thee, my brother . . . very pleasant hast thou been unto me: thy love to me was wonderful, passing the love of women."

And now let me address a few practical remarks to three classes of persons.

(1) Those of the children of God who are personally acquainted with Mr. Prince, and are deeply afflicted at his fall.

Beloved brethren,—This doleful event has, in all probability, been the occasion of much perplexity and suffering to your minds. Having known Mr. Prince in his better days, and being ignorant of the false principle which was secretly working within him, you have been amazed at this outburst of egregious error both in principle and practice, and perhaps you have been utterly unable to account for it. This narrative, however, will, I trust, afford you a clue to the discovery of the hidden evil, and in some measure restore comfort to your hearts. It was not simply the pursuit of superior holiness which caused the defection of our brother, but the pursuit of it in a wrong path; had his ardour been rightly directed, it would have led to far different results. His fundamental error consisted in separating the Spirit from the Word, and consequently in neglecting to test the supposed dictates of the former by the latter.

This opened a door for any spirit to direct him, and the devil embraced the opening. Be not then discouraged in your desires after higher attainments in religion; only seek them in the right way: neither permit yourselves to undervalue the guidance of the Holy Spirit; only connect that guidance with the Word and providence of God. Finally, may you and I, dear brethren, take warning by this sad occurrence, to "work out our own salvation with fear and trembling," and to "walk humbly with our God."

Why God allowed Mr. Prince to be seduced is a question I do not pretend to solve; how He allowed it I have briefly endeavoured to explain.

[*] THE RISE AND PROGRESS OF THE HERESY OF REV. H. J. PRINCE. By ARTHUR AUGUSTUS REES, Minister of Bethesda Free Chapel, Sunderland.

[†] There is much that is singularly excellent in this work, but it must be confessed that, in some parts, it is deeply tinged with Mysticism, and, to ardent and imaginative minds, likely to prove injurious.

[*] I need hardly say that, in this remark, I make no reflection on the present Mrs. Prince, but simply on the indecorous haste of his second marriage.

[†] I allude to Mr. Deck's pamphlet, to the entire truth of which I here solemnly bear witness; and if the facts therein made known fail to undeceive Mr. Prince's adherents, their wilful blindness is without excuse.

"Oh the depth of the riches both of the wisdom and knowledge of God, how unsearchable are his judgments, and his ways past finding out!"

(2) Those who, "having a form of godliness, but denying the power thereof," are strengthened in their hollow profession by the error of Mr. Prince, as if his fall were any proof that they are not either self-deceivers or hypocrites.

My unhappy friends!—Are you right because Mr. Prince is wrong? What if he failed to attain the height of holiness to which he aspired, does that prove that all aspirations after extraordinary sanctity are vain? Will you frown on those who seek to be "perfect even as their Father which is in heaven is perfect"? Will you throw Mr. Prince's fall in the teeth of those who desire to "cleanse themselves from all filthiness of the flesh and spirit, perfecting holiness in the fear of God." Will you cast the stumbling-block of their poor brother's error in the way of those who pray and expect to be "sanctified wholly, and have their whole spirit and soul and body preserved blameless unto the coming of our Lord Jesus Christ." Is it not written, "Woe to them who are not grieved for the affliction of Joseph," and does not God say that "ye should not have rejoiced over the children of Judah in the day of their destruction, neither should ye have spoken proudly in the day of their distress." Wherefore, "glory not; and lie not against the truth," but lament with the people of God, and say, "How is the gold become dim! How is the most fine gold changed!" and follow ye after "holiness without which no man shall see the Lord."

(3) Those who make no profession of religion, and are strengthened in their ungodliness by the extravagancies in practice, and the errors in doctrine, of which Mr. Prince has been guilty, under the pretended sanction of God.

My deluded friends,—Mr. Prince is not your example, but Mr. Prince's Master, the Lord Jesus Christ. What if Mr. Prince has spoken falsely, and acted presumptuously in the name of his sovereign Lord. Is that an excuse for your refusing to believe and to perform the plain doctrines and precepts of the Bible? Is it not written there, "Except ye repent ye shall all likewise perish," and, "He that believeth not shall be damned"? Rather tremble at the thought that so talented and devoted a man should fall into such error; for, if the great enemy of souls has such power over one who is unquestionably a child of God, what can he not do with you who are still in "the gall of bitterness and in the bond of iniquity"?

It is true Mr. Prince is awfully deluded, but are not you so too? What can be a greater or more ruinous delusion than to live at ease, without suspicion and without alarm, whilst you are under the dreadful wrath of God? Is it not written, "Woe to them who are at ease"? And does not God say, "Be troubled ye careless ones, and gird sackcloth upon your loins"? Oh, be not so foolish as to make the fall of Mr. Prince a stumbling-block in your path, over which you will break your necks, and plunge into the pit of hell. Wherefore, "repent . . ., and be converted, that your sins may be blotted out, and that times of refreshing may come from the presence of the Lord." Amen.

BIRMINGHAM GOSPEL TEMPERANCE MISSION.—The report for the sixteen months ending December last shows that this Mission is working vigorously in this centre of Midland life. Forty-seven missions have been held—thirteen in co-operation with the Church of England, eighteen with Nonconformist bodies, and sixteen on neutral ground. Altogether, including seventy meetings for children, there had been an aggregate of 482 gatherings, and no less than 10,000 pledges had been taken. The work thus done has been well followed up by systematic visitation (a very important point), there being in the various districts no fewer than 130 visitors, whose reports prove how great is the evil to be opposed, and how much blessing may attend such effort. One visitor says she had seen and conversed with 460 women, most of whom were drunkards; but the reformation of many, and their consistent, godly lives form the bright side to a picture otherwise dark indeed. The offices are at Lancaster-buildings, Corporation-street.

ILÁHÍ BAKHSH, THE CHRISTIAN LEPER.

MANY friends will have heard me speak of Iláhí Bakhsh, the blind leper, and tell of his wonderful testimony to the power of Christ to heal the sin-sick soul, and comfort the broken heart. He was an inmate of the Ambala Asylum, in the Punjab, where I knew him for many years. Originally a Mahommedan, he became a Christian about twenty-five years ago, and he has proved a consistent, earnest, and devoted follower of the Lord Jesus Christ; he never tired of speaking his praises, and has been the means of leading many others to the Saviour he himself loved so well. Now that he has completed his course, and entered upon his rest, the following extracts will, we think, interest our young friends. They are taken from letters and reports written within the last few years; the latest, just to hand, tells of his happy death.

1881.—"The most interesting character we have at present is a blind leper, who for some years has led the singing at the services, but now for almost a year has been unable to leave his room to unite with the others. Deprived of this privilege, he has employed his time, alone upon his bed, in composing hymns to the praise of Christ. Not a word of these is written; but the lepers soon learn them from him, and take great delight in singing them."

1882.—"I was very much interested in seeing once again an old man who was in the Asylum when I first knew it; but, oh, what terrible ravages the disease had made upon him! He had become quite blind, and so helpless that he could only crawl out in front of his little hut. He is a true Christian, and, notwithstanding his great suffering, bears a grand testimony to the power of Jesus to seek and to save even the poor outcast leper. His words were: 'Since I trusted Christ, nineteen years ago, I have known neither pain of body nor pain of mind.'"

1883.—"One old man whom the disease has made blind always answers in cheerful tones that all is well with him. One day I found him with worms in one foot, and a small wound in the other where it had been eaten by rats without his knowing it, and as he began telling me his troubles I thought that at last he was going to complain, but he finished up by saying that God had been very good to him. Another time he suffered intensely with a thorn in his foot day and night for sixty days, and still would not complain. Their hands and feet may be eaten by rats while asleep, and they know nothing of it till they wake up; and in walking thorns can run into their feet and be broken off without their knowing it, till they begin to suffer pain from it a day or two later. One day, when I found him doubled up on his bed, rocking to and fro, and groaning with pain, I thought he surely would murmur at his lot, and ask why it must be so, but he only said, 'My pain is very great, but God is merciful and kind to me.' He is the same one that I have before mentioned as composing hymns to the praise of Christ, which the lepers delight to sing. His influence over them all is very great, and although they receive lessons daily, and sometimes twice a day from someone connected with the Mission, whatever they seem to know and understand best, they say they have learned from Iláhí Bakhsh who goes over and over with them the many Bible truths he has stored away in his memory. The last time the Lord's Supper was administered to them, I noticed, for the first time, the perplexity of the old blind man as to which of the stumps of hands held up before him, the piece of bread had been laid in. A man standing by told him to eat, and still he hesitated till someone told him which hand the bread was in."

1885.—"The old blind leper continues to bear his hard life patiently, with Christian resignation. He grows weaker each year, and has become so thin that there seems to be little left of him."

Here is the last extract, written a short while after the above, but only just come to hand:—"Iláhí Bakhsh, the blind leper, who has been frequently mentioned in the reports of the Leper Asylum, died in November. He died rejoicing to the last in the faith that had comforted him through many years of great suffering, and helped him always to be cheerful and contented. He was one of the first at the Asylum to receive baptism, and has been a leader and teacher among all the inmates, being loved and respected by Hindus and Mahommedans, as well as Christians. His love for Christ was such as to be a joy and comfort to him during the many hours he necessarily spent alone, shut out from the world about him as he was, not only by his loathsome disease, but also by his blindness, which was caused by the leprosy."

I am sure our young friends will not forget these poor lepers and their sad lot, and, while they thank our heavenly Father, who has given them so many blessings, they will do what they can to make the lepers' life more bright, and to tell them of the Saviour who loves the despised sufferers.

OUTDOOR PREACHING.

MEETINGS in the open air have been very common in America, especially in sparsely-settled regions not well provided with public buildings. In such places preaching in groves, camps, and tents is common in the warm season; but preaching in the public places of cities and towns has been looked upon with some disfavour, and in some of the larger cities it has been hindered, if not suppressed. This state of things has long been regarded as an evil to be remedied, and in the summer of 1885 Mr. H. L. Hastings, the editor of the American Christian, undertook to preach the Gospel upon Boston Common, in accordance, as he believed, with constitutional right, and the fundamental law of the land, though in contravention of the provisions of a city ordinance, which, under the administration of dram-selling officials, had been used to suppress the preaching of the Gospel upon the public grounds of the city.

As a result, Mr. Hastings and other prominent preachers were called into Court and fined. Some of them compromised with the officials, by paying their fines, but he deemed the matter of sufficient importance to agitate it through the public Press, and carried it up to the Supreme Court of Massachusetts, and also that higher court of public opinion which rules judges and makes laws. The Judges sustained the disputed ordinance as constitutional, and, as the defendant was sentenced to "stand committed" until fines amounting to some eight guineas were paid, the city authorities had the high honour of locking up a minister in Charles-street jail, for preaching the Gospel and reading the Word of God upon Boston Common.

From his cell in the jail, before his fine was paid and his release secured, he addressed a communication to the members of the legislature of the State of Massachusetts, which was reprinted in the most prominent religious papers, and circulated far and near. The general sentiment of the religious and respectable secular press rebuked the zeal of officials whose activity in suppressing the preaching of the Gospel was quite in keeping with their neglect to punish the illegal sale of strong drink, and, as a result, the authority to grant permits to preach on the common is now, by a change in the city ordinance, lodged in the hands of the Mayor, who professes his entire willingness to grant permits to preach on Boston Common to all preachers who are endorsed by any responsible religious body; and, while granting permits to such parties, the authorities do not at present see fit to interfere with orderly parties who preach there without such permits.

In consequence of this agitation a wide interest has been awakened in the subject of outdoor preaching, and there is probably ten times as much preaching in the open air in the towns and cities around Boston as ever there was before. So the things that have befallen us have turned out to the furtherance of the Gospel, and it is confidently hoped that great and lasting good will result.

MARYLAND POINT MISSION.—The report of this little work for the year ending June shows that its various agencies are actively at work. They include Gospel meetings on the Lord's Day and week evenings, temperance meetings, children's services, Sunday-school, mothers' meetings, &c. Open-air meetings are held at Maryland Point, and have an attendance of about 300 persons on Sunday evenings. Copies of the report may be obtained from the secretary, Mr. J. Stabb, 6, Norcott-road, Stoke Newington, N.

FRIENDS' SCHOOLS, BIRMINGHAM.

It is no doubt lamentably true that too large a proportion of the members of the Society of Friends are content to have very little spiritual life and energy, but it is very satisfactory to know that there is still a good work, a right good work, being carried on under the auspices of "The Society." No one who has had the privilege of inspecting the "Friends'" Schools at Birmingham could fail to be struck with the extent of the work, and with the importance of the influence which such a work might exercise on the moral and spiritual character of the lower classes in the locality.

Where in the world will you find scores of gentlemen, on Sunday morning, who are willing to leave their homes between six and seven o'clock, join together for a united breakfast at seven, and open their schools at the very early hour of 7.30? And yet this is being done every Sunday in Birmingham, and has been for thirty or forty years!

The Severn-street Schools have about 700 adult men under religious instruction every Sunday for about two hours; but besides this school there are about a dozen branch schools in various parts of the town, so that the total number of adult scholars is not much under 4000. Besides these male schools, there are some hundreds of females also receiving instruction from some of the women Friends.

Fancy the effect this must have, if the right influence is used; what an ingathering of souls ought to result! Fancy what material there must be amongst these thousands of men for aggressive evangelising! Fancy all these men, or a small portion of these men, animated with the same spirit that animated George Fox and the early Quakers! Yet the same spirit is the same spirit. How is it then that we don't hear more of the work of the "Friends" in Birmingham? The work when looked at is splendid, but to look at it one must be on the spot. We want to hear it, we want it to make itself heard in a voice which shall reverberate all through, not only this realm, but through the wide world. Why shouldn't it? Why doesn't it? Four thousand men! What an army! What a crowd of brawny Boanergeses there must be hidden here! Why don't they get drawn out? Why don't they get set to work? It is true that mission services are held on Sunday evenings in connection with the schools, in which some of the teachers and some of the scholars take part, but how is it the sound of these services does not swell out all over the land? Have the Quakers thousands of men under instruction in London, in Liverpool, in Sheffield, in Manchester and in other large towns? If not, why not? Would they not soon have them if the Birmingham voice was louder. What is the use of a powerful voice, if it is not used? What is the use of an enormous power for good, if it is not worked?

We rejoice to recognise that there is an immense nucleus in these Friends' Schools, but it appears to require heating, quickening, so that the splendid material at hand may be put to the best use, and that it may be made reproductive. The great lesson ought specially to be laid before the scholars, that as soon as a man has himself received the benefits of salvation, he should go and tell someone else. We trust we may soon hear that some of the more energetic amongst the teachers have organised some system by which they, assisted by the most spiritual amongst the scholars, may go out into the numerous highways of Birmingham, and not be content with merely coaxing them to come in, but carry out the Lord's commands, and compel them, even at the sacrifice of some of the quiet respectability which is so characteristic of the "Friends," and which secures for them the good word of the world at large. The Master says, "Woe unto you, when all men speak well of you;" and it is well to bear these words in mind when we shrink from incurring opposition. The "Friends" in Birmingham are to be congratulated on the success of their schools, but this very success brings with it a vast responsibility, that the latent force at their command be put to the work for which it is so capable.

MISS MACPHERSON IN CANADA.

We have just experienced the happiest and most prosperous voyage of all the forty-nine across the Atlantic, during these past sixteen years, accompanying the little ones. More and more we realise the great need of personal supervision every hour of the journey. Drink and its attendant evils seem worse at sea, as time hangs heavy.

It is only twelve days since we sailed from Liverpool, and now we are enjoying rest after toil, making dear Mrs. Merry's heart rejoice over these happy orphans. One more week we spend together in this lovely spot, sowing the seed, and thanking God for all his gracious loving care over us while on the sea.

Those who are blessed with virtuously married children can guess our joy while waiting for the train at Toronto, to be accosted by an old boy, now the happy father of three children. Our song of praise was complete, as we knew that these precious young souls were being reared in a Saviour's love. His news was that C. B. (of Ratcliff-highway memory, sixteen years ago) had just been married, and he had been best man at the wedding.

The first application, too, touched our heart. The good man had come a long way to find a Scottish lassie for his Scotch wife. His last, whom he had had from the Home eleven years ago, was just about to be married, and they would like Jeannie's place filled, ere she left them.

As we passed through, Ontario looked grand, with its fields of waving, golden corn being reaped in every direction. What is wanted? Industrious people who will like to sow and reap, and enjoy a peaceable life. What is the cry of the market just now? More "red wheat." Why is it that men prefer being cooped up in cities, when means of life lie within twelve days' journey of them, and a ready market for all they can produce?

If ladies could only induce sons of struggling families to entrust them with the beer and tobacco money for a year, they could easily pay their own fare. Many on board were thus going out to friends already settled. April and May are the best months to come.

We met, along the line of railway, good men who were deploring the deadness of the churches and the Y.M.C.A.'s. On asking them if they ever met to ask for a special outpouring of the Holy Spirit, they said, "No, not for that specially." They had wearied themselves devising new attractions, in order to bring young men together. We suggested trying to lead them forth to know the joy of a life wholly given up to the Lord. Beloved, pray for us. Though weak and unworthy, we would be used in lifting up the needs of China and India whilst in Canada, so that many may be stirred up to begin at home, and in due time be called forth to the foreign field.

REQUESTS FOR PRAYER.—For blessing upon the Dominion of Canada during the ensuing fall and winter, especially upon the villages and country places.——On behalf of a deputation from the British Society for the Propagation of the Gospel Among the Jews to the churches of Canada and the United States, to endeavour to awaken an interest in the conversion of the Jews.——For blessing on evangelistic meetings at Kilburn.——For blessing on a special effort of the members of a branch of the Y.M.C.A., at one of our watering-places, to render more active service for God than in time past.

HIS HAND HATH LED ME.

Once I thought to make my future
All of God's and none of mine,
Prayed with earnestness and fervour,
"Thrill it with the life Divine:"
But I never thought of saying,
"Not my way, O Lord, but thine."

So, the plan of grand achievement,
"All for Christ," born in my thought,
Waited in uncertain dimness,
With the ends for which I sought,
Till despairingly I murmured,
"Vainly serving—nothing wrought."

I had hoped that greater service
Nearer would my Saviour bring;
And the pathway gleam with glory
From the presence of my King.
Whilst I did my whole known duty,
Still I worked on wondering.

Though I gave up ease and pleasure,
Still my heart, unsatisfied,
Felt that there was something lacking,
Something from the Lord denied;
While my weary soul was longing
In his fulness to abide.

Through discouragement and failure,
Lovingly He taught me this:
That in self my work was fruitless,
That my hand must lie in his,
While I waited all his bidding,
Trusting in his promises.

Then by waters still He led me,
And through pastures grand and fair,
To the place where He would have me;
Gave me work and kept me there.
'Twas a new and strange unfolding
Of his love and grace and care.

One by one I saw them leave me,
Plans and hopes and oft-said prayers,
And a new life spread before me,
Full of peace, but many cares,
Cares that multiplied to lighten
Up my pathway, unawares.

Then I realised the sweetness
Of abiding in the Lord;
Found in promises new meaning;
Simply took Him at his word,
Hearing joyfully the message,
"All things are for you prepared."

CHILDREN'S COUNTRY HOMES.

The Sunday-school Union, which has recently entered upon the useful work of providing a fortnight's holiday for the weak and delicate scholars of our Sunday-schools, sent out its first detachments last week. On Tuesday some went to Eastbourne, where the Secretary of the Local Union has made arrangements for their comfort, and where some of the Sunday-school teachers of the town have promised to show their little guests the attractions of this fashionable watering-place. On Thursday and on Saturday other parties were sent to St. Alban's, in the neighbourhood of which, in cottage homes, the children have been comfortably located.

It is difficult to over-estimate the benefit that such a residence will impart to these delicate children from the close streets and crowded courts of our city, as it would be impossible for us to realise the joy which they will experience in the new world of delights that such a visit will open out to them. Officers and teachers of connected schools desirous of sending delicate scholars away should apply to the secretaries of the local auxiliaries. The parent committee undertake to pay 5s. toward the cost of each child for a fortnight, which is only 10s. The other five must be contributed locally, as must also the railway fare at reduced rates, which latter the parents in most cases will be expected to provide. Contributions will be gratefully acknowledged by Mr. A. J. Scrutton, Hon. Sec., 56, Old Bailey, E.C.

BISHOP TAYLOR IN AFRICA.

BISHOP TAYLOR, who started out to evangelise Central Africa a year or two ago, writes from the Congo under date of June 8 to the American Christian Advocate as follows:—Our people in South Central Africa, now numbering 55, are all well, and full of hope and zeal in their work for God in this most needy and difficult field. The drought and famine continue through this year, as we were told last year would be the case. Eight years of adequate rain-fall and then three years of drought are the order here. This is the third year, which puts the reaping time far into the fourth year. To meet this emergency we ordered food supplies from home for our last year's workers as well as for the new ones this year. This double supply, together with passage money, carpenter's tools, farming implements, sugar-cane crushers, portable mills, &c., for our industrial schools, have summed up an aggregate cost of about 16,000 dollars. To establish self-support in five years would not suffer in a comparison with any other missionary movement on the face of the earth, but we can do it in from one to three years, save, perhaps, a few dollars for medicines and a few articles not to be had here, and some marketable products resulting from our industrial schools in a short time pay for every import required. I left two ladies and one man to assist our French brother, Perriot, at Mamba, 17 miles up the river from Mayumba, and three young men to open a mission at Kabinda, five hours from the Congo mouth, a very good place for a station. Sent three married couples and four children to Angola, and have one married couple and eight young men to accompany me to the upper Congo and Kassai. All are in good health and rejoicing in the privilege of going with Jesus on such an expedition of love and mercy to the perishing people of Africa.

BIBLE STUDIES.—27.

II.—JONAH REPENTANT.

v. 1.—Prayer may be offered anywhere; there is no need of an oratory. The fish's belly, the den of lions, the fiery furnace, the prison dungeon, the dens and caves of the earth have been the meeting-places of God and men.

> Where'er they seek Thee, Thou art found,
> And every place is hallowed ground.

v. 2.—"I cried by reason of mine affliction unto the Lord." Many a child, who would not keep by the Father's side, has been brought back to Him by a thorn in the hand. "Thou in faithfulness hast afflicted me" (Ps. cxix. 75).

v. 3.—"Thou hadst cast me into the deep:" cf. chap. i. 15. "They took up Jonah, and cast him forth into the sea." But he recognises that they are simply the instruments; God's hand is behind theirs. Oh the rest of throwing over secondary causes, and seeing Him in everything! "Thy billows . . . over me," but yet "Underneath are the everlasting arms" (Deut. xxxiii. 27).

v. 4—7.—As Jonah realises God's hand upon him he stays his soul on God's faithfulness, probably remembering Solomon's prayer (1 Kings viii. 38, 39).

"When my soul fainted." The word here used for faint is "to be feeble from hunger and thirst." Faintness of soul is often the result of want of communion, of feeding upon Christ in the heart. Jonah tried the right remedy when he thought earnestly upon the Lord, for "they that wait upon the Lord shall renew their strength" (Is. xl. 31).

v. 9.—Praise in anticipation of deliverance. Jonah is so strengthened by prayer that he is led on to praise. See the victory of praise (2 Chron. xx. 21, 22). Sacrifice is here connected with thanksgiving, not with gloom, as is too often the case with us.

v. 10.—God honours his faith, and gives deliverance; the purpose of the trial is accomplished, and he is set free. "He doth not afflict willingly, nor grieve the children of men" (Lam. iii. 33). The refiner watches till the fire has done its work (Mal. iii. 3), and we could not afford to lose one moment of the discipline. "If they had halted anywhere—if He had taken off his hand, and let them stray back—what would they not have lost? What forfeits in the morning of the resurrection?"

Streatham. JANET CLARK.

GIVE HER THE BIBLE.

"WE owe a very great deal to Ireland," said the late Earl of Shaftesbury, at a meeting of the Scripture Readers' Society for Ireland, of which he was President. "Give her the Bible," said the Duke of York some time ago of the fair sister isle. We should all remember the beautiful land so near to us, agitated in many parts by dissension, down the highways of which the messengers of the Gospel are passing unthreatened, unimpeded, unfearing. Captain Kearney White, 27, Lower Pembroke-street, Dublin, is the secretary of this Society. He was formerly on coastguard duty in the West of Ireland, and two of his coastguards are under him still, imbued with his own earnestness. A friend, long engaged in evangelistic work in Ireland, relates a most striking incident in his own experience. He was driving into Co. Kerry, when something seemed forcibly to bid him take another road. The warning would admit of no denial, and accordingly he turned about. By and by he met a very old man, with long grey hair, who had for some time been in the deepest anxiety about his soul, and who soon betrayed his inward feelings to Mr. Quarry, as the latter greeted him pleasantly while the pony was feeding. "I have been to Killarney, and spent a lot of money," he said, "but my soul has been a trouble to me for years, and I can't get rid of the burden." The evangelist told him simply what the Lord had done for him, and knelt by the wayside, and prayed. "Glory be to God!" exclaimed the aged pilgrim, "now I know why I was sent outside to-day. I have not been so far for two years; but while I sat by the fire I felt three times distinctly some bidding to go up the road. It seemed as if a voice directed me here. God has sent us here to meet each other!" He grasped Mr. Quarry's hand, saying, "Now I will die easy, that burden is gone!"

DUFFTOWN CONFERENCE.

THIS annual conference took place in the Town Hall, Dufftown, N.B., on August 19. There were three meetings during the day.

The first meeting was occupied with a Bible study on Heb. x. 1—25, under the following leading divisions, namely: the will of the Father; the work of the Son; the witness of the Spirit; the way of the worshipper. Leading statements were made on these topics, and in the above order, by Revs. J. Smith, Dufftown; Dr. Black, of Inverness; Dr. Elder Cumming, of Glasgow; J. Sloan, of Glasgow; and by Mr. Duncan Davidson, of Inchmarlo. This study was most instructive and helpful.

The second meeting was of a missionary character. Highly interesting addresses were delivered by Rev. J. B. Cumming, of Dufftown, on missions in South Africa; by Rev. Principal Robertson, of Calcutta, on mission work among the Hindoos; and, by Rev. Jacob Freshman, of New York, on work among the Jews in that city. This meeting was most stirring, many felt its practical power.

The third meeting was devoted to the earnest preaching of the Gospel, the chief speaker being Dr. Black, while short addresses were given, also, by Revs. J. Smith and J. Sloan.

The hall was just filled at each meeting, and crowded at the evening gathering. Many came from distances round about and went home blessed, refreshed, and encouraged. There were no fewer than sixteen ministers of the Gospel present, pastors of Established, Free, U.P., and Independent congregations. This fact is a sign of the times in Banffshire, and, indeed, in Scotland. The Conference, altogether, was a great power and a spiritual benediction. J. S.

A WORTHY TESTIMONY.—A little more than fifty years ago the East India Company, then the governors of India, issued a stringent order that "missionaries must not preach to the natives, nor allow native converts to do so." The present Lieutenant-Governor of Bengal, Sir Rivers Thompson, says: "In my judgment Christian missionaries have done more real and lasting good to the people of India than all other agencies combined."

GOD'S WORK AT NORTHAMPTON.

FOR the past thirteen years, Mr. Thomas Barber has been conducting a Mission at Northampton, specially directed against the infidelity which has rendered that borough notorious during recent years. As might be expected, the work has been arduous, but God's blessing has rested upon it, and in a measure it has checked the lawlessness of opponents. At the time when so much stir was made about Mr. Bradlaugh's admission to the House of Commons, Mr. Barber wrote a pamphlet entitled, "Ought Charles Bradlaugh to be an M.P.?' which diminished his influence and formed a basis for subsequent and better-known brochures on the same subject.

Recently the Mission has sustained a severe loss by the death of Mr. F. Mulliner, of Liverpool, and some local friends are endeavouring to raise about £70 per annum in addition to the local subscriptions to make up this deficiency, and to enable Mr. Barber to carry on the Mission as in time past. Any friends wishing to know more of this Mission should communicate with the Hon. Sec., Mr. Henry Mobbs, Fernside, Northampton; or, Mr. Barber, 36, Shakespeare-road, Northampton.

N. E. LONDON GOSPEL MISSION.

MR. AND MRS. GERALD COULTAS have been holding a very successful mission for the past three weeks at Bow-common Hall. Preparatory to the evangelists' removal to another branch of the Mission, they gave a "good-bye" tea and rejoicing meeting on Wednesday, the 25th ult.

There is little need to go into details about the deplorable condition of the "masses" hereabouts, either morally or physically, and this last meeting bore ample testimony to the facts, containing as it did, for longer or shorter periods, men and women too drunk to pay attention, and low girls, near whom it was painful to sit. But sprinkled here and there were the converts, some of whom bore their testimony in the meeting. The features of one poor man, now happily converted, bore sad evidence to the truth of his past vicious life, as wounds were still unhealed, and scars were plentiful. Helpful addresses were given by the director of the Mission, Mr. William Chorley, and other friends, and a truly bright, hearty meeting was fittingly closed by a season of prayer, wherein some made confession unto salvation.

Mr. and Mrs. Coultas commenced a new mission, at the Stoke Newington Branch, at Walford-road, on Sunday last, whereat Christian workers will be gladly welcomed during the next fortnight

THE LIVINGSTONIA MISSION on Lake Nyassa Africa, has lately been reinforced by a large party of missionaries from Scotland. The natives attend the services eagerly "by the hundred." On one occasion 2000 were present, and many times the congregation has exceeded 500. The neighbouring chiefs attend. Men and women squat together on the floor, listening with breathless interest to the story of the Cross of Jesus. Dr. Cross seems to be almost an ideal missionary. There are 300 boys in the school. Three of them are sons of chiefs; some of them were mere slaves.

MR. J. B. WOOKEY concluded an eight days' mission at the "Edinburgh Castle," Limehouse, on Sunday evening, August 22. Although the meetings during the week were smaller than were expected, at each there was distinct evidence of God's presence, and souls were saved. Mr. Wookey had a good audience on Monday, when he spoke to men, and on Wednesday, when Mrs. Wookey addressed women only, there were at least 700 present. At both meetings the speakers were listened to with greatest interest. The best came last, however. On the Sunday morning, after a heart-stirring appeal from 1 Thess. v. 23, many of God's people rose to express their desire for a full consecration of life. In response to Mr. Wookey's powerful appeal from Rev. xxii. 12, at the evening service, some hundreds remained to an after-meeting, and not a few found peace with God through faith in the blood of his Son. Many will have cause throughout eternity to be thankful for the visit of Mr. and Mrs. Wookey. Afterwards a five days' mission to men only was held at the Shoreditch branch of the Y.M.C.A., which closed on the 27th ultimo. The meetings throughout have been well attended, and much real blessing has resulted therefrom. A special meeting for testimony and praise will be held to-day (Thursday) at 8.30, at the Association Rooms, 4, Kingsland-road, Shoreditch, E.

Notes and Comments.

NEXT week we shall publish a sketch and portrait of Rev. Peter Leys.

It is very gratifying to learn that, hostilities having ceased, no less than twelve missionaries, including wives, of the London Society, sailed yesterday for Madagascar. They were specially commended to God in prayer at a valedictory service held on Tuesday. A grand-daughter of Dr. Robert Moffat is among them.

It is vitally important to obey the commandments of God: it is a great evil to multiply sins—to forbid what God has not forbidden. Some of our readers are anxious to know whether the command to Noah not to eat flesh with the blood in it, and the counsel of the Apostles to the Gentiles to abstain from things strangled and from blood, are of permanent obligation.

In connection with the Workmen's Exhibition at Paris an International Trade Union Congress was opened last week. One of the speakers thus described the economical condition of workers in Belgium.

> Nowhere, he said, was the workman so poor. Miners worked for 1s. 6d. a day; some had even worked 500 yards below the surface of the earth for 9d. a day. Near Charleroi he had known some young women descend into the pit at four in the morning, remain there till eleven at night, and only receive 1s. 6d. In the quarries, in spite of the arduous nature of the labour, 2s. was the ordinary pay. In the weaving industries full-grown men gained but 8s. a week, though at Ghent, by organisation and strikes costing some £3000, they had raised the salaries to 13s. a week. The last strike was that of some young girls who protested against the discharge of a married woman because she had not returned to the factory six days after her confinement. The truck system, also, prevailed throughout Belgium.

Other reports show a state of horrible oppression of the women and girls employed underground. An explanation may here be found of recent Socialistic manifestations.

Rev. W. Crosbie, of Brighton, says in The Nonconformist, in relation to the churches, that it is not so much the mechanics but the dynamics of religion that claim attention. He speaks to Congregationalists of the weak condition of the denomination in rural districts, and of its decadence in some towns where it was once strong, and urges deep concern, immediate attention, and humbling before God. The subject of the "Revival of Religion" is to occupy a morning's session at the forthcoming autumnal meetings of the Congregational Union at Norwich.

A letter in The Times, from its own correspondent in Rome, draws attention to the friendly relations re-established between the Jesuits and the Vatican. Holding, as the former do, the doctrine of the Temporal Power of the Papacy, the announcement is significant, and the leading journal devotes a leader to it. The impression in Italy is that by this reconcilement the Papal Court is approaching the edge of a precipice. The Italian nation has of late years been drifting away from the Church. Reconciliation with an Ultramontane party which maintains that the Church should rule society, and the attempt to find a solution of existing difficulties in a return of the Papacy to the old days of temporal power, would seem to bode issues and a conflict of which no one can see the end.

In its Notes on the International Lesson, The New York Independent could see no reason why the Greeks who wished to see Jesus should first have made their request known to Philip; and again, why Philip should have told Andrew instead of introducing them himself to Jesus. It is possible that these Gentiles may have known Philip, who was of Bethsaida of Galilee (of the Gentiles); and if not, it was natural that they should ask one of the disciples to introduce them to his Lord.

As to the second question: Andrew was a fellow-townsman, and possibly an intimate friend of Philip (they are mentioned together in John vi. 7, 8), and he was more intimate with Jesus than was Philip. For Andrew was one of the two of John's disciples who had followed Jesus, and asked Him, "Master, where dwellest Thou? Jesus answered, Come and see. They came and saw where He dwelt, and abode with Him that day." We never know a man until we have stayed in his house, and Andrew had the advantage of Philip in this respect. He it was who told Jesus of the lad who had the five loaves and two fishes, and he is mentioned (Mark xiii. 3, 4) with Peter, James, and John, when they asked Him the question which elicited the great prophecy concerning his coming, and the end of the age. There was, therefore, a reason why the Greeks applied to Philip, and why Philip told Andrew, and why, again, Andrew and Philip told Jesus.

In continuation of the story of the Spezia Mission for Italy, on which we commented last week, we learn that after the breaking out of cholera in Southern Italy, Mr. Clarke, amid the terrible mortality around him, was encouraged to devote himself to the spiritual and even physical welfare of the dying, by the application very powerfully to his heart of the words, "He that will save his life shall lose it;" and "I am thy shield and exceeding great reward." This act of devotedness has not only proved a blessing to many, but has wonderfully prepared the way for the circulation of the Word of God in Italy.

If we have abstained from commenting upon the recent rioting in Belfast it has not been because we are not deeply interested in anything concerning the condition of Ireland, but rather because we have been inclined to consider that the religious element in the unfortunate and discreditable proceedings has been unduly magnified. We are well aware that there is much sectarian bitterness in the North of Ireland, and a deep and ancient enmity between the Protestants and the Romanists; but, as in London, when the Socialists were credited with the wrong-doing of the East-end roughs, the fighting in Belfast has been continued to a large extent by the "corner boy" element, and by those who are ever ready to take advantage of popular disorder. We join a Roman Catholic contemporary in admitting that there have been faults on both sides, and no depth of religious feeling or intelligent antagonism to an objectionable creed can justify such proceedings as have of late disgraced Protestant and Romanist alike. The Christian limit of endurance ought to be a very wide one, and Christianity rarely gains by taking up carnal weapons. It is the Cross of Christ, and not Peter's sword, that will bring peace to Ireland, and if the Word of God fails the arm of man will not succeed.

Self-denial is, or ought to be, a fundamental principle of the Christian life. There is, therefore, nothing strange or novel in the call which General Booth, of the Salvation Army, has addressed to his soldiers and supporters, a copy of which is contained in each number of our current issue. There can be little doubt that most of us are by no means thoroughgoing in our application of this principle, probably for want of any specific demand for its exercise. Those of our readers who are in full sympathy with the aims and methods of the Salvation Army will do well to give a careful perusal to Mr. Booth's invitation.

We are glad to welcome a Japanese namesake. The following is cut from an American paper:—

> We have received copies of The Christian. This is a weekly paper, and it may be interesting to our readers to know that the subscription price has been reduced to yen 1.90 per annum and sen 98 for six months, postpaid. Intending subscribers should send their names and addresses to the Kei sei oha, No. 6, Takiyama cho, Kyobashiku, Tokyo. Beyond a synopsis of the religious intelligence, which is given in English, the matter is all in Japanese. Judging from the titles, however, we feel sure the contents are of the most useful character. The paper will no doubt serve to carry the great doctrines of the Gospel into many a Japanese home.

Professor Leoni Levi has, at the request of the Peace Society and the International Arbitration Association, prepared a scheme of international arbitration which is now being submitted to eminent jurists in Europe and in America for consideration and advice. There will be a meeting at Berne at an early date, for the discussion of the draft, and we ask all cur readers to remember the matter in their prayers, that the Conference may be so blessed of God as to be a means of causing wars to cease.

Some months ago we commented upon what we believed to be a libel upon the character of the pit-brow women employed in the neighbourhood of Wigan and other Lancashire coal-mining centres, statements having been made with regard to the immoral tendency of their occupation and the impropriety of their dress. We are glad to find that in an official report from the Inspector of Mines the views we expressed are supported in the following terms:—

> The question of the propriety of employing women on the pit bank is attracting a good deal of attention, and the Lancashire women especially have been subjected to considerable abuse by persons who pose as their friends. Their moral character has been gratuitously libelled, and their working dress pronounced bold and unbecoming. So far as my observation has gone, I have seen no good reason for legislation to prevent these women earning a livelihood at the occupation they have chosen: they always appear orderly and industrious, and it is a favourite employment, especially where the health will not bear confinement. Their dress is very suitable and appropriate.

The "Jordan," we are told, "overfloweth all his banks all the time of harvest." In the Harvest Festivals now at hand, would it not be well for languid and weary churches to bethink themselves of another river which ever overflows with renewing and living waters. Great Continental nations are restless and irresolute. Troubles and hidden diplomacies threaten terrible conflagrations. Among ourselves there are fears and apprehensions. The harvest is not so plenteous as in other years. The coming winter will bring suffering and perplexity. Surely God is becoming a necessity to us. A revived and quickened Church can alone meet the serious exigencies of the period.

A SELECTION from the WORKS PUBLISHED by MORGAN & SCOTT.

And may be ordered of any Bookseller.

THE GOSPEL IN LEVITICUS.

Chapters on the Old Testament Foreshadowings of the Great Redemption. By the late Rev. Dr. FLEMING, of Kentish Town. Cloth, bevelled boards, 2s. 6d. ☞ SPECIAL CHEAP EDITION, Tinted cover, 1s.; Cloth limp, 1s. 6d.

"The subject is set forth with a clearness, a directness, and a persuasiveness which leave little to be desired. Every lover of sound Scriptural theology, especially in regard to the momentous doctrine of the Atonement, will find in the book a rich treat."—Baptist Magazine.

JOHN, WHOM JESUS LOVED.

The Character, Writings, Theology, and Influence of the Beloved Disciple. New and Enlarged Edition. By Rev. Dr. CULROSS. With Chromo-Lithographic Views of the "Sea of Galilee" and the "Island of Patmos." Cloth, bevelled boards, 3s. 6d.

"It is altogether without reserve that we commend the work before us. It is not a bottle of milk for babes, but a portion of meat for men. A half-dozen readings will only make it more interesting to those who meditate upon what they read."—Sword and Trowel.

"THY FIRST LOVE."

Christ's Message to Ephesus. By Rev. Dr. CULROSS. With Chromo-Lithographic Frontispiece. Cloth extra, 2s. 6d.

"It is a heart-searching and stimulating little book."
British Quarterly Review.

"Its language is chaste and clear; its thoughts are fresh and invigorating; its tone is evangelical without being sentimental. While there is a genial warmth of devout feeling, there runs through its pages a healthy breeze of robustness."—Literary World.

BEHOLD, I STAND AT THE DOOR AND KNOCK.

Christ's Message to Laodicea. By Rev. Dr. CULROSS. Tinted covers, 1s.; cloth limp, 1s. 6d.; cloth extra, 2s. 6d.

"The exposition is fresh and original, displaying great critical skill and discrimination, together with happy quotations of Scripture. The style is all that could be desired—chaste and polished, yet full of force; here and there, as in the author's other works, we meet with passages of great poetic beauty."
Aberdeen Daily Press.

THE NUMBER "SEVEN" IN SCRIPTURE.

Compiled by S. A. BLACKWOOD, Esq., C.B. Paper covers, 1s.; Cloth limp, 1s. 6d. PRESENTATION EDITION, Cloth bevelled boards, gilt edges, 2s. 6d.

"Many other attempts have been made in tabulating the circumstances connected with the word 'seven' in the Bible, but we cannot think of any one which is so complete, so concise, and so systematic as in the small volume compiled by Mr. Blackwood. From Genesis i. to Rev. xxii. all the many times the word occurs are duly noted, and each book is dealt with seriatim, so that reference is easy. One object of the book is 'to stimulate search and to arouse inquiry,' and with this book by the side of the Bible one course of study can be made very profitable indeed."—The Rock.

CHRIST LIFTED UP.

Meditations on the Death, Resurrection, and Ascension of our Lord Jesus Christ. By Rev. ROBERT GILCHRIST. Cloth, bevelled boards, 2s. 6d.

"An earnest, practical exhibition of the Gospel under a variety of aspects. Christ lifted up on the cross, and at the Father's right hand, is the grand theme, and affords scope for setting forth a wide range of Gospel teaching. The writer does this in an interesting, while simple style."—British Messenger.

"Old-fashioned divinity presented in a pleasing form. May its readers be many."—Sword and Trowel.

LIFE, WARFARE, AND VICTORY.

Specially written for the Help and Guidance of Young Christians. By Major D. W. WHITTLE. Tinted covers, 1s.; Cloth, 1s. 6d.

"Major Whittle seeks in this little work to give instruction in Bible-reading to young converts, for their more careful study and permanent use."
Literary World.

READINGS FOR THE SICK-ROOM.

By Dr. WALLACE. Tinted covers, 1s.; Limp, 1s. 6d.; Cloth boards, 2s. SEVENTH THOUSAND.

"Will be found very helpful and profitable to the numerous class for whom the publication is designed. This little volume has the recommendation to the invalid of being printed in a clear type, so as to be easily read, and of being light to the hand, so that it may be held without fatigue."—The Revival.

CALLS TO CHRIST.

A Series of Addresses by Rev. R. W. NICOLL, M.A. Tinted covers, 1s.; Cloth neat, 1s. 6d.

"Force and freshness are eminently the characteristics of these 'Calls to Christ'; they are also brief to a proverb, and hence they may be of great service to an earnest evangelist who knows how to use another man's thoughts."
Kelso Courier.

THE KING'S PALACE.

A Series of Readings for each Day of the Month. By Rev. J. H. ROGERS, M.A. With Carmine Borders. Cloth limp, 1s.; Cloth boards, 1s. 6d.; with gilt edges, 2s. Leather binding, gilt edges, 3s. 6d. FOURTH THOUSAND.

"Its counsels are wise, loving, and direct. Its aim is to lead the reader to have a clean heart and a clean life—to consecrate all to Christ. . . . All that art, taste, and skill can do to make the theme attractive has been done by the well-known publishers. The result is that, within and without, 'The King's Palace' is simply perfect."—Irish Congregational Magazine.

NEW WORK BY A. L. O. E.

PEARLS OF WISDOM FROM THE PARABLES.

By A. L. O. E., Author of "Rescued from Egypt," "Exiles in Babylon," "The Young Pilgrim," &c. With Twenty-four Illustrations, specially designed for this Book. Handsomely bound in cloth, bevelled boards, 3s. 6d.; with gilt edges, 4s.

"These expositions of, or rather lessons from the Parables, have been written since A. L. O. E. went to India as a missionary. They were intended to aid in bringing Hindus and Mohammedans to the faith of Christ, and are written from an Oriental point of view. Nevertheless, English readers will enjoy and may profit by them. All will rejoice to receive a fresh work from the hands of so old a favourite as A. L. O. E."—The Record.

THE BIBLE REMEMBRANCER.

A very compact Bible Handbook, intended to assist the memory, and to provide in the most ready manner for referring to any Biblical incident or event. Tinted covers, 1s.; Cloth boards, 1s. 6d.; Cloth, bevelled boards, gilt edges, 2s. TENTH THOUSAND.

"A more helpful book for Sabbath-school Teachers and others we can scarcely think of."—Presbyterian.

THE BIBLE INTERPRETER.

A CONDENSED BIBLE DICTIONARY. By the Author of "The Bible Remembrancer." Containing explanations of more than EIGHTEEN HUNDRED Scripture Words and Subjects. With TWELVE FULL-PAGE ILLUSTRATIONS and numerous smaller Engravings. Tinted covers, 1s.; Cloth boards, 1s. 6d.; Cloth, bevelled boards, gilt edges, 2s. FOURTH THOUSAND.

"A Bible Dictionary of terse and pointed character, and has a valuable Appendix of special interest to Sunday-school teachers."—Christian Chronicle.

ALL OTHER CHEST DISEASES.

SIXPENCE (Post Free), or Large Edition (cloth), 1s. 3d. from the Author, Coombe Lodge, Peckham, S.E., and Elliot Stock, 62, Paternoster-row, E.C.

The Eighteenth Series of Weekly Cases is now publishing, from May to August.

NOTICE TO THE READERS OF "THE CHRISTIAN," WHO MAY BE PERSONALLY OR RELATIVELY

INTERESTED IN THIS MATTER.

Mr. Congreve will give ONE RECENT CASE, NOT PUBLISHED in this journal BEFORE, EVERY WEEK.

CASE FOR THIS WEEK.

CASE of A LADY at FOREST HILL.

The patient, Mrs. C——,* had been ailing for three years. Had been under treatment of Dr. B., of London, whose report was, "both lungs affected, and heart," for which steel and acid mixture, and opium pills for cough, had been prescribed with little benefit. Examined at Coombe Lodge by Dr. Brown, who also reported "disease commencing at the right apex, left apex weak, debility affecting the heart."

There was loss of flesh, much languor, great pain in centre of chest, back, and shoulders, irritable throat, green expectoration, short breathing, loathing of food, &c., &c.

She commenced my treatment, and continued it for two years, according to advice given, and though not a very strong woman, has since been fairly well.

Recently writing about a brother she says:—"I am very anxious he should see you, as I feel that under God I owe my life to you."

* I am permitted to give the name and address of this patient (as a reference) to any other patient of her locality.

Mission to Deep-Sea Fishermen.

Six Mission Vessels are cruising amongst the North Sea trawling fleets. 12,000 smacksmen are engaged all the year round in providing our tables with fish. These men, who for us toil through furious blasts and sleety storm—who hazard their lives and fall victims, hundreds of them, to the pitiless waves, that markets at home may be well supplied—may rightly claim some small share in the privileges we so richly enjoy and so highly prize.

THIS THEY CAN ONLY HAVE THROUGH THE PRESENCE OF THE MISSION VESSELS,

Carrying to the fishermen the message of Divine mercy and pardoning love, bringing the pleasure of books to while away the weary hours, affording relief in case of sickness and injury, and cheering and brightening dull and monotonous lives by their presence and ministry.

"The Mission smacks are doing in the North Sea a grand work, worthy of the support of a great maritime nation like England, and I believe that the results of their effort, great as they are in the present, will, if only supported liberally by the public, be of untold value in the future."—Sir Edward Birkbeck, Bart., M.P.

"The Mission to Deep Sea Fishermen is worthy the most liberal support of the public. It has done, is doing, and is likely to do, we believe, a grand work among our fishermen at sea."—The Yarmouth Independent.

"I look upon the Mission Vessel as a blessing to the trade of the Port."—The Mayor of Great Grimsby.

"It is indeed an advantage for our fishermen at sea by means of these vessels to enjoy the same privileges as we ourselves do on shore.—The Mayor of Great Yarmouth.

FUNDS are URGENTLY NEEDED to enable the Mission to place a Vessel with EVERY FLEET.

N.B.—The Offices were removed to this address in December last; attention to the change will save much trouble, time, and expense to the Mission.

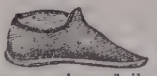
THE CELEBRATED NORWEGIAN SLIPPERS.

COMFORT, EASE, AND PLEASURE FOR WEARY FEET.



The immense demand that there was for these Slippers last season (over 2,000 pairs being sold in a single day), and the fact that all through the summer we have daily received applications from persons in all parts asking if they can still have them, has induced us to again stock a very large quantity, which we are pleased to offer at our former low prices.

These Slippers are worn by rich and poor alike, because they are easy, comforting, cheap, and answer every purpose that a slipper can be required for. We have had letters of recommendation and repeated orders from all parts of the world.

These Slippers can be had in either black or scarlet. They are made of stout felt throughout, no nails or hard leather to injure the most sensitive feet. Trimmed with imitation fur. Worn in drawing-room, bed-room, boudoir, and street. Carriage free at the following prices: Boys', Girls', and Ladies' sizes, 1s. 6d. per pair. Gentlemen's, 1s. 9d. A reduction of 2d. per pair if three pairs are taken, or 4d. per pair on half-dozen. Exact length of foot or size taken must be sent with each order, and all orders should be sent at once, as we have a great difficulty in getting them later on.

Please mention the name of this Paper when ordering.

THE
UNIVERSAL SPLASH SCREEN.

A Great Speciality by Theobald.

WE suppose that there is scarcely a house in the kingdom where splash screens are not used, and they are bought at from a few pence to many shillings. The common ones of straw soon rot and fall to pieces, whilst the best ones cost more money than they ought to. In this, as in everything else, if there is sufficient demand the price can be made right, and we beg, therefore, to introduce to the public a new of an entirely novel and attractive character. Each screen measures 35 by 18 inches. Each is thoroughly waterproof, a very great consideration. Wet cannot by any means penetrate through. They are also washable, and that is what most screens are not—directly you commence to clean them you commence their ruin. These screens can be washed thousands of times, and will still be equal to new. The background is in imitation of oak panelling, with two beautiful pictures of plush frames with medallions of fancy pet dogs in 16 different colours, forming one of the most récherché splash screens ever manufactured, combining the degree of artistic art with practical utility and usefulness. It is considered the height of bon-ton to use these screens. They have been produced at fabulous expense; but in the full expectation of an enormous demand we offer them for one month only to the readers of this paper at 1s. each, or 3 for 2s. 6d., carriage free. All orders must be accompanied by coupon, and should be sent at once.

THE PAKEFIELD CONFERENCE.

The Ninth Annual Conference for two days has been held here, the object of which is to promote growth in grace and the knowledge of our Lord and Saviour Jesus Christ. The Rev. L. Price, rector of Pakefield, presided, and a large company of clergy and other Christian friends was present, including, Archdeacon Farrar, Revs. Dr. Morgan, R. Haythornthwaite, H. G. Thwaites, C. Carteret Leathes, Uriah Davis, T. C. Chapman, J. Spencer Compton, Major Cubitt, Messrs. F. Vincent, J. R. Morse, &c., Three meetings are held daily, characterised by a very devout spirit, discussion being carefully avoided.

The first subject for consideration was the respective use of the Law and the Gospel in man's salvation, which was opened by Rev. H. G. Thwaites. He showed that the Law and the Gospel involved no contradiction, or change of plan; both proceeded from the same Divine Author, and were manifestations of the truth. The law did not create sin, but revealed sin, and was a shadow of grace. It may be described as a parenthesis in God's dealings with mankind by grace, for the earliest accounts of God's intercourse with fallen man were those of grace; for instance, the seed promised to Eve and the call of Abraham were of grace; Abel's sacrifice, the paschal lamb, the law for the cleansing of the leper, all foreshadowed the Gospel.

The afternoon subject was the power of Satan as revealed in Scripture, and how to overcome it. Rev. R. Haythornthwaite, of Cleator Moor, showed that death and destruction abound on all sides, and only revelation explains these things. Man was created good, but the devil led him into sin. "Why hast thou done this," was God's question to Satan in the Garden of Eden. Satan's work was traced by the speaker through Bible history, and it was shown that none but believers can overcome him. After the Ascension of Christ, "He led captivity captive," and we are to conquer Satan by the blood of the Lamb.

Rev. Dr. Morgan took the evening subject, "The Secret of Teaching and Ministerial Power." All Christians have power as individuals, as teachers, or as saints who realised the presence of God. The source of power is the Holy Spirit. His diversified gifts, such as faith, compassion, and humility, were unlimited, unvarying, and abiding, and must be sought by prayer. The avenues of our soul must always be open to receive and to give out Divine influence. Christ calls for the service of his people, which should be fully and freely rendered to Him. "The Master is come, and calleth for thee;" "Whatsoever He saith unto you, do it."

The second day's subject was "Christ our Prophet, Priest, and King." Rev. Carteret-Leathes, rector of Reedham, in opening the morning Conference, expounded Acts iii. 22. Jesus, as a Prophet, was like Moses, a Friend of the people, an affectionate, long-suffering Leader, a Revealer of God's word. Attention was drawn to the Apocalypse as the great prophecy of Jesus, of which Rev. ix. was taken as an illustration. Christians should not trust in man, but in Jesus as their Prophet.

"Christ our Priest" was the title of Rev. L. Price's address, who said that this is the capacity in which Christ appeared as our Saviour. None else ever thought of redemption by a substitute. It was necessary to make great preparations for such a revelation. It was taught by the type of Jewish priest and sacrifices that a great Saviour was expected, and that all sacrifices except by blood were useless. We were ruined by the work of one, and were saved by the work of another. Christ became incarnate, because the law was given to man, and broken by man, therefore redemption must be procured by man. Christ has purchased salvation for us; we get it freely. A corresponding sacrifice on our part is the natural consequence of our accepting the atonement of Christ. As priests presented animals, so we must present ourselves (Rom. xii. 1) without reserve. As Christ died to sin, so we must die to sin.

The last subject was "Christ our King." Rev. H. G. Thwaites drew attention to the fact that St. Luke introduced our Lord as the Saviour (chap. ii. 2), Matthew as our King. The world does not object to your receiving Christ as your Saviour, but all are up in arms when you accept Christ as a King. As a King, crowned with many "crowns" (Rev. xix.), his reign shall be glorious. David in his early years was a type of Christ as an uncrowned king, and as king of the two tribes (Judah and Benjamin), Christ's partial and present sway is symbolised; but Christ as possessing wide-reaching sovereignty is best represented by the magnificence and power of Solomon.

The Conference was brought to a conclusion on Thursday morning by a meeting for prayer and testimony. An address was given by Rev. Dr. Morgan on Genesis xiii. 17. Many gave their personal experience of the value of the Conference, and its aid in the spiritual life. In future, it is intended to hold the Conference annually in August.

THE GUARDIAN SOCIETY.

The biennial report of this Society, established seventy-four years ago, for aiding fallen women, states that since the previous report shelter has been provided for sixty-nine young women, of whom it is pleasing to note that twenty-five have been restored to their friends, and twenty placed in service. Altogether 3391 forlorn and helpless ones have been received into the Home since its foundation, and of these it is known that many have been raised to virtue and happiness, while some have left satisfactory evidence at death that they were reconciled to God, and have entered into eternal rest. Much has been done in their behalf, and, alas! much remains to be done. This, certainly, is no time for slackening effort either on behalf of purity or of rescuing the fallen ones. The committee, therefore, urgently plead for increased support, that the work may be efficiently maintained, the more especially as there has been a considerable falling off in subscriptions on account of deaths and removals. The asylum is situated at 21, Old Ford-road, Bethnal-green, E.

TENT WORK IN DUBLIN.—Mr. William Grove has been holding services every night in a tent in Bloomfield-avenue. It has encouraged our hearts to see many young men come and take their seats night after night, and not a few giving evidence of what the grace of God can do. Our brother, Charles Inglis, comes over in September, and we desire prayer that he may have still greater blessing. T. L. D.

COSTERMONGERS' MISSION.—On the Vinegar Ground, City-road, there is a considerable population, for whose children a Board School is being erected. Last week we met a number of the men engaged on this building, together with some costermongers, Walter Penrose having provided a tea for them at his Mission cottage. There is opportunity for a useful work here, and Mr. and Mrs. Penrose would be glad of helpers among children and adults.

SCUTARI MEDICAL MISSION.—Dr. and Mrs. Alexandrian have, as many of our readers are aware, been in our midst for some time, eliciting sympathy and help on behalf of a free dispensary and hospital at Scutari. The population is about 100,000, composed of Mahommedans, Jews, Armenians, Greeks, and other nationalities. There is a college of "howling dervishes," and it is the rendezvous and starting point of caravans of travellers trading in the interior of Asia. Dr. Alexandrian is a fully qualified medical man, and desires to devote the remainder of his life for the souls and bodies of his people. The expense of the undertaking, including their own support, is calculated at about £400 per annum. It is hoped that all who know them, and many also who take an interest in poor, degraded, miserable Turkey, will do what they can to forward this fresh effort to kindle a light amid the darkness. Contributions may be addressed to this office, or to Rev. T. W. Brown, Secretary of the Turkish Missions Aid Society, 7, Adam-street, Strand, W.C.

TEMPERANCE NOTES.

The Lancet commends the simple juice of the lemon as one of the best beverages in hot climates.

Mr. C. B. Pitman complains, in The Times, that on the Isle of Wight steamers only intoxicating drink is to be had.

At the Soldiers' Home, Woolwich, last quarter, 124 pledges were recorded, and the number during the year is 242.

At one of the Durham collieries, officials are liable to be dismissed if known to enter a public-house in the village for drink.

Mr. George Slater has erected a building in Northwich to be named the Central Hall, to hold 700 persons, and to be used for temperance and other large meetings.

The Maidstone Town Council has decided to place the name of J. B. Gough on the walls of the Council Chamber, "amongst the names of other Kentish heroes and celebrities."

The Wesleyan Temperance Committee reports an increase of 95 Bands of Hope, with 8154 members, and of 50 Temperance Societies, with 302 members. The present totals are: 3228 Bands, 326,511 members; and 358 Societies, 24,752 members.

The Irish Methodist Conference has decided that the Connexional Temperance Societies, as well as Bands of Hope, shall be based on total abstinence. Hitherto, the societies have been on the dual basis, admitting abstainers and non-abstainers.

The Douglas Licensing Court has licensed one lodging-house for the sale of drink to its visitors. Three others have been refused, but it is expected a Bill will be introduced into the Insular Legislature, to give lodging-houses short-term licences.

At the British Medical Association meeting, held at Brighton, Dr. Norman Kerr said the Habitual Drunkards Act was very ineffective, and would expire in three years unless renewed. He thought the habitual drunkard needed treatment as much as a person suffering from delirium tremens.

The National Temperance League, according to custom, invited the members of the British Medical Association to breakfast, on the occasion of the annual meeting of the Association, held this year at Brighton. Several distinguished colonial practitioners were present, which rendered the meeting one of unusual interest.

The Birmingham Ladies' Central Union and Temperance Association met recently, by special invitation, at the house of Mrs. Cadbury, and there was a large and interesting meeting. Miss C. A. Wray, of Antwerp, gave an account of her work on the Continent, and also of the objects of the World's Woman's Temperance Union.

The City Press says the new Solicitor-General is, like all the law officers of the present Administration, a staunch Churchman and an old Sunday-school teacher, and was for many years a teetotaller; but after his election and defeat in Southwark he was, by his doctor's orders, compelled to take intoxicating liquor "for his stomach's sake, and for his often infirmities."

There are about 60,000 Good Templars in Sweden, including many members of the Swedish Parliament.

The Emperor of Russia has granted the request of the Good Templars for permission to hold temperance meetings in Russia.

In spite of trade depression in the United States, the consumption of luxuries has greatly increased, especially that of intoxicants.

Mr. L. Balle, a Good Templar, in Norway, has translated and published, in Christiania, Dr. B. W. Richardson's "Temperance Lesson Book."

In the Methodist Church, Canada, there are 1500 ministers, all abstainers, and in none of their churches is intoxicating wine used at the Sacrament.

In Berlin, there is one drinking place to every 200 inhabitants. Twenty-four are under ground, and supported entirely by members of the criminal classes.

A medical man, in the United States, has cured several persons of rheumatism, by inducing them to fast for a few days, water being their only beverage.

More than two hundred intoxicating drinks are now known and used in Japan. Prior to the opening of the ports to Christian nations, there were only eleven.

"Elbe" sherry is made mainly from potatoes, and is a deleterious compound. "Bordeaux" claret has almost ceased to be a natural product, and is now almost entirely artificially produced.

Mr. Axel Gustafson has stated that what he has learned during his stay in the States has convinced him of the necessity of a national prohibition party. He speaks of the English as simply deploring and praying, instead of acting against the traffic.

At Natal, an influential deputation waited on the Governor to lay before him the wishes of the temperance body on Local Option. His Excellency could not promise to make it a Government question, but, if public opinion were shown to be in favour of such a measure, he would do his best.

On the Congo, the "Christians' rum" threatens to conquer the "Christians' Gospel." Though at the Brussels Conference their Governments were against the traffic, Englishmen and Americans send enormous quantities of poisonous spirits for sale to the natives. We hope no Christian merchants share in this.

Captain Fitzpatrick, 3rd Dragoon Guards, now at Muttra, India, says there are now 150 abstainers in his regiment. He speaks in high terms of the efforts of Mrs. Smith to further temperance and religion amongst his men during their stay at Manchester. Mrs. Smith is the wife of Rev. B. Smith, author of "Sunshine in the Kitchen," and other works, and now chairman of the Macclesfield Wesleyan District.

THE OBAN CONFERENCE.

FROM OUR SPECIAL REPORTER.

The Oban Christian Conference was held in the Free Church Mission Hall in that town on Monday, Tuesday, and Wednesday of last week. The hall served its purpose admirably; it was cheerful, well-ventilated, and comfortable. The opening meeting on Monday evening took the form of a children's service, and was conducted by Dr. Macfadyen, of Manchester, an ex-chairman of the Congregational Union. He is enjoying a brief rest in this popular Highland watering-place, and on the Sabbath preaches powerful and eloquent sermons, which attract crowded audiences. He was quite at home with the young people. His genial look and winning way of speaking seized their attention at once, and the truths he spoke kept it to the end of his address. He began by saying that he had brought a strange preacher with him. That preacher had come to the hall in a curious manner. He did not walk, neither did he ride in a carriage; he had come in his button-hole. After making this statement, which opened the children's eyes and ears, Dr. Macfadyen pulled a rose out of the button-hole of his coat, and asked "Dr. Rose" to speak. "Dr. Rose" told of God's power, of how God made him, and especially of his readiness to be plucked. It was this last truth which was enforced most strongly. God came into day-schools and Sabbath-schools, which were his gardens, seeking roses. He was here to-night; were they ready to be gathered in to Christ's service? After the address was over and the children had gone home, a prayer-meeting was held, at which an outpouring of the Spirit on the morrow's gathering was earnestly asked.

Tuesday's proceedings began with a devotional meeting. Mr. H. F. Bowker presided, and the presence and blessing of God were experienced. From 11 a.m. to 1 p.m. the topic of holiness was under consideration. It was opened up by Mr. Bowker, who spoke of it as the pressing need of our day. The Church is broken into divisions; the spirit which animates her is not in accordance with the Master's spirit, infidelity of a dangerous kind manifests itself—the old, filthy infidelity has given place to a refined and subtle infidelity; the world's taunt is that its morality is as good as the Christian's; and the dividing line between those who profess to serve God and those who do not serve Him is not seen as clearly as it should be. All these signs of our time call for the manifestation of holiness. We should learn a lesson from the history of the children of Israel. They received the blood of sprinkling, but they had also to pass through the Red Sea. So as we died with Christ judicially we should also die unto sin and live in holiness.

Rev. John Riddell, Glasgow, followed Mr. Bowker. He defined holiness as the separation of heart and life unto the Lord. When God sanctified the Sabbath, he separated that day from other days, and set it apart to be his peculiar property. Every firstborn in Israel was also his peculiar property. Christ is the embodiment of holiness: "For their sake, I sanctify Myself." The life of holiness has been well described as "the life of one who is in love with God." We must be in love with God. The Holy Ghost's answer to the question, How can this life be lived? is found in the sixth, seventh, and eighth chapters of the Epistle to the Romans. God has prepared in Christ holiness, and when we are united to Christ, we are severed from the old Adam position. We enter the world with a tainted, diseased, and leprous humanity. In Christ humanity took a fresh start, and so the fountain-head of a new victorious humanity was established. We are identified with Christ in such a manner that our members are his. We must reckon ourselves dead to sin, even though the old nature may rise up and carry us captive. The old humanity cleaves to us, but God sees us in Christ, and that which clings to us and besets us is a thing disowned. God puts us in Christ; faith recognises that position; so we are able to reckon ourselves dead indeed unto sin. Then the problem arises, How are we to translate the reckoning of faith into the practice of daily life? This is illustrated by Peter's experience. After leaving the upper room, he was ready to die for Christ, but his readiness sprang out of reliance on his own strength, so he failed. But after Pentecost he despaired of his own strength, and being filled with the power of the Spirit was able to do what he could not do before. We require to be filled with the power of the Spirit, in order that we may translate the reckoning of faith into the practice of every-day life.

Rev. Mr. Sharpe (Vicar of Hampstead) said that holiness must become visible, to cope with infidelity. We have had pamphlets and books in defence of Christianity; we need now living men. To attract and allure men to Jesus, we must have the blessings mentioned in Philippians iv. We require especially "the peace of God" (ver. 4)—not peace with God only. This is a deep, divine, and eternal peace, which is not intermittent, but something akin to the ineffable peace of God. It enters into the deepest elements of sanctification. We are justified for nothing, but we are not sanctified for nothing. To have this peace of God we must comply with three conditions: (1) "Rejoice in the Lord alway; and again I say, Rejoice." We need a baptism of praise to win young men. David prayed three times a day, but he praised seven times. (2) "Let your moderation be known to all men." Be carpet-bag Christians, ready to go anywhere and do anything at Christ's command. Be not *at*tached to, but *de*tached from, this world. (3) "Be careful for nothing," &c. Have thanksgiving for everything, even for your thorn in the flesh. Notice that Paul says: "There was given to me a thorn in the flesh;" it was a gift from God; and carefully ponder the result of his experience: "I take pleasure in infirmities, in reproaches, in necessities, in persecutions, in distresses for Christ's sake." Mr. Sharpe's words were full of enlightenment and comfort. He spoke with an unction which thrilled his hearers. His exegesis of the thorn and its wondrous effects was helpful in a marked degree.

Mrs. Alice Todd Osborne gave a Bible-reading in the afternoon, and in the evening Rev. Hugh M'Intosh, of London, addressed an evangelistic meeting. His subject was the life offered by Christ, and man's unwillingness to come to Him for it. His earnest and powerful appeals, illustrated by striking anecdotes, enchained the attention of his hearers, and were, we trust, productive of much good.

Wednesday's Conference also began with prayer, Mr. Bowker presiding. The special topic of the day was, "What are the hindrances to a fuller manifestation of the life of Christ in God's people?" Rev. John Sloan, of Glasgow, said he would speak briefly of three hindrances: wickedness, worldliness, and wilfulness. He used wickedness as a catch-word to express the angry word, the unjust feeling, the love to get into society, and the other sins which were in the Christian life what the running sore is in the flesh. There can be no health in the body till the sore is dried up and healed. So "trifling" sins retard spiritual growth, and must be healed before maturity is attained. Worldliness is defined by the Lord Jesus. We are not to be *con*formed to the world, but to be *trans*formed. The friendship of the world is enmity to God. The love of the world comes in insidious forms to the Christian. We need Christ to teach us what it is; we live too far down in the dust and bustle to know of ourselves what it is. Worldliness cannot abide in the heart where God abides. If we go to the world to find pleasure and satisfaction, we are spiritual adulterers and adulteresses, for we are married to the Bridegroom, and should know no other love. Wilfulness is deeper than worldliness. It lies in the exercise of self-will, which brings us into conflict with the will of God, and should lead to careful self-examination and prayer.

Mr. Govan, of Glasgow, dwelt on the duty of Christians to manifest the life of Christ. As Christ manifested the life of God, so we have to manifest the life of Christ.

Mr. Bowker said that we fail in the Christian life because we have so little expectation of succeeding. According to our faith so shall it be unto us. Some people err by thinking and saying that God allows his people to fall that they may be kept humble. That is a very great mistake. We should realise that God has prepared work for us. In Eph. ii. 10, we are told that we are "created in Christ Jesus unto good works, which God hath before ordained that we should walk in them." This truth does not teach a kind of Quietism, but leads to intense activity and watchfulness. God has prepared a work for me, am I prepared for it?

Some questions were handed in at the close of the Conference, bearing on hindrances in the Christian life. The answers to them given by gentlemen on the platform were very helpful.

Mr. Anderson, of Ardrossan, conducted a Bible-reading in the afternoon, and in the evening Dr. Macfadyen gave an evangelistic address. That address was followed by Mrs. Osborne's account of her work for the soldiers.

The Conference was a success in the true sense of the word. It showed God's people their weakness and Christ's strength, and it laid special emphasis on the necessity for holiness as a manifestation of Christ to the world, and as a transformation into his likeness. The attendance was not so large as might be expected. Oban was crowded with visitors, yet comparatively few found their way to the hall where God's servants prayed and conferred together. This was not the fault of the local committee. They advertised the meetings well, and made all the necessary arrangements. We hope that next year the attendance will be larger, and that the speakers may be cheered by knowing that many brethren are anxious to hear from their lips the message God has sent by them.

RELIGIOUS INTOLERANCE IN BOHEMIA.

We have just received a communication from our correspondent at Prague, who says:—"Since the spring of 1880 (and closely following the interview graciously accorded by His Majesty the Emperor Francis Joseph to the deputation from the Evangelical Alliance) we have met undisturbed for worship in a hall in Prague, which was rented for this purpose, and also in a similar building in Weinberge. Early in June last, we were forbidden by the police authorities to continue our meetings." It seems that a newly-appointed and influential ecclesiastic denies the right of these Protestants to anything but strictly family worship, and our correspondent adds: "This appears to be the only reason for such unwarranted persecution in a land whose constitution promises religious liberty to all its citizens. This new departure is the more incomprehensible, seeing that the society under whose auspices these services are held has a constitution which was sanctioned by the Governor of Bohemia, as late as September, 1885. According to the second paragraph of the document, the society has the legal right, "anywhere in Bohemia, to provide halls for Bible lectures, and for Christian worship."

Our friends have appealed against the order of the police without success, but they have now memorialised the Minister at Vienna, strongly urging that "these Gospel halls may be again reopened for worship on the same condition as before, namely, that only specially invited guests attend." It seems probable that several members of Parliament will take an interest in this question of religious liberty, and that the Cultus Minister will be asked questions in the Diet, as to why such persecution is allowed.

It is hoped that the influence thus brought to bear upon the Austrian Minister may be effectual, and that the religious liberty which was obtained through the gracious interposition of the Emperor in 1879, may be fully and speedily restored.

I remain, your obedient servant,
A. J. Arnold, Secretary.

THE CHURCH ON THE SANDS.

REDCAR (Mr Josiah Spiers, August 23).—"I should like to tell you of good work here, but am too busy. Excellent meetings every day. Last night at 8 a lamp-light procession, and large crowds turned out. After going along sands and promenade, we made a circle on the sands at 8.30, and held a short service."

LLANDUDNO (Messrs. A. E. Bellingham, T. B. Bishop and others, Aug. 26).—"We are having an excellent work here, with many tokens of blessing upon it. On Sunday afternoon there was a very large gathering in the Happy Valley, and Messrs. A. E. Bellingham, J. Martin Hall, and C. H. Nash spoke to the children. Good services have been held on the beach morning and evening. The 10 a.m. prayer-meeting is well attended. One or two text-searching competitions have been held, and the young people take a great deal of interest in them. We have an earnest band of lady workers, and from time to time they distribute picture leaflets to all the children that can be found on the beach. There is cricket for the boys every afternoon, and our lady friends have organised games for the girls also. Messrs. Martin, Hall, and Macpherson went to Penmaenmawr on Tuesday, and to Colwyn Bay on Wednesday, holding two services at each place. Some of us have also visited Rhyl, where Mr. Banaster has been working for the last three weeks. On Sunday evening he had a meeting of sixty boys on board his yacht, the Kingfisher."

WEYMOUTH (Mr. E. Salisbury).—The services for young people conducted here have met with much success and blessing. The first beach service was held here on Sunday, August 15, when some 2000 people assembled, and a very good service was held. The visitors seemed greatly to appreciate the gathering, and when Monday morning came, and regular beach meetings were commenced as arranged, the young folks set to work to make a handsome "church on the sands," capable of accommodating some 200 little people, which they then took possession of for the service. Similar meetings were held every morning, and the earnest attention given to the speakers could not be exceeded. A prayer-meeting is held every morning in the Melcombe Regis Schoolroom, and here the friends and workers in the Mission have met to seek the Lord's blessing on the meeting, and most graciously and plentifully have the prayers been heard and answered. The spirit of hearing is very widespread, and the number of young people seeking the way of salvation is very great indeed. The workers find they have only to converse with the children, and they are almost sure to find them give expression to anxiety of soul. To the Lord be all the praise, whose Spirit is graciously working so mightily in our midst.

BRIGHTON (Mr. Henry W. Figgis, Aug. 21).—"Very gracious has our God been; the encouragements have been very great and many during the past fortnight, and our hearts are full of gratitude and praise. The attendances have steadily increased, and of the very class of young people to be desired. The weather has very slightly interfered with the work, and, as a rule, great attention and earnestness have marked the services. I have received about sixty letters from boys and girls of all ages and spiritual conditions, giving decisive testimonies to blessing received. Many of them are cases of conversion, some of those having had deepening anxieties of soul since the services last summer, but have now found pardon and peace through believing in the Lord Jesus; others are backsliders restored, and believers brought into further light, peace, and power. The eight o'clock meetings for adults have been crowded, and greatly helpful to many. On two afternoons I made a spiritual effort in West Brighton, nearly two miles from the usual place on the beach, and felt greatly helped and encouraged: 150 children who had never previously attended any of the services came, along with a good many others, all of the better class. A good many big boys have attended regularly, and some, the fruit of former years, are splendid helps."

SALTBURN-BY-THE-SEA (Mr. E. T. M. Dennis, Aug. 24).—"During the last week we have had very much encouragement, and as the mission is now drawing to a close we are permitted to see some very clear cases of decision for Christ among the young friends who have been attending the services. A feature of additional interest is that in some cases we find that those who have been led to decision here were first impressed at children's missions at other places. We had two most impressive gatherings on Sunday. In the afternoon, in spite of a dense sea fog, we had the large Concert Hall in the Italian pleasure gardens nearly full, and in the evening at 8 o'clock our meeting for boys only was also held in the Concert Hall, and we had quite 80 present."

A "GEORGE WILLIAMS" MEMORIAL.

MR. GEORGE WILLIAMS is well known to be the originator of the Y.M.C.A., which has risen to be such a power over the whole civilised world. It may not, however, be so generally known that Mr. Williams gave his heart to God when an apprentice in Bridgwater, nearly fifty years ago, and it was in that town that he commenced his career of Christian usefulness. It is now proposed to raise there a memorial to him in the form of a good hall and suitable premises for the Bridgwater branch of the Y.M.C.A., which is doing a noble and growing work, and stands greatly in need of increased accommodation. A splendid corner site in the centre of the town has been secured at very moderate cost, and Mr. J. F. Fawckner, of Newport, who is kindly acting as honorary architect, has prepared plans for a convenient and handsome building, which is estimated to cost rather over £4000, including site.

The foundation stone will (D.V.) be laid on the 11th inst., immediately after the British Conference of Y.M.C.A.'s at Bristol, and it is hoped that by that time a considerable part of the required sum will be contributed, as the value of such a memorial is greatly enhanced by the promptness of the support accorded to it. Subscriptions may be paid to the credit of the "Williams Memorial Fund," at Messrs. Barclay, Bevan & Co.'s bank, 54, Lombard-street, E.C., or will be thankfully received by

JOHN G. SULLY, President,
WILLIAM HURMAN, Treasurer.
Y.M.C.A., Bridgwater.

THE Y. M. FOREIGN MISSIONARY SOCIETY of the Aldersgate-street Y.M.C.A. is steadily making progress. It aims to awaken in the hearts of young men the great need of the heathen world, and to assist its members with pecuniary help during their preparation for the foreign mission field. In connection with the large societies, nine of the members of this Y.M.C. Association have gone forth since it was inaugurated, three years ago. In addition to six in training, there are three fresh members, who have been accepted as students by different institutions, and commence their studies in October. Many other candidates are waiting opportunities of taking the same decisive step. In the light of the increasing zeal for the evangelisation of the world, we heartily commend this young Society to the support of our readers, and shall be pleased to be the medium of any contributions.

GIPSY AND VAN CHILDREN.—A few weeks ago, at a village feast near here, there were in two old vans eighteen men, women, and children, and only one could read and write. The children had never been inside a day-school, and only one or two of the adults had ever entered a place of worship. There were, almost close to my door, a few nights ago, four well-to-do families, in vans of so-called gipsies, and not one could tell a letter. The cries, which are now becoming pitiful wails, of the 30,000 gipsy and van children for education should ring loudly in the ears of our legislators. The fields are white unto harvest, and my plans for gathering the poor children into school are easy, and to set them in motion I am seeking powers in the Moveable Dwellings Bill I am promoting, but with dark prospect, of it becoming law. It is the influence of the schoolmaster and sanitary officer rather than that of the policeman that should come to the rescue of the poor children.—I am, very sincerely yours, GEORGE SMITH (of Coalville),
The Cabin, Crick, Rugby.

A PLEA FOR THE PREACHER.

THE message was sweet that the Preacher bore,
But his hearers seemed never to care;
For they thought of the earthen-vessel more
Than the treasure of truth that was there;

And at last, with a pathos none realised,
But a meaning that all might see,
He said, O my friends! you have criticised,
May I ask, have you prayed for me?

These cisterns of human thought are filled
From a well that is never dry;
But the "Giver of all good things" has willed
That some are more gifted than I.

The blessing ye bring shall return to you,
If He quicken these airy powers,
And my words shall be fresh as the morning dew,
And as fair as a field of flowers.

Old truths that have lost their attractiveness,
Like the bones that were blanched on the plain,
Will revive in their grace and comeliness,
And be dear to your hearts again.

Yet it is not for beautiful thoughts ye live,
But to gladden the good Lord's eyes,
Who has taught us that they are the blest who give,
And in worship is sacrifice.

When the sparks from the forge that brightly shone
And the glow of the iron are past,
The work that his hands alone have done
Shall be seen by us all at last.

THE CENTRAL AFRICAN MISSION.

SIR,—I venture to plead for help, in your influential paper, for one of the most heroic and devoted missions among the many which are now labouring in our Lord's vineyard. Sorrow, sickness, and death have marked the progress of the Central African Mission ever since its commencement (now about twenty-five years ago), which was sealed by the death, from fever, of its first bishop less than two years after his arrival in Africa. During the last two months two young missionaries have been called to rest in the very midst of their labours. A third nearly blind from ophthalmia caught from the natives is in the Cape Town Hospital, hoping to return, as soon as health permits, to Nyassa, the scene of most promising work, where he had been the first white man to risk life among the savage tribes of that region; a fourth is now lying between life and death, recovering, we trust—though very slowly—from a severe attack of fever. Quinine being the one antidote against the deadly climate, an association has been formed to supply this drug, and other necessary comforts, to all the stations at Zanzibar and the mainland. As the deaths are no doubt occasioned by want, hardship, and exhaustion, I ask all who are interested in the furtherance of our Lord's kingdom to subscribe to the association (sixpence per month constitutes a member).

I will be glad to give information of the many and various ways by which the Mission may be assisted. God is undoubtedly blessing this noble work of self-sacrificing love in a remarkable and signal manner. Many, many souls have been garnered, several churches built, and native ministers are now assisting our clergy. That the work may not fail from want of help from England is the earnest prayer of Yours faithfully,
EMILY LESLIE.

CHILDREN'S SCRIPTURE UNION.—The following are the Portions for the ensuing week:—Sept. 5, Joshua iv. 1—13; Sept. 6, Joshua iv. 14—24; Sept. 7, Joshua v. 10—15, vi. 1—5; Sept. 8, Joshua vi. 6—19; Sept. 9, Joshua vi. 20—27; Sept. 10, Joshua vii. 1—13; Sept. 11, Joshua vii. 16—26.

CORRECTION.—In our last issue the names of Miss Archibald and Miss Aimers became unfortunately transposed in the account of work amongst soldiers at Europa-road, Gibraltar It is the latter whom the Lord has taken to be with Himself, the work being still carried on by Miss Archibald, the originator of the work on this part of the Rock. We had the privilege of meeting these sisters, and were struck with their holy zeal; we can, therefore, realise in a measure the loss to the work of so valuable a labourer as Miss Aimers.

Letters to the Editor.

A SUGGESTION.

Dear Sir,—An idea has occurred to me which I hope to put in practice, with reference to the many appeals for help which appear in your columns. Almost every week as I read The Christian, I think, "How I should like to send something to this!" But the page is turned, the paper laid down; there is nothing at hand to send, and the charity is forgotten. My idea is this:—I will always keep by me a small number of postal orders for 1s., 1s. 6d., 2s., and when my heart is stirred I will send off one or more of these to the charity which has specially touched it. I think those of us who already give away in annual subscriptions, &c., all the guineas and half-guineas and five shillings that we can afford, are usually too proud to send little donations, and yet, if each of your readers would adopt this plan, it would make a great difference to the funds of a large number of charities which now hardly know how to struggle on. A NEW ACT OF PARLIAMENT.

Sir,—I do not think that the attention of your readers has yet been drawn to a new Act of Parliament which may be of use to those who work among the poor.

Before this Act it was necessary for women deserted by their husbands to become inmates of a workhouse before an application for maintenance could be made, but now, by 49 & 50 Vict. c. 52, any married woman can summon her husband who has deserted her. The points to be proved are as follows:—

(1) The marriage.
(2) The desertion.
(3) The means of husband to maintain the wife, or wife and family, either partially or wholly.
(4) His wilful refusal or neglect to so maintain.

Two justices of the peace, or one stipendiary magistrate are able to try the case, and may order the husband to pay any sum not exceeding £2 weekly. The order may be varied on the application of either husband or wife, upon proof that the means of either husband or wife have altered.

Previous adultery uncondoned is a defence to the summons, and subsequent adultery is a ground for discharging any order made.

I am, yours faithfully, W. A. B.

P.S.—Several orders have already been made under this Act.

OPPOSITION TO OPEN-AIR WORK.

Sir,—I shall be glad if you can spare me a short space in your paper to refer to the above subject in connection with the present rather strained relationship existing between the police and outdoor meetings. As a member of an open-air mission I have had considerable experience in outdoor work, this year more than ever before, and I am bound to confess that I never yet have had cause to complain of the conduct of the police. On the contrary, the utmost consideration has been shown, and the greatest courtesy has been extended, both to myself and those associated with me, by the police who have been on duty in the districts in which I have laboured—the west and north-west of London.

After preaching last Wednesday evening I was told the inspector of the district wished to speak to me. I found him just outside the meeting in plain clothes. He told me that the "Chief" had decided to treat all meetings alike—religious, temperance, social, &c.—and that if they were conducted properly and there was no hindrance to the traffic, vehicular or passenger, occasioned, they would not only not be interfered with, but would be protected by the police. He suggested to me that instead of my holding the meeting at the corner of the street, thereby creating an obstruction, I should stand a short distance down the street, and thus leave the crossing free. I refer to this circumstance to show the desire of the police authorities to conciliate and, indeed, to aid those who are called to preach Christ to passers-by. I also mention it in order that fellow-members of the Open-Air Mission, and others working on the same lines, may take the hint, and by considerate conduct make the duties of the police, never very easy, less arduous by avoiding unnecessary friction. C. Fowler.

JUVENILE PURITY.

Dear Sir,—I have read the letter in your issue of August 19 with great interest. And yet, while fully in sympathy with the motive of that letter, I cannot say that I quite agree with the method advocated. I trust, Sir, that you will find space to insert my letter, for I feel so deeply interested in this all-important subject, and have worked so at it for the last twelve years, that I am sure your correspondent will feel that I am speaking from ripe experience when I say that I do not think that "Bands of Purity" would really work well. I believe that "Some Dangers to a Young Man in Life," and "Eight Rules for Daily Life" (of which I was the joint author with another clergyman) were almost the first papers published on this important subject. Add to which that, whenever I thought any boy under my scholastic charge was going wrong, I always made it a rule of talking and praying with him alone, so that you will see I am not rushing to a conclusion.

In dealing with this question we are on a different ground from that of drink and drunkenness. That is a vice which is open and apparent, and can be attacked openly, but impurity is secret to a very great extent, and children are far more innocent and ignorant than many people give them credit for. It seems to me to deal with it en masse we should be assuming, in many instances, the rôle of the serpent, and making the children "as gods, knowing good and evil" before their time.

This is no new question to us, for it occupied the attention of the Committee of the Social Purity Alliance for some three months in 1883. After much deliberation they decided to reject the "Home Branch" scheme then advocated for boys, and to issue instead a pamphlet, addressed to mothers, called "Schoolboy Morality," which has now reached its sixteenth thousand.

The advantages of this scheme are these:—

(a) It does not mass children together for an object which must lead to secret discussions, which, with their immature intellect, may produce undesirable and disastrous results.

(b) It puts the mother in the right place, as the pure conscience of the child.

(c) It does not prevent the schoolmaster or teacher from supplementing the mother's warning when necessary.

(d) Nor does it prevent the enlistment of the older lads (say seventeen years and over) in Bible-class Branches of the Alliance. But it would prevent the indiscriminate teaching of purity, and perhaps by that very teaching impurity as well.

We are just publishing a pamphlet entitled, "Our Duty as Teachers," which I shall be glad to forward to inquirers. In that pamphlet, many (I trust, valuable) hints and appendices are incorporated, and it is issued in humble reliance on the Holy Spirit. I have advocated therein indirect methods of promoting Purity as less likely to lead to harm than direct methods: to occupy the mind, to keep the body pure, to let the environment of the soul be such as to develop its best; believing that it is better to surround the body with pure air than to descant on the value of oxygen, so on the same analogy it is surely better to give the child's soul incentives to good than to descant on a subject, which, while it seems of the "light," may be teaching it too much of the black shadows behind.

I am sure "Sunday-school Teacher" will be glad to learn that others are on the qui vive for the promotion of Purity.—Yours very truly,

R. Ashington Bullen, Hon. Sec.
Social Purity Alliance, 33, Vincent-square, S.W.

Rev. A. T. Barnett, Clerical Secretary of the Church of England Purity Society, also writes, expressing very much the same opinion as the foregoing.

FRIENDLESS AND FALLEN.—Within a few weeks it is anticipated that the proposed extension in the shape of a new Home specially for friendless virtuous girls will be completed. Building operations are being pushed forward with all possible speed, and no time will be lost in furnishing, so that before winter really sets in, it is hoped that the Home will be opened for the reception of waifs and strays rescued from dangerous surroundings by missionary effort. The primary object is to win the reclaimed for Christ by all possible means, and towards this end I should be very thankful to any Christian friends who will send gifts of Scriptural wall texts suitable for the hall where Gospel services are to be held, class-rooms, dormitories and other rooms. Gifts of Bibles, hymn-books, and suitable library books will be also acceptable. Parcels containing such gifts should be marked, in addition to the address, "For the New Preventive Home." I am, faithfully yours,

Edward W. Thomas,

The Book World.

Helps to Belief. A series of helpful manuals on the Religious Difficulties of the Day. Edited by Rev. T. Teignmouth Shore, M.A. 1s. each. Cassell & Co. The Morality of the Old Testament. By Newman Smyth. Readers of Newman Smyth's popular books know what to look for in a work written by him. Eloquence, freshness of treatment, and breadth of view characterise his productions. These qualities are found here. He does good service in disposing of the arguments advanced by critics of the rationalistic school in support of their contention that the Old Testament is marred by moral defects and imperfections. Miracles. By Rev. Brownlow Maitland, M.A. Mr. Maitland has not much that is new to say on the important subject he has chosen for discussion, but he compresses a good deal of matter into a little space, and puts his argument pithily. He very properly lifts miracles out of the mechanical into the moral sphere.

Our Forefathers in the Dark Ages. By R. G. Blunt. 3s. Elliot Stock. In a number of short essays, the origin of many of our most valued institutions, arts, and sciences, is traced back to the Anglo-Saxons. While there is nothing new in the way of information, the style is easy, and the book would make a useful introduction to historical studies for the young folk.

Seven Rules for Daily Living; Seven Rules for Believer's Baptism; The Lost Chord Found; The Perils of Young Girls; Why Sign the Pledge? Partridge & Co. We heartily commend these little tractates by Rev. F. B. Meyer, of Leicester. They are practical, and breathe a spirit of devotion to the Saviour, which will make them useful. The first two are addressed to believers, the third to backsliders, and the fourth is suitable for young women or girls leaving home.

SOME SEPTEMBER MAGAZINES.

Sunday Talk (Nisbet & Co.) has, amongst its contents, a sermon by the late Principal Tulloch, on Christian Agnosticism.

The Church Sunday-school Magazine (C. of E. Sunday-school Institute) contains a good article (one of a series), on the Bible and Science, from the pen of Rev. Canon Fausset.

Footsteps of Truth (J. F. Shaw & Co.). Mr. Hurditch's magazine has several good papers this month; we specially note Mr. Hawkin's, on "The Fruitfulness of the People of God."

Messrs. Partridge & Co.—The Welcome maintains its standard of excellence, both in picture, print, and paper, and contains, amongst other good articles, "Ancient and Modern Jews" and "American Business Life." Of The Children's Friend (1d.), Infants' Magazine (1d.), Family Friend (1d.), and Friendly Visitor (1d.), each fulfil a good part in the nursery and the home.

Messrs. Cassell & Co.—The Family Physician deals practically and instructively with Typhus and Typhoid Fevers. We much regret the conclusion of Great Industries of Great Britain, which is a useful and valuable work. It is gratifying to find how much labour is employed in these times of trade depression (binding cases, 2s. each). The History of Protestantism (8½d.) leads us through the times of the Covenanters and other important periods of religious history. The Magazine of Art (1s.) presents a most realistic engraving of the Coliseum and Arch of Constantine, which helps one to form an idea of its enormous area. Also an article entitled "More about old Charterhouse." The Quiver (6d.) has a pleasing and appreciative sketch of Dr. Barnardo's latest venture, entitled "Half a Day in Babyland."

We have also received the following:—

Messrs. Isbister & Co.: Good Words, Sunday Magazine

"Home Words" Office: Home Words, Day of Days, Fireside, Church of England Temperance Chronicle.

Messrs. Partridge & Co.: Woman's Work, Illustrated Missionary News, Friend of Missions, Band of Hope Review.

Religious Tract Society: Tract Magazine, Child's Companion, Cottager and Artisan, Friendly Greetings, Sunday at Home, Leisure Hour, Girls' Own Paper, Boys' Own Paper.

Messrs. Cassell & Co.: Encyclopædic Dictionary, Countries of the World, Ellicott's Old Testament Commentary, Gleanings from Popular Authors, Familiar Garden Flowers, History of Music.

Notes on Daily Readings.

SUNDAY, SEPT. 5.—2 KINGS XII.

2.—And Jehoash did . . . right in the sight of the Lord all the days wherein Jehoiada the priest instructed him.—I.e., during a period of about thirty years, at the close of which the King was thirty-eight years old and the High Priest one hundred and thirty. Thus Joash's apostasy occurred at a comparatively mature age, and after more than a quarter of a century of right conduct. What a warning is this against self-deception and lack of thoroughness in the inward life! Favourable surroundings may do much to induce godly habits and sentiments. But the time of testing is sure to come, and then it will be seen whether these habits are the results of spiritual vitality, or are only the work of moulding circumstances. If the latter be the case the fall will be terrible indeed.

3.—But the high places were not taken away.—"In the country they had altars both for sacrifice and incense, to the honour of the God of Israel only, but, as it were, in competition with his altar at Jerusalem."—Henry and Scott.

17.—Then Hazael king of Syria went up, &c.—Between this verse and the one preceding there is a great gap, which the reader may fill up by a study of 2 Chron. xxiv. There we are told (15) of Jehoiada's death at 130; (16) of his burial within the city and among the kings; (17, 18) of the king's apostasy through falling under the influence of the princes of Judah; (19) of his obstinacy in sin in face of many gracious warnings through the prophets; (20, 21) of the murder of Zechariah the prophet, Jehoiada's son, a crime which has left a most hideous stain on the King's character, and to which our Lord referred (Matt. xxiii. 35); (23) the Syrian invasion, following close upon the murder.

21.—They buried him with his fathers in the city of David.—"But they buried him not in the sepulchres of the kings" (2 Chron. xxiv. 25). "It was thus in Judah that public opinion expressed a final and unalterable verdict upon the worth of its kings. . . . The sepulchres of the Jews, and their public cemeteries, were outside the towns. Only kings were privileged to have their family sepulchre within the walls: the only exception being in favour of individuals eminent for their sanctity (e.g., Jehoiada and, probably, Huldah the prophetess). For a king to be buried within the city, but outside of the royal sepulchre, as in the case before us, was a great dishonour. To exclude him from burial in the city altogether would have been a frightful ignominy."—Kitto.

MONDAY, SEPT. 6.—2 KINGS XIII.

2.—The sins of Jeroboam the son of Nebat which made Israel to sin.—There is something very awful in the repeated insertion of this phrase from time to time. It occurs twice in this chapter (vv. 2 and 11), and often elsewhere, and by its repeated use in sacred history, it tells of the peculiar ignominy that falls on those who, for selfish purposes, deliberately lead others into sin.

4, 5.—And Jehoahaz besought the Lord, &c.—Another illustration of the words, "Slow to anger and plenteous in mercy," especially when we observe how imperfect was this repentance, ver. 6.

16.—Elisha put his hands upon the King's hands.—"A symbolical act indicating that the successes were to come, not from human skill, or strength, or daring, but from the presence and power of God."—Sp. Com.

19.—Then thou hadst smitten Syria, &c.—"The unfaithfulness of man limits the goodness of God. Our Lord could do no mighty work in one city, because of their unbelief (Mark vi. 5, 6). God had been willing now to give the Israelites complete victory over Syria, "even to consuming" (17); but Joash, by his non-acceptance of the Divine promise in its fulness, had checked the outflow of mercy."—Sp. Com.

TUESDAY, SEPT. 7.—2 KINGS XIV.

The incidents recorded in the first part of this chapter are related much more fully in 2 Chron. xxv.

3.—Not like David his father.—"Compare 2 Chron. xxv. 2; 'Not with a perfect heart.' Amaziah's chief sins were those related at length in 2 Chron. xxv. 14—16, viz., his worship of the gods of Edom, and his threatening of the life of the prophet who rebuked him."—Sp. Com. He did . . . as Joash.—"There is a curious parity between the lives of Joash and Amaziah. Both were jealous for Jehovah in the earlier portion of their reigns, but latterly fell away; both disregarded the rebukes of prophets; and both, having forsaken God, were in the end conspired against and slain."—Idem.

6.—But the children . . . he slew not.—The fact that this is thought worthy of special mention shows the almost universal observance of the opposite custom. The punishing of the unoffending family with the guilty member was formerly a universal practice throughout the East. It was forbidden by Moses (Deut. xxiv. 16).

21.—Azariah.—"Or 'Uzziah,' as he is called elsewhere (2 Chron. xxvi. 1—23; 2 Kings xv. 13, 32, 34; Isa. i. 1, vi. 1; &c.). The two names mean respectively, 'The strength of Jehovah,' and 'Whom Jehovah assists.'"—Sp. Com.

28.—Are they not written.—"The prophet Amos, though bred in Judah (Amos i. 1, vii. 14), being commissioned to preach to the Israelites (vii. 15), emigrated to Bethel, where he prophesied (vii. 13) that the high places should be desolate, the sanctuaries (Dan and Bethel) laid waste, and the house of Jeroboam slain (vii. 9)."

WEDNESDAY, SEPT. 8.—2 KINGS XV.

5.—And the Lord smote the King, &c.—In 2 Chron. xxvi. we have a remarkably full sketch of the reign of King Uzziah—or Azariah, as he is here called. We there learn how he sought the Lord and prospered (5); how he succeeded in war with the Philistines, the Arabians, and the Mehunims (6, 7); how the Ammonites owned his sway and paid tribute, and he grew famous and mighty (8); how he fortified Jerusalem (9), and developed and protected pastoral and agricultural industries in the south and east by digging wells and building towers (10); how he re-organised the army (11—13), replenished the arsenals (14), and manufactured powerful engines of war (balistæ and catapultæ), for which he became famous (15); and how, being "marvellously helped," he became first great, and then lifted up, so that he presumed to offer incense in the holy place (15—19). It was then that the Lord "smote the King" (20), so that he lived the rest of his reign secluded in a private dwelling, dethroned by the judgment of God, for "Jotham, the King's son, was over the house, judging the people."

7.—They buried him with his fathers.—"Not, however, in the tombs of the kings, or general catacomb of the royal house, but in another part of the same burial-ground (2 Chron. xxvi. 23)."—Sp. Com.

10.—Before the people.—"Rather 'before people,' openly and publicly, as Jehu, the founder of the dynasty, had slain his own predecessor Joram (2 Kings ix. 24). The slaughter of Zechariah fulfilled the prophecy of Amos, that God would 'rise against the house of Jeroboam with the sword' (Amos vii. 9); and also that of Hosea, that Jehovah would 'avenge the blood of Jezreel upon the house of Jehu' (Hosea i. 4)."—Sp. Com.

12.—This was the word of the Lord, &c.—A striking example of "the sure word of prophecy" (see 2 Kings x. 30).

19.—Menahem gave, &c.—"The tie that had bound Samaria to Assyria from the reign of Jehu to that of Jeroboam II. had ceased. Menahem now renewed it, undertaking the duties of a tributary. Hence the reproaches of Hoshea (chap. v. 13, vii. 11, viii. 9)."

22.—Carried them captive, &c.—See also 1 Chron. v. 26. This was the first captivity, when Reuben, Gad, and the half tribe of Manasseh went into exile.

THURSDAY, SEPT. 9.—2 KINGS XVI.

Ahaz, probably the worst of Judah's kings, seems to have been consistently wicked and apostate throughout his reign. He "made molten images for Baalim" (2 Chron. xxviii. 2), and so introduced anew that horrid idolatry which Jehu had driven out from Israel, and Jehoiada from Judah. He even set the example of human burnt-offering, his own sons being the victims (ver. 3, and 2 Chron. xxviii. 3), a practice which seems to have become fearfully common about this time (see Jer. vii. 31, 32, xix. 2—6, xxxii. 35; Ezek. xvi. 20, xx. 26, xxiii. 37). But sin and punishment are inseparable. "Therefore the Lord his God delivered him into the hands of the king of Syria." Rezin king of Syria and Pekah of Israel were confederated against both Assyria and Judah. Judah was invaded, and Ahaz defeated by each of these successively (2 Chron. xxviii. 5—7). Vast multitudes of Jews were led captive to Damascus, while 200,000 more of their "women, sons, and daughters" were taken by Pekah to Samaria (2 Chron. xxviii. 5, 8), where Oded the prophet, advancing to meet the victors, reproved them, and forbad the enslaving of their brethren the Jews (2 Chron. xxviii. 9—15). Still, the war went on. The confederates laid siege to Jerusalem, to the great terror of the Jews (ver. 5 and Isa. vii. 1, 2). Then came Isaiah to Ahaz, saying, "Take heed, be quiet, fear not, &c." (Isa. vii. 3, &c.), adding, "If ye will not believe, surely ye shall not be established." Ahaz did not believe. Other foes came up against him, the Edomites and Philistines (2 Chron. xxviii. 17, 18). Accordingly he sent treasure to Tiglath-pileser, and so bought his aid (ver. 7—9). But though this brought a temporary relief, it brought also new trouble, and, what was more, greater sin (compare vv. 10—18 with 2 Chron. xxviii. 20—25). He must needs borrow altars and gods from Assyria with which to pollute the Holy City and the Temple. The folly and sin of unbelief like his is writ too large for comment. Like Joash, he was dishonoured in his burial, being buried within the city, but not in the royal tombs (ver. 27).

FRIDAY, SEPT. 10.—2 KINGS XVII.

Worldly policy was the immediate cause of Israel's destruction. Both Israel and Judah lay between the contending empires of Assyria and Egypt. Had they obeyed God simply, they would have trusted Him to maintain their independence, and He would have defended them. But no; sin slew faith, as it always does. They chose to trust in Assyria, and so became tributary to that power. Then, in course of time, Egypt wins their confidence. The Assyrian tribute is withheld, and soon the wrath of Assyria falls, on Judah partially, but with crushing power on Israel—all this in accordance with the word of prophecy (Hosea vii. 11, ix. 3 and 6, xii. 1, &c.).

6.—Carried Israel away, &c.—This work was not fully completed till long after, under Esar-haddon (Ezek. iv. 2).

7—23.—Observe, how clearly first causes are mentioned in this explanation. Grandly it testifies to the truths that they are safe who fear God; that righteousness exalteth a nation, and only righteousness; and that sin, nothing else, is the secret of failure. There are three leading counts in this charge: (1) idolatry; (2) ignoring of the law; and (3) disregard of the many warnings sent them by prophets and seers. Further, their guilt is held to be greatly aggravated by gross ingratitude: (7) Israel had sinned against the Lord their God which had brought them up out of the land of Egypt.—Their sin was so much greater because of his great mercy. Each one of these points is full of significance and teaching for us.

24—41.—These nations feared the Lord, and served their graven images.—Samaritan godliness is still very popular—on earth, but not in heaven. "Ye cannot serve God and mammon" (see also Rev. iii. 15—17).

SATURDAY, SEPT. 11.—2 KINGS XVIII.

3.—He did that which was right, &c.—"This is said, without qualification, of three kings of Judah only: Asa, Hezekiah, and Josiah. Hezekiah commenced his reign by reopening and purifying the Temple (2 Chron. xxix. 3), which his father Ahaz had shut up, and allowed to become polluted. He restored the vessels which Ahaz had cut in pieces, and solemnly renewed the worship of God in the Temple, according to the old forms (2 Chron. xxix. 19, and 21—35). . . . It is thought that his reformation was preceded, and perhaps caused, by the prophecy of Micah, recorded in Jer. xxvi. 18; Micah iii. 12."—Sp. Com. Hezekiah's great godliness, in spite of the equal wickedness of his father Ahaz, is a wonder that proclaims aloud the power and sovereignty of grace. God often shows his power by raising up some of his noblest servants from among the most unfavourable surroundings.

4.—Brake in pieces the brazen serpent (see Num. xxi. 9).—It was made by God's command, as a means of glorious deliverance to his stricken people. Moreover, it was a sacred type of Jesus Christ (John iii. 14). Nevertheless, it was destroyed as an ensnaring thing. Good in itself, it became a great temptation. Had they regarded it simply as a memento of God's mercy to their fathers, it would have remained a blessing to them. They changed it into a curse by relying on it; by giving to the gift that honour and trust which belongs only to the Giver. The temptation to do this is, in essence, ever present with us, and the fact that the thing we trust in is manifestly from God only, makes the temptation more subtle. The ordinances, Baptism and the Lord's Supper, are from God, yet how many rely on them rather than on God.

14.—Hezekiah sent to the king of Assyria, &c.—No doubt the danger was terrible and the stress very great; but he would have been more himself if from the first he had cast himself boldly on God. God was pledged to deliver a righteous man, such as he, who trusted in Him, and afterwards, when he did so trust, He did deliver. What immeasurable sorrow and loss would have been avoided had he trusted God only from the beginning!

Mission and other Appeals.

Central London Sick Asylum (Cleveland-street, London, W.).—The Chaplain, Rev. C. P. Baxter, would be glad to receive religious books, periodicals, newspapers, &c., for circulation among the patients.

Y.W.C.A., Ealing.—Will friends who are willing to render help—either with contributions or in kind—in furnishing the new Institute, be good enough to communicate with the Hon. Secretary, Mrs. Tulloch, 50, Grange-park, Ealing, W.

Lodging House for Young Women (5, Burton-crescent, W.C.).—This house, near King's-cross, Euston-square, and St. Pancras stations, is expected to become very nearly a self-supporting Christian Institute and Home; but at the present moment the difficulties are great. Since the opening there have always been some inmates quite unable to pay, who sorely needed a temporary home; some have been found employment. The immediate want, however, is not for general expenses, but is for building a room at the back for a girls' parlour and evangelistic work. Sixty pounds is required. A gentleman has sent some useful furniture, and is ready to give more as soon as the room is built.

Sarah A. Bromage.

MR. FULLERTON, who has been travelling in the Holy Land, Turkey, and Egypt, to recruit his health, addressed a large assembly at the Metropolitan Tabernacle prayer-meeting on Monday week. Two students from the Pastor's College who sailed for the Congo on Saturday last were also present. Messrs. Fullerton and Smith commenced a Gospel mission at Hull on Sunday last under the most hopeful circumstances.

DR. BARNARDO'S LITTLE EMIGRANTS.—A Peterborough (Ont.) paper of August 6 says:—Of all the large party of girls who sailed from England, July 15, under charge of Miss Joyce, lady visitor for Dr. Barnardo's Canadian Home, one hundred and fifty have already found homes and places of service. Miss Joyce will begin almost immediately to visit these girls and those previously sent out, and so ascertain whether or not they are well and happily placed,

A SIGNAL OF DISTRESS.

Dear Friends,—

The need of such a work as this is as great as ever. The increase of population, depression of trade, spirit of lawlessness, &c., are all working together to cast upon the ruinous streets of this huge Babylon hundreds of starving, erring lads, for whom such a Home as ours often seems to be their first and last chance in life.

The vacancies caused by the despatch of our last party of boys to Canada, about three months ago, began at once to be steadily filled up, so that our daily needs are almost as great now as in the depth of winter. Yet if it had not been for the generous help of a few ever kind friends, who have privately sympathised with and succoured me, I could not have provided the necessaries of life for our three large families till now.

After eking out our scanty means week by week so as to tide over, if possible, this difficult summer season without making any appeal for help, I now find we are absolutely penniless, and are compelled, by dint of our pressing necessities, to send forth this "Signal of Distress."

This appeal is but the echo (and a faint one) of the multitude of appeals which reach me from widows and orphans, magistrates and missionaries, clergymen and policemen, &c., &c., who by post from all parts of the kingdom, and in person at our doors by day and by night, crave shelter and Christian friendship for orphan and neglected, sinned-against and sinning precious lads, for whom Christ died, and whom He has bequeathed as a legacy to His Church on earth.

Believe me, dear Friends,
Yours very faithfully,

J. W. C. Fegan

That Little Bow of Blue.

IN FOUR VERSES.
(Reprinted from THE CHRISTIAN.)

MY heart was very heavy, for my children cried for bread;
I wept to see my little ones go supperless to bed;
I listened for a footstep, as I'd often done before,
Waiting for a staggering man to stumble through the door;
But his step was firm and steady, and his eye was clear and true,
And on his ragged coat he wore a little bit of blue! Extract.

SOUND-MINDEDNESS
IN RELATION TO
Christian Life and Practice.
By Rev. H. SINCLAIR PATERSON, M.D.

Price One Penny; 1s. per dozen, post free.

Sound-mindedness does not lessen our enjoyment. Oh, no one knows the enjoyment of a holy life, just because no one has put it fully to the test. All the pains and griefs that come to us who try to follow Christ are from our slowness of heart, and unsteadfastness of mind, and shrinking from the path along which He beckons us. If we were to yield ourselves wholly to Him, we should be filled with all His fulness. The note of joy rings sharp and clear through all Paul's life, and yet his was a hard life; but in the midst of it he says: "Rejoice; and again I say, Rejoice." No happier man lived than the Apostle in his day; and the nearer we get to him in doing God's will, the nearer shall we get to the fulness of that joy that the unbelieving, unfaithful servants lack.

A REAL CHRIST.
An Address by C. H. SPURGEON.

Price One Penny; 1s. per dozen, post free.

"The Cross was real. Oh, never let any mist hang before that! whatever else my soul does not see, let me ever see the Crucified. Whatever else becomes a phantasy, a myth, an imagination, may that living, and dying, and crucified Saviour be actual and real to my heart! For there is only comfort to me in proportion as that is real."

IMPORTANT NEW WORK FOR TEACHERS OF THE YOUNG.

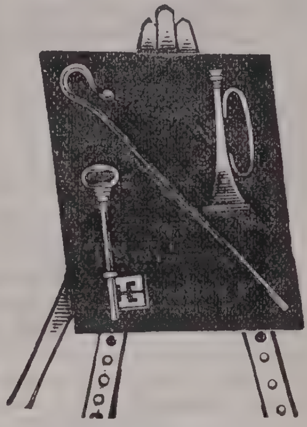
220 Pages, Crown 8vo. Tinted covers, 2s.; Cloth boards, 2s. 6d.

CHILDREN'S MEETINGS
AND HOW TO CONDUCT THEM.

BY LUCY J. RIDER AND NELLIE M. CARMAN.

CONTAINS

Sixty Outline Lessons for the Class,
Forty-three Diagrams for the Blackboard,
Twenty-five attractive Children's Hymns.



"We have no hesitation in advising all who are engaged in the good work of teaching children and young people in Gospel principles, and the way of salvation, to possess themselves of a copy of this work. It will be found to be a very valuable and suggestive book, and helpful to the teacher of the Infant—as well as to the teacher of the Bible-class."—Baptist Messenger.

"Many really excellent people fail as teachers; and their failure is not attributable to ignorance, but to some defect in their method of teaching. In this book such persons will find invaluable hints on the arrangement and communication of the truths by which we seek to save our children. We commend it to all who have to address young people, and especially to Sunday-school teachers."—Primitive Methodist.

"A thoroughly practical book, by teachers who have learned by experience the best methods. Teachers will find it most helpful, especially in blackboard word-work. The Addresses are teachings, which very many Children's Addresses are not."—The Teacher at Work.

"We do not remember meeting with any better book than this for help in Children's Meetings. It is first-rate. There are objects to be drawn on the black-board; but there are also capital lessons to go with them. Black-boards get very, very black; and the children are very bored, when it is all chalk and no sound sense. Many of these Addresses would make sermons of the first water—and what more can we say of Addresses?"

BIRDS OF THE BIBLE. Chats with the Children about Bible Birds. By JAMES BOWKER, F.R.G.S.I.

With Coloured Frontispiece and 29 other Illustrations.

Beautifully Printed on Toned Paper in Red and Black.

"A very pretty little volume, beautifully illustrated, handsomely printed, and very tastefully bound. It contains much information and much useful teaching about Bible birds. It is just the book for a present to our young friends, to whom it will prove very attractive."—Living Waters.

"Mr. Bowker knows much about the birds; and he makes his feathered favourites teach many a sweet lesson. By all means let the children have this prettily written and prettily illustrated book."—British Messenger.

"A beautiful little volume, printed in red and black, with numerous engravings. Will be found most interesting and instructive to the young folks who are fortunate enough to obtain a copy. One friend to whom we showed the book at once ordered three dozen copies for Sunday-school rewards. We hope that many others will follow his example."
Christian Treasury.

"We delight in books of this character. Scripture and Nature are set side by side; and the young are made to see the one illustrated by the other. Fine type makes these pages pleasant to the eye of the old, and simple language adapts it to the taste of the young."—Sword and Trowel.

"Chats with the children about birds mentioned in the Bible, in which are introduced anecdotes illustrating their instincts and habits, and explaining and applying the references to them in Scripture: contains many pictures and a pretty coloured frontispiece. A beautiful little book, and very handsomely got up."—Christian Age.

"In 'BIRDS OF THE BIBLE' we have pleasant chats about some of the birds referred to in Holy Writ, with good illustrations and a coloured frontispiece. The volume is nicely got up."—Christian World.

A WEEKLY RECORD OF CHRISTIAN LIFE, CHRISTIAN TESTIMONY, AND CHRISTIAN WORK.

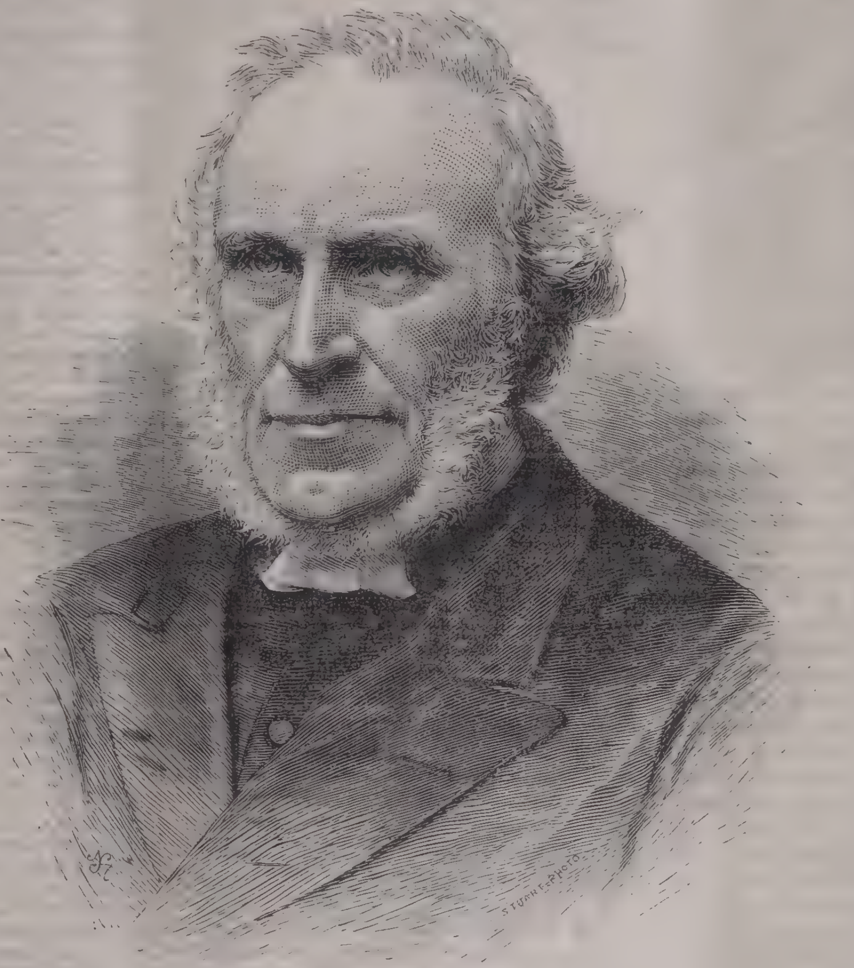
No. 867.] LONDON: MORGAN & SCOTT, 12, PATERNOSTER BUILDINGS, E.C. THURSDAY, SEPTEMBER 9, 1886. REGISTERED AT THE G.P.O. AS A NEWSPAPER. [ONE PENNY. POST FREE, 1½d.

REV. PETER LEYS.

SCOTLAND has added another name to its long list of heroes. REV. PETER LEYS has shown, by his loyalty to Christ and fidelity to the dictates of Christian conscience, that the spirit of the Covenanters is not yet dead. The course he took in difficult circumstances has won for him the highest respect and the warmest regard of all whose good opinion is worth having. We have much pleasure in presenting our readers with a portrait and biographical sketch of this brave Christian minister.

Mr. Leys has been for upwards of fifty years actively engaged in Christian work. He was converted at the age of twelve. Five years later he went to Jamaica, where he laboured for four years, with signal success, as catechist and missionary. He returned home to study for the ministry. While attending classes at Glasgow University, he did valuable work in the capacity of city missionary. He often spoke in the open air, and never failed to draw a crowd. His manner was strikingly earnest, and his matter a combination of apt illustrations, with solid Scriptural doctrine. He carried about with him a little Bible, the pages of which were turned down at particular passages, which he turned up and read in the course of his address. His use of this invaluable companion was so constant that he had to get a new one every two or three years. A special feature in his labours for Christ at this time was the teaching of a Bible-class connected with the Wellington-street United Presbyterian congregation. The younger members of many well-to-do families came to him for religious instruction, and numerous testimonies are still given to the blessing then received. In the stress of his various occupations, he did not neglect preparation for the future; he made the most of his opportunities for gathering knowledge. Not content with the ordinary curriculum, he supplemented it with an attendance on the lectures of some German professors. The broader culture thus gained did not, as it so often does, dim his religious fervour, or weaken his grasp of evangelical verities. Then, as now, he was true to the faith once for all delivered to the saints.



(From Photograph by Mr. Stuart, of Glasgow.)

In 1851 he was ordained to the pastoral charge of the First United Presbyterian congregation, Strathaven. He remained steadfast in his first love. Other churches sought to woo him away, but he turned a deaf ear to their invitations. He preferred to dwell among his own people. Drumclog was in his immediate neighbourhood, and many of his hearers were the direct descendants of the heroes of the Covenant. So he breathed the very spirit of the men who gave Scotland her religious liberty, and caught something of their boldness of testimony. Some of his hearers were hard-headed and shrewd hand-loom weavers, and many of them were farmers who came six, eight, and ten miles to hear the Gospel. He went in and out among them day after day, esteemed for the wisdom he showed in giving counsel, and the tender faithfulness with which he seized every opportunity of urging the acceptance of the "one thing needful."

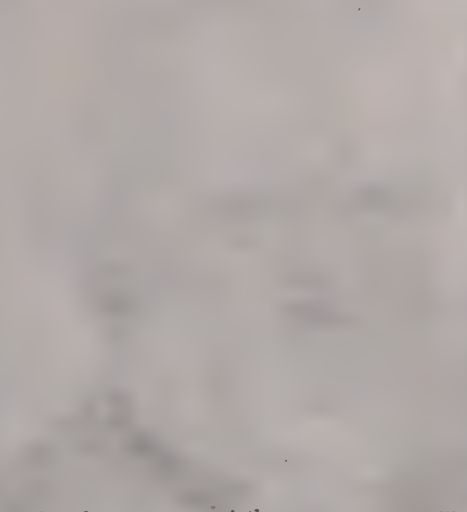
As a preacher he was simple, practical, and forcible. He never wearied of holding up Christ as the sinner's Saviour and the saint's Example and Friend. He soon became a power, not only in the town where his labours lay, but also in the surrounding district. He was intensely earnest. His one desire was the salvation of souls. From time to time he had seasons of special effort. The result was, to use the words of one well-qualified to judge, "a constant glow of blessing." In that best and brightest of all sunshine he and his people basked.

The ministry of a faithful ambassador of the Cross in a country town is marked by few stirring episodes. Mr. Leys' record was no exception to this rule. He quietly performed the duties of his high calling, looking for and getting no earthly reward. These were, however, fruitful years. He built up a strong and devoted congregation, and he had souls for his hire. Evangelistic work was a passion with him. When Mr. Moody came to Scotland in 1874, he welcomed him eagerly. He entered into the revival which followed with such untiring and uninterrupted zeal that his health gave way. He was ordered entire rest for some months; and when he again returned to his pulpit it was with a weakened body and impaired energy. He saw that his old strength was gone beyond recall. He could not brook the idea of remaining in a position the duties of which he could not adequately discharge, so he made up his mind to resign. He carried that decision into effect in 1880. At the urgent request of his congregation he still retained the status of senior minister; and ever since he has shown in many ways his unabated interest in their spiritual welfare.

The worker had earned rest. His last days should have been full of peace and happiness, but they have been clouded by sorrow and suffering. He was dragged out of his retirement into the fierce light that beats on a public tribunal. The painful facts of this ordeal may be briefly told. His son, John Kirkwood Leys, was a barrister in London, who did not succeed in business. He ran into debt, and was unable to provide for his two boys. Mr. Leys came to the rescue. He took the children to his house six years ago; fed, clothed, and educated them. His motive in so doing was twofold: he wished to shelter those who were practically homeless, and he thought that his son would be stirred up thereby to greater activity and to a realisation of his parental responsibilities. The understanding was that while the grandfather gave them free board and lodging, the son should do his best to pay for their clothing and education. But even that was not done by him. The boys were happy in their new home. They grew up bright, cheerful, and intelligent. They eagerly drank in the truths they heard from the lips of the old minister, and of late have showed signs of having undergone a saving change. Their father's circumstances got worse instead of better; he sank deeper in the pit of pecuniary embarassment. Four years ago he became a Roman Catholic. His perversion was a heavy blow to his relatives. At first he did not interfere with the training of his children, though he knew quite well that the principles of Protestantism were taught them. When he visited them, he joined in the family worship, and even accompanied them to church. All at once he woke up to anxiety about the boys. He demanded that they should be surrendered to him to be educated at a Jesuit college. Mr. Leys refused to listen to this demand. It was opposed to his own convictions and to the desires of the children, whose fear of a Papist seminary was great enough to fill them with distress by day and dreams of terror by night. He sent them beyond their father's reach, and declined to tell where they were. He was cited before the Court of Session, and ordered either to give back the children, or to reveal where he had placed them. He did neither. The law could not recognise the delicacy of his position, or honour the conscientious scruples which regulated his action. It asserted the supreme right of a father to the custody of his children, and decided to enforce that right. Mr. Leys was threatened with imprisonment if he did not yield, but he stood firm. The situation was very trying. He was an old man and in feeble health. To be shut up in a prison cell might prove fatal to him, but he decided to be true to conscience, let the consequences be what they might. He defended his decision in a speech of marked ability and high-toned eloquence. It was reproduced in full in our issue of August 12. He took his stand on principle. He recounted the circumstances of the case, and then modestly, but firmly, declared his unalterable resolution to do what he thought right. So he went to prison, a martyr for conscience sake. The fires of the stake have been quenched, and the ignominy of the scaffold has been removed, but the pain and loneliness of the cell are yet the portion of those who dare to put principle above expediency, and "obey God rather than men."

Mr. Leys' bearing before the Court of Session commanded general respect and admiration. His illness had made him nervous and excitable, and his friends were afraid that the strain of defending himself at a public tribunal would be too much for him, but his calmness surprised them. Divine strength upheld him. He experienced the truth that God delivers his servants, not from but in the fiery furnace.

His imprisonment attracted wide attention. Newspaper articles were written about it; it was the theme of conversation at most Scotch firesides; and various Presbyteries passed resolutions, and sent letters of sympathy. Mr. Leys made plain what was the real motive of the persecution he was subjected to at the hands of his son and his cruel advisers; it was that the children might be got hold of for the purpose of making them Roman Catholics. Their father never proposed that they should reside with him, but at a Papist seminary. When proof was laid before the court to show that he was unable to maintain and educate them, a letter was read by the counsel for the prosecution, in which Father Clark, a Jesuit of good position in London, guaranteed to educate and maintain them at a Jesuit institution near Sheffield. It was to save his beloved grandchildren from this worse than living death that Mr. Leys faced the pain of a public trial, and entered the darkness of a prison cell.



The circumstances of the case are very peculiar, and suggest questions which have not as yet received an answer. Why, for instance, did not the Court of Session summon the father, and ask whether, in making the application for the custody of his children, he acted of his own accord or at the instigation of the priests? Wills are frequently set aside on the ground of undue ecclesiastical influence; why was not Mr. Leys set free if it was found that his son was under spiritual coercion? The pressure of such coercion was felt by him, for when a brother telegraphed him to withdraw his petition, his reply was that "he had no power." Was not the Jesuits' offer of free education a bribe to secure absolute religious control of the boys? It may be argued that even if they were brought under Jesuit influence they should be able, with their previous training, to stand the test. It is easy to say that, but we must remember that "the constant droppings wear the stones." Their new surroundings would be of such a nature as might readily break down a more mature resistance. The Bible with all its comfort and strength would be withheld from them, and they would be forced, to pray before images, and the saints, and the Virgin Mary. In such circumstances it would be hard, indeed, for them to remain true to their Protestant principles. And last of all, but by no means the least, the case raises the question of the limits of toleration. Are children to be forced to embrace their father's religion? What is the value of a national faith if, in a country the pillars of whose constitution are based on Protestantism, the scale of justice is not to be turned in favour of what is in that country recognised as Divine truth? It is high time that such problems were faced; and this painful episode will serve a useful end if it rouses our countrymen from their lethargy to defend the rights won by the self-denying lives and blood-sealed testimonies of their forefathers.

Mr. Leys was imprisoned in Calton Gaol, Edinburgh, on July 20. He was put into a common cell, where he was surrounded by criminals. He was shut out from the comforts to which his age and the state of his health entitled him, and condemned to lonely gloom—all because he refused to yield to the Jesuits the grandchildren he had fed and loved for six years. A warm thrill of sympathy with the sufferer, and an indignant feeling against his oppressors, passed over the land. Petitions were signed in favour of his release, and cordial letters of encouragement were sent to him. These tokens of public goodwill were highly valued by him. He was surprised to find that his action attracted so much attention; he considered it but a simple fulfilment of the duty God gave him to do. His joy and strength in prison were in closer communion with his Master. He read nothing but the Bible, and found in its pages what lifted him out of the darkness of his surroundings to a mountain height, whence he caught comforting glimpses of the King in his beauty and the land that is far away.

More than three weeks passed. Much had been spoken and written about the injustice of his lot, but little had been done to remedy it. His doctor said that the confinement was endangering his life. A few more days in the gaol were likely to prove fatal. His agents were about to petition for his release on account of the state of his health, when that step was rendered unnecessary by his son's declining to enforce any longer "his right to the custody and possession of the children through the continued imprisonment" of his father. In this, as in all his previous acts, the barrister was but the tool of the Jesuits. These wily intriguers saw that the indignation provoked by their conduct was doing them harm, so they changed their tactics. They are not yet at the end of their resources. The children are not out of danger; the warrant for their capture is still valid. But the plot has been unmasked; and surely British Protestantism is not so effete as to calmly permit Papal scheming to blight the happiness of a home, and carry away innocent captives to a fate from which they shrink.

Mr. Leys has come out of his severe ordeal with honour. He has crowned a life of witness-bearing with a supreme testimony. He has taught our age the lesson of fidelity to conscience, and by so doing has helped to make other lives better and stronger. He has done his part, but the end for which he suffered will not be secured till the safety of the children is put beyond doubt. He may be again imprisoned if the movers in this strange episode care to resort to such a measure. It is not too much, surely, to demand for him and his helpless grandchildren the protection of all true-hearted Christians. We do not hesitate to express the belief that if he is subjected to further persecution at the hands of the Jesuits, and no strenuous resistance is made against such persecution, an indelible blot will sully the fair fame of our Protestantism.

One moral, clear and urgent, is pointed out by this sad story; and that is, the activity of the Jesuits. These enemies of civil and religious liberty, expelled from almost every Roman Catholic country in Europe, are harboured in England, and allowed to plot and carry out their vile machinations. A toleration which is licence winks at their proceedings, but we dare not close our eyes to them. They love and affect the darkness, but we would drag them to the light. The sufferings of a good and brave minister of the Gospel, and the sword which hangs over his beloved grandchildren, should speak in a voice of thunder to sleeping Protestants, and bid them wake to guard jealously the privileges bought for them with the blood of their ancestors.

FOR HIS SAKE.

By S. J. HUMPHREY.

You ask me, "How did you come into these new notions of giving?"

Well, it was this way:

A year ago this winter our house took fire. It was in the middle of the night, and we were all asleep. The flames were first discovered by a poor neighbour, who at once gave the alarm, and then burst in the door. The house was full of smoke, and the fire had already attacked the staircase which led to the rooms in which we were still sleeping. It seems almost a miracle that we were got out alive. We were dazed and suffocated, and it was only the heroic courage and great strength of our neighbour that brought us down the blazing stairway into the open air. But it nearly cost him his life. Indeed we thought the poor man, gasping there for breath, would die on the spot. Intent on protecting us, he had exposed himself so that he was terribly burned about the arms and chest. He had, too, drawn into his lungs the smoke and the almost furnace-like air. As he stumbled out of the door with the last child in his arms, he fell down, utterly spent. I shall never forget the anguish of that hour. He had saved us, but himself seemed dying—dying for our sakes. All thought of our own misfortune at once left us. The best physicians were summoned, and we bore him tenderly to his own house. When the immediate danger had been averted, it became plain that it would take the careful nursing of many months to bring him back to his ordinary health, if, indeed, he had not become disabled for life.

And now it was our turn. He was a labourer, and his family were wholly dependent on his daily earnings. It did not take us long to decide upon our course. In fact there was no debate or counselling about it. The immediate and common thought of each of us, down to the youngest child, was that we should at once take the whole care of this family upon ourselves. They were now allied to us by a tie stronger than any bond of kindred, and we did not for a moment hesitate what to do.

I had a business that gave us a comfortable support, though we had followed the custom of our acquaintances generally of living in a liberal way, quite up to the extent of our means. But we did not stay to ask whether we could afford it or not. We just settled it at once that this should be done first, and then we would somehow contrive to live on what remained.

We arranged that the women of our family should relieve the heart-broken wife of the poor man from all household cares, that she might devote herself wholly to him. They were very tenderly attached, and no one could care for him as she could.

"It was just like Jo," she said, as she patiently sat by his bedside. "He never thinks of himself." But a happy smile flitted across her wan face, as she added: "I wouldn't have him different."

My eldest daughter soon secured a class in music, and the next one found a place in a Kindergarten. It was a great delight to me, and a stimulus to my own efforts to see how intent the younger children were, each one of them, to earn or save something for the great purpose which had now come into our hearts. It sometimes brought the tears to see especially how Charlie, the last one saved, took wholly upon himself to look after one of the children of our brave friend, a boy about a year younger than himself. He could enjoy nothing, neither garment, school book nor plaything, until he had seen to it that his little mate was fitted out as he himself was. And often this was done at a real sacrifice to the little fellow.

Indeed, this was the way with us all. It did not occur to us to ask whether we could do what we had undertaken without feeling it. We wanted to feel it. We could not take upon ourselves any of the bodily anguish of this poor suffering man, suffering for our sakes. But it was a genuine satisfaction to be doing something for him, at some cost to ourselves, some real self-denial, that should be as constant as was the pain he was enduring. We somehow felt that it was the only way we could emphasise to our own hearts our great obligation, and show to him our gratitude; the only way in which we could in some small measure,—it seemed very small to us sometimes,—suffer with him in his great suffering for us.

I do not say that there was no conflict in doing this. After the excitement of the first few days was passed, it was often necessary to reinforce our variable impulses by calling up to our minds a sense of duty. The close quarters into which we had moved were inconvenient. Our former tastes and luxurious indulgences now and then stoutly asserted themselves. They had grown into headstrong habits, and it sometimes cost a real conflict to put them down.

There was one untidy and expensive habit, which, it seems to me, I never could have broken off, had it not been for this new power that had come into my life. Upon a little calculation I found that it cost me more than a hundred dollars a year. This might be saved. It was a defiling and unwholesome thing, and I could not but feel a loss of self-respect every time I gave way to its use. But I had no idea it had gained such a mastery over me. And when the intense craving for my daily indulgence came on, the battle would certainly have gone against me had I not been wont to say over to myself, "It is for his sake—for his sake!" That one word gave me the victory, and it was a real deliverance.

There was another stout fight I had to make.

One day a business friend of mine drove up with his well-matched pair, and took me to see the new house he was building. I was glad to look it over, for I had planned that, some day, I would build such a house for myself. The rooms were spacious and many. The outlook from the bay windows was delightful. No modern convenience or appliance for comfort had been omitted. It was not strange that for a time my former desire for such a mansion-like residence came upon me with almost overpowering strength. It was a moment of weakness. The spirit of self-indulgence came back to its old home, and before I was aware, the chafing and impatience of my heart at the new expenses laid on me grew into a tumult. But it was only for a moment. As I walked away and began to come to myself, and to see what I was really thinking about, what do you suppose I did?

I just stood still and hated myself for about half an hour!

Oh, what indignation! What clearing of myself! Yea, what revenge! To make sure that I had utterly rid myself of the meanness of this contemptible thought, I immediately went with my wife and bargained for a neat cottage in the next block, arranging easy terms which I could meet in the years to come, and then directed that the deed should be given to my brave, suffering deliverer, the first day he should be able to walk out. I felt as if I had grievously wronged him, and that nothing short of this would satisfy the demands of the case.

As our friend began to be able to talk, we found that there was something weighing upon his mind. It soon came out that he was the superintendent of a little mission school which he had gathered in a neglected part of the town. Somehow it had come to him that in his absence it had sadly run down. You may be sure the whole teaching force of our family was turned into that school the very next Sunday. I am ashamed to say that it was new business to us; but for his sake we were there, and we threw our whole souls into it. And it was a great satisfaction to see how like medicine it was to the poor man, to hear our weekly report of the growing interest and numbers. And when, in the winter, there came a blessed revival, his joy knew no bounds. It was noticeable that from that time on he showed a marked improvement.

There was a natural, but unlooked-for, result from the self denials and solicitudes of this year. We were drawn, not only to this man who was making a brave fight for life in at the next door,—for we were continually running in and out,—but we were also drawn to each other as we had never been before. A new tenderness and patience came into our lives. Somehow the common service and sacrifice upon which all our hearts were set, softened us and brought us together in a sympathy and oneness of feeling which was altogether new, and thus it proved to be the happiest period of our domestic life.

It is a year now, since that terrible night. Our neighbour, to our great joy, has so far recovered that he has moved to the new house, and will soon be back again to his accustomed work.

Yesterday, as I looked over the footings of my inventory, I found, to my surprise, that, after all, it had been one of my most successful years. Indeed, I had scarcely ever had so large a balance in hand. This was altogether unexpected. There had been no marked successes or special interpositions. But I could see, on looking back, that my own business habits had been toned down by the necessities which faced us; that needless expenses had been cut off; that my standing with business men had steadily improved, and that I had somehow been kept from mistakes and bad ventures and misplaced credits. Indeed, we have a settled and sweet consciousness that the hand of a good Providence has been constantly with us.

Last evening, as it was the anniversary of the fire, we gave up the accustomed hour of family worship, to a review of these experiences. It was a delightful and precious season. We felt with humble gratitude, that we had come up to a higher plane of life, and no one of us had any desire to go back to the old way of self-indulgence. There had been growing quietly in our hearts for some months the thought:

If for this man's sake, why not even more for Christ's sake?

When we had read at our morning worship such passages as the 53rd of Isaiah, or the closing scenes of our Lord's life in the Gospels and many expressions in the Epistles, the suffering—sometimes the intense anguish in at the next door—of which we were often the witnesses, and which was almost never out of our thoughts, seemed to make very real to us our Lord's sacrifice and sufferings for us. We were also much moved by the beautiful patience of our neighbour, and by his joy in what he had done. He seemed to feel, with all his lowliness, a sense of having somehow gained an ownership in us, and in a quiet way he rejoiced over us as if we were the trophies of a great victory. We were, indeed, as "brands plucked from the burning," and this often led us to turn to the Lord Jesus, with much yearning and tenderness of soul. And there would sometimes appear to us, with the vividness of a new revelation, the words: Ye are not your own, ye are bought with a price. And so at the close of our review, there came out, in a formal covenant, the purpose which had thus been quietly growing in all our hearts, that we would never, any more, live unto ourselves; that we would keep right on doing for our Lord, just what we had been doing for this man. It seemed easy and natural, and the most reasonable thing in the world, that for the next year, and for all the years, we would make Christ's business our business; that we would take to our hearts the things that were nearest to his heart; that henceforth his Church, his poor, his little ones, and the salvation of the world, for which his soul is still in travail, should be the chief care of our lives.

Our daughters have wrought and hung on the walls of our rooms a motto. It is only a faint reflection of that which is deeply, and, we believe, permanently graven on our hearts:

FOR HIS SAKE.

And so I have answered your question, How did you come into these new notions of giving?

HOP-PICKERS AT ALTON.—Six large marquees are erected in the centre of gipsy encampments; meetings are conducted every night by evangelists, and free teas given. THE COMING KINGDOM.*

The moral and political history of mankind for the last twenty-five centuries has been working out a programme divinely revealed beforehand to Daniel in Babylon. This grand outline, which includes the chronological relation of the events predicted to the coming kingdom of God, is given in the brief but pregnant sentence of the angel: "Four kingdoms shall arise out of the earth; but the saints of the Most High shall take the kingdom, and possess it for ever, even for ever and ever."

The period in which the saints are destined to do this—fixed from the beginning in the eternal counsels, mysteriously indicated in this prophecy, and made plain in these days by providential fulfilment—is, as every sign of our time indicates, at hand. It will be a day of sore judgment on the corrupt Papal Apostasy and on all kindred false professions of the name of Christ, but a day which will bring eternal glory to the true Church, and unspeakable blessing to the repentant remnant of the Jewish people, as well as to the spared nations of the Gentile world. It will come suddenly and unexpectedly, when least looked for by men, and the generation now living is likely to witness its advent. With united voice history, chronology, astronomy, and Scripture endorse this solemn conclusion, and bid the Church lift up her head, because her great redemption is now close at hand.

Now, knowledge is the guide of action. If we know these things, happy are we if we act accordingly. We do well to learn and to believe; but "faith without works is dead." Let all who believe in the near coming of the Lord show their faith by their works.

True Believers, hold fast till He comes! Trim your lamps, and be ready; we have not long to wait. "The night is far spent, the day is at hand; let us, therefore, cast off the works of darkness, and let us put on the armour of light." "Let us not sleep, as do others." "The Lord is at hand." Let us awake, and act!

Young Christians, with all your fresh powers, your vigour of mind and body, your attractiveness, your sympathies, your knowledge of the truth, your warmth of first love, what are you doing with your priceless possessions in these few and final hours before the King cometh to take account of his servants? Redeem the time; for the last sands are running in the hourglass of this evil age, and on every side work in profusion is awaiting willing hands and loving hearts.

Unsaved reader of these lines, what are you doing to lay hold on eternal life before this day of salvation closes? Oh, cease trifling, cease putting off, cease to hide from yourself the certain fate of all unbelievers. How shall you escape if you neglect Christ's great salvation? You may be moral in your relations to your fellowmen, but what are your relations to God? He claims, and justly claims, the first place in your heart and mind; your deepest trust, your warmest love; you are not giving Him these, and hence the day of Christ, which glows with glory and joy to his people, looks dark and dreadful to you. We speak to you in his name. He died upon the cross, that all who believe in Him should be justified and saved. His message to you is in your mouth and heart. Believe and Live! Turn. Trust. Be reconciled to God. Take his gift freely. Learn, and you will love. Then Christ shall be in you—your own, your All.

Sceptics, you who reject with a smile of superior wisdom the very notion of inspired prophecy, and of God in history, we challenge you to account for the numerous and unquestionable facts set forth in this volume. There are proofs of foreknowledge and prediction which you cannot honestly gainsay. The day for denying the true date of Daniel is past. Can you give any credible account of the fore-view of human history contained in his book? Is it within the power of man to discern and delineate the events of twenty-five future centuries, with their times? Yet you are witnessing in the political condition of Europe, this day, that which was foreseen and foretold in the days of Nebuchadnezzar! What does this mean? It means that the Mind which made your mind is appealing to it. God has not left Himself without a witness! He is saying to you, "Behold, the former things are come to pass, and new things do I declare; before they spring forth I tell you of them." "Who hath declared this from ancient time? . . . have not I, the Lord? and there is no God else beside Me; a just God and a Saviour; there is none beside Me." If the Bible be not divine, you will lose nothing by studying it candidly; while, if it be so, you may gain more than tongue can tell! "Prove all things; hold fast that which is good." Search the divine Word. He who will not search shall not find.

Students of the sure word of prophecy, let no anti-Christianism surprise you. Before Christ, Antichrist. Such is the foretold order. We have had the great predicted historic Antichrist in the self-exalting head of Papal superstition; we have now its soul-destroying result and outcome in the existence of modern infidelity. But the darkest hour is that before the dawn. Let us gird on our armour for the final conflict, and strive for the reward promised "to him that overcometh."

The "sure word of prophecy" was given for the guidance and establishment of faith. The apostasies of the falsely-professing Church, its fall into vice, superstition, and infidelity, viewed as foretold, ought to be a confirmation of our faith! The fact that the Jews fulfilled prophecy in rejecting Christ is one reason why we receive Him. The fact that so large a portion of Christendom now in another way rejects Him was equally foretold, and is an added reason why we should cleave to Him in faith.

May we see through this anti-Christianism, tracing it to its roots in the historic past, and to its fruits in the foretold future! May the despairing infidelity, the scoffing unbelief, the Christ-rejecting, God-ignoring blasphemy of these days be seen in their true light, as the natural predicted consequence of the long-continued corruption of the professing Church! It is a question of the rotting of dead branches severed from the true and living Vine, of the mortification of lifeless members. Modern infidelity is the legitimate outcome of the great Apostasy, which, having passed through many and various stages, is now assuming its final form. Long has been the warfare waged by the powers of darkness "against Jehovah and his Anointed;" now the last conflict has set in. Let us not shrink from it. The world has never changed in its rejection of Christ, nor the true Church in its faith in Him. The Cross is still "a stone of stumbling, and rock of offence" to the disobedient, but still also "the power of God unto salvation" to everyone who believes. Let us remember the solemn and repeated warnings of the Word of God. Is it not written, "They shall turn away their ears from the truth, and shall be turned unto fables?" Is it not written, "These shall make war with the Lamb, and the Lamb shall overcome them: for He is Lord of lords, and King of kings; and they that are with Him are called, and chosen, and faithful"? Is it not written also, "But ye, beloved, seeing ye know these things before, beware lest ye also, being led away with the error of the wicked, fall from your own steadfastness." But, instead of apostatising thus, "grow in grace, and in the knowledge of our Lord and Saviour Jesus Christ. To Him be glory both now and for ever."

May the spirit of careless security, the popular "peace and safety" cry of these days, which is the foretold precursor of the coming of "sudden destruction," have no power over us, to lull us into unwatchfulness and unbelief! Let us not expose ourselves to the reproachful question, "Could ye not watch with Me one hour?" May we "be diligent," that we "may be found of Him in peace, without spot, and blameless!" May we "abide" in Him, and abound in the work of his service according to his word, "Occupy till I come!" May we stir up the gift that is in us, utilise the buried talents, and bring in the precious sheaves of the harvest field. "Looking for that blessed hope, and the glorious appearing of the great God and our Saviour Jesus Christ."

GEMS FROM MR. MOODY'S BIBLE.

GIVEN BY HIM AT NORTHFIELD CONVENTION.

SEVEN NEW THINGS.

Justification: A change of state; a new standing before God.

Repentance: A change of mind; a new opinion about God.

Regeneration: A change of nature; a new heart from God.

Conversion: A change of life; a new life from God.

Adoption: A change of family; a new relationship towards God.

Sanctification: A change of service; separation unto God.

Glorification: A change of place; a new condition with God.

WHY CHRIST BECAME MAN.

(1) To bear sin (1 John iii. 5—8; John i. 29).
(2) To obey God's law (Heb. x. 7; Rom. v. 19).
(3) To destroy death (Heb. ii. 14; John x. 10).
(4) To sympathise with us (Heb. ii. 17).
(5) To give us an example (1 Peter ii. 21).
(6) To reveal God to us (John xiv. 9; Col. i. 15).
(7) To unite God and man (Rom. v. 10).

CHRIST GAVE HIMSELF

(1) For many (Mark x. 45).
(2) For the Church (Eph. v. 25).
(3) For me (Gal. ii. 20).

GOD IS FAITHFUL

(1) To fulfil the hope of my calling (1 Cor. i. 9).
(2) To establish the believer (2 Thess. iii. 3).
(3) To succour the tempted (1 Cor. x. 13).
(4) To fulfil all his promises (Heb. x. 23; xi. 11).

TRUE STATESMANSHIP.—1.

BY S. BECK.

"Can we find such a one as this is, a man in whom the Spirit of God is?"—GEN. xli. 38.

SUCH was the reason given by a heathen king for making Joseph ruler over all the land of Egypt. Is this the true key-note for all good government? We believe it is, and illustrate our point by short extracts from the lives of William Wilberforce and Abraham Lincoln, and invite our readers to carry out the thought, and act accordingly.

WILLIAM WILBERFORCE

was born at Hull, on August 20, 1759. He enteredSt. John's College, Cambridge, October, 1776, at the age of seventeen. When only twenty-one he was elected Member of Parliament for his native town, and shortly after for the county of Yorkshire, which last position he held with great acceptance for more than twenty-eight years. His great electoral success won for him a warm welcome in the gay circles of the city of London, and he was at once immersed in politics and fashion.

When about twenty-six years of age, an entire change came over him, to which he thus alludes:—

> Often, while in the enjoyment of what this world can bestow, my conscience told me that in the true sense of the word I was not a Christian. I laughed, I sang, I was apparently gay and happy, but the thought would steal across me, "What madness is all this, to continue easy in a state in which a sudden call out of the world would consign me to everlasting misery, and that, when everlasting happiness is within my grasp," for I had received into my understanding the great truths of the Gospel, and believed that its offers were free and universal, and that God had promised to give His Holy Spirit to them that ask for it. At length such thoughts as these completely occupied my mind, and I began to pray earnestly.

He now commenced the habit of early rising, and in self-conversation reflected seriously on these subjects. He proceeds:—

> The deep guilt and black ingratitude of my past life forced themselves upon me in the strongest colours, and I condemned myself for having wasted my precious time and my opportunities and my talents. The first years when I was in Parliament I did nothing—nothing, I mean to any good purpose; my own distinction was my darling object. I seem to myself to have awakened from a dream. At that time, emulation and the desire of distinction were my governing motives, and ardent after the applause of my fellow-creatures, I quite forgot that I was an accountable being and that I was hereafter to appear at the bar of God; that if Christianity were not a fable, it was infinitely important for me to examine into its authority diligently, anxiously, and without prejudice. I know full well that I am not what I ought to be, yet I trust I can say, Non sum qualis eram, and I hope to become more worthy of the name of a Christian, more living above the hopes and fears, the vicissitudes and the evils of this world, more active in the discharge of the various duties of that state in which the providence of God has placed me.

Now his powers of mind, his eloquence of speech, his influence with Pitt, who at that time was at the head of the Government, were all seen to be talents lent him by God for which he must give an account. The effect of this change in the domestic circle was so marked in his habitual cheerfulness and the patient forbearance of a temper naturally high, that the remark was made by one who feared the result, "If this is madness, I hope he will bite us all."

In 1787 William Wilberforce was led to devote himself to his great work—THE ABOLITION OF THE SLAVE TRADE. At that early date those interested in Abolition were needing a leader; one who would combine and so render irresistible the scattered sympathies of the religious classes. Such an one was William Wilberforce. Having learnt the secret of his strength, he was not ashamed of his colours, but was prepared to endure hardness as a good soldier of Jesus Christ. As the representative of the largest county, with great influence in his personal connections, and an amiable, unblemished character, he stood ready for action. He records the following resolve:—

> Prayer three times a day, at least, and begin with serious reading and reflection, self-denial in little things. Slave trade my main business now.

It was hard work at the commencement, for it was fighting against principalities, against powers, against immense moneyed interests and spiritual darkness in high places. The French Revolution hindered the work, great fear being expressed lest any radical change should affect the interest of the Crown. The enemies of the slave trade took advantage of this to strengthen their position. The following letter was received by him from the death-bed of the late John Wesley:—

> MY DEAR SIR,—Unless the Divine power has raised you up to be as "Athanasius contra mundum" I see not how you can go through your glorious enterprise in opposing that execrable villainy, which is the scandal of religion, of England and of human nature. Unless God has raised you up for this very thing, you will be worn out by the opposition of men and devils; but if God be for you, who can be against you? Are all of them stronger than God? O! be not weary in well doing. Go on in the name of God, and in the power of His might, till even American slavery, the vilest that ever saw the sun, shall vanish away before it. That He who has guided you from your youth up, may continue to strengthen in this and in all things is the prayer of your affectionate servant,
> JOHN WESLEY.

Such proofs of sympathy were very cheering to him.

> May God make me henceforth to live more to His glory, and bless me in the great work I have in hand. May I look to Him for wisdom and strength, and the power of persuasion, and may I surrender myself to Him as to the event with perfect submission, and ascribe to Him all the praise if I succeed, and if I fail may I say from my heart, Thy will be done.

Such were his aspirations. It is not for us to go through the long political contest that ensued. It was a fifty-years' struggle crowned with success. Living beyond the natural age of man, and dwelling on his favourite passage, Phil. iv. 6, 7, the sun of William Wilberforce went down in brightness, but not till the second reading of the Bill for the Abolition of Slavery had passed the House of Commons. Within two days of his decease he received the joyful intelligence. "Thank God," said he, "that I should have lived to witness the day when England is willing to give twenty millions sterling for the abolition of slavery."

The funeral, by the special request of members of both Houses of Parliament, was in Westminster Abbey. The Speaker of the House of Commons, the Lord Chancellor, one Prince of the blood, with others of high rank, took their places by the bier; but there was a far more touching memorial to his worth. A great part of the coloured population of the West Indies went into mourning for him, and their brethren in the United States were called upon thus to testify their gratitude and their sense of his loss.

Servant of God, well done,
Rest from thy loved employ;
The battle fought, the victory won,
Enter thy Master's joy.

"ALTHOUGH."

HAB. iii. 17, 18.

"ALTHOUGH the fig-tree blossom not,
Nor vines their fruitage yield,
Though labour of the olive fail,
Nor meat be in the field:
Though flocks should perish from the fold
Nor herd be in the stall,
Yet in the Lord I will rejoice,
And find in Him my all."

We sang it in the summer-time,
'Mid hills with verdure crowned,
While everywhere the laden boughs
Were bending to the ground.
And graciously the Father heard,
As with a gladsome voice
We chanted, "In thy name, O God,
We always will rejoice."

"Although"—'Twas sung with faltering lips,
Blanched with uncertain fears,
And lifted eyes, whose burning lids
Refused the soothing tears.
For, one by one, the goodly flocks
Were fading from our sight,
And over all the beauteous land
Were tokens of a blight.

And yet, methinks, the Father heard
A deeper note of praise
From that wrung heart, than ever rose
In the untroubled days.
It was the language of a soul
Which answered to his call,
And, even in its anguish, yearned
To own Him all in all.

"Although the fig-tree blossom not:"
The storm has fully burst,
The famine stalks where all was fair,
The plague has done its worst.
Nor fruit, nor herb, nor living thing,
Nor flocks, nor herds remain,
But only emptied hands are clasped
Around eternal gain.

Yet hark! for lo, a psalm of praise,
How full, how sweet, how clear!
And now the very heavens are hushed,
And God bows down his ear.
A song, more musical than rose
In that glad summer-time,
When sorrow seemed a thing unknown,
And life was in its prime.

More sweet than was the trustful cry
From lips with grief compressed—
It is the cadence which bespeaks
A heart at perfect rest.
A heart in which Jehovah reigns
Sole Monarch on his throne,
A heart that finds unmingled joy
In Him, and Him alone.

"Although." Ah! do not fear to sing
Thy gladsome song of trust;
Nor think thy God will haste to trail
Thy life-joy in the dust.
Ah, no! not lightly hearts are tried,
And those will stand the test
Who cling, through sunshine and through shade,
To Him they love the best.

Now to his name, his glorious name,
Loud let the anthem swell,
Though flocks and herds alike should fail,
"He doeth all things well!"
"Although the fig-tree blossom not,
Nor fruit be in the vines,"
The soul is fully satisfied
Which on its God reclines.

BALLET GIRLS AT TEA.—On Wednesday, September 1, in response to the invitation of Mr. W. Forbes, about eighty chorus ladies and dressers met at a social tea in the school-room of Waterloo-road Chapel. Afterwards Mr. Forbes and a friend addressed the gathering, and on leaving each of the guests was presented with a small bunch of flowers having a text of Scripture attached.

Mr. Moody's Northfield Convocation.

(FROM OUR SPECIAL REPORTER.)

THE OPENING DAY—AUGUST 4.

Wednesday, August 4, dawned bright and beautiful—an ideal New England day in early autumn. Recent copious rains had freshened the verdure, and the lovely valley of the Connecticut, in which Mr. Moody's home lies embosomed, with a framework of hills on either side, presented a picture fair to see. A cool spell had come after a week of intense heat, and the thermometer was reduced to the point of comfort.

The burden of the speaking at the first meeting fell on Dr. Pierson, of Philadelphia—ever ready and ever full of matter. The singers were in strong force—Mr. Sankey, Mr. and Mrs. McGranahan, and Mr. and Mrs. Towner—so that many a moving and delightful season of Gospel song was to be looked for. Mr. McGranahan, I regret to say, had been troubled with a bronchial affection during the winter, but a few months' stay in New Mexico has recuperated him to a great extent. Mr. Moody, of course, is in the president's chair—much relieved in mind by the speedy and complete recovery of Mrs. Moody.

Dr. PIERSON ON SPIRITUAL POWER.

From Micah iii. 8, "Truly I am full of power by the Spirit of the Lord," Dr. Pierson gave a weighty and suggestive address, almost overloaded with points of practical interest. There is a great difference, he said, between strength and power. A giant, bound in fetters, is powerless. The word power, as used in the Bible, means the coming upon the believer of the mighty efficiency of the Spirit of God. The history of too many Christians is a record of broken resolutions; conscience remonstrates a thousand times, and as often it is trampled down. Worse than that, conscience is often warped, so that the wrong is made to appear as something pardonable or excusable. The only cure for this is an influx of the power of God. Dr. Pierson gave a rapid but interesting résumé of the miraculous cures effected by our Lord, as recorded in Matthew viii., ix., to show how these forms of physical complaint were typical of the spiritual diseases from which men suffer, and from which the power of God alone can deliver.

God's power is seen most palpably in conversion. There are two hindrances to conversion—the weakness of the human will, and the perversity of our own desire. As an instance of the way in which the power of God is seen in breaking down this weakness of will, Dr. Pierson told of a man with whose striking and thorough conversion he was personally acquainted. The man had been a blasphemer, profane, a sceptic, and drunkard—in fact, all that is bad. A sermon was instrumental in awakening him, and he came to see the Doctor. "He told me in detail all about the awful life he had led. He said, 'You talk about turning to God; I cannot do it, my will is as weak as water,' 'God can help you.' Said he, 'How can I turn? I am a slave to tobacco, to drink, and to lust. I'd like to be a better man, but how can I turn round?' I said, 'If you are ready to give yourself to Christ, let us get down on our knees and pray about it.' I prayed, and then I asked him to pray for himself. 'I cannot.' I said, 'I think that now is the time when you ought to cast yourself on Christ.' 'I cannot do it.' At length he dropped down in utter shame and confusion of face, and I never heard a man pray as he did. That man got up from his knees a new man. He parted from the miserable woman with whom he had been living; he gave up tobacco and strong drink. He has now been preaching the Gospel in Michigan for eight years, and he solemnly told me that from that day he never had a desire for tobacco or strong drink, and has never been tempted to bring reproach upon the name of Jesus." How seldom, continued Dr. Pierson, do we see such conversions. Many of the conversions of these days are little more than a kind of half reformation, and not much at that. Men come to Christ as if they thought they were about perfect and they needed Christianity to supply one more ornament to their character. So they enter the church to add, as it were, the last gem to the diadem of their human perfection.

This power of God is seen again in changed views of Holy Scripture. When the Holy Ghost takes possession of a man, what a different book the Bible becomes! It was told of Bengel, the great commentator, by one who observed him, that he would sit up till after midnight, weeping and praying over the study of the Bible. The spiritually-minded man has his eyes opened to see the beauty of the Word of God; there are doors opened into the great cavern of truth, blazing with gems. Nothing interferes more with the believer's usefulness than a doubt as to whether the Bible is the very Word of God or not. When the Holy Ghost comes upon us, we have no more question that it is God's Word than we have of our own existence. We delight in the study of it. It is to us bread for sustenance, water for refreshment, and honey for delight.

Dr. Pierson further expatiated on the effects of this influx of spiritual influence, as seen in increased power in prayer and in the capacity for service. Another result of this Divine unction is a stern realisation of the condition of man as a lost sinner. If a preacher of the Gospel is not certain whether or no his hearers are in danger of eternal damnation, little wonder that no power accompanies his words. The worst thing about "the new theology" is its depriving men of any true conception of the perils of the unrepentant. The notion that men will have another chance after this life will inevitably take away all the motive for zeal in this.

This power produces, in those who receive it, liberty—the readiness to witness for God even at the risk of failure; it produces boldness of speech, as seen in the case of Peter on the day of Pentecost; it carries with it the demonstration of the Spirit—an infinitely greater convicting power than all the logic of the schools. Dr. Hamilton said Dr. Guthrie was the greatest logician he ever knew—there was but one step between his premise and his conclusion. One word of caution here. It is not in the power even of a Spirit-anointed man to compel any human soul to choose Christ. All he can do is to shut up the hearer to a choice of some kind—to put him in the position where he must either say "Yes" or "No."

The possession of this power is dependent on the sanctification of the believer and on his self-oblivion. It is said of a great English preacher of the last century that no one could point to a solitary conversion under his ministry. "He obscured the Cross by putting his own greatness between the man and the crucified Christ." The preacher is to "hold forth" not himself, but the word of life.

THE MODEL CHURCH.

It was a happy inspiration that led Mr. Sankey at the close of this introductory address to sing a quaint but very practical Christian ballad, called, "The Model Church." I append several of the stanzas:—

Well, wife, I've found the model church,
  And worshipped there to-day;
It made me think of good old times
  Before my hair was grey.

The meeting-house was finer built
  Than they were years ago,
But then I found when I went in
  It was not built for show.

I wish you'd heard the singing, wife,
  It had the old-time ring;
The preacher said, with trumpet voice,
  "Let all the people sing."

'Twas not a flowery sermon, wife,
  But simple Gospel truth;
It fitted humble men like me,
  It suited hopeful youth.

To win immortal souls to Christ
  The earnest preacher tried,
He talked not of himself or creed,
  But Jesus crucified.

Mr. RAINSFORD ON SOUL WINNING.

Rev. Marcus Rainsford, of London, is the sole platform representative at Northfield of the old country. His participation in the Conference had been well advertised, and a good deal of expectation was evidently cherished with respect to his utterances. The people had not long to wait for a taste of the peculiar quality of his speech, as he was set down for the address on the afternoon of the first day. This address may be said to have established his reputation as a speaker at Northfield. The charm of his talk, which was on "Christ's method of dealing with souls," lay not so much in the substance as in the manner of it, and in the warm sympathetic personality of the speaker. If we want to be successful in winning souls, he said, we cannot do better than follow our Lord's example. Mr. Rainsford then read, with a running comment, the story of the Woman of Samaria. "He must needs go through Samaria." There is a great thirsting in the nature of God to have salvation fixed into the inner depths of the nature of his creatures. So Jesus walked forty miles that day, as it is computed, to meet this poor sinning woman. He, the brightness of the Father's glory and the express image of his person, condescended to make a request from her. The first thing we should do if we want to win a sinner is to try and get down on a level with him. Only twice is it recorded that Jesus Christ asked a favour, and on both occasions He was refused. He asked this woman for a drink, and got a sharp answer; on the cross He asked for water, and they gave him vinegar. Notice that there are no conditions in our Saviour's offer of salvation to the woman. There is not a word here about repentance, or conviction, or sincerity, or prayers, or promises. "If thou, lost sinning one, but knew the gift of God—the freeness and the fulness of it—thou wouldst have asked, and Jesus would have given." How tenderly the Lord deals with all her questions and objections and excuses. How tenderly, too, He reveals to her the dark secrets of her life, bringing conviction to her heart, and preparing her to receive the living water that only could quench her spiritual thirst. Oh, the boundless mercy of God, and the loveliness of his grace! At the close of his exposition, Mr. Rainsford told which I reproduce almost at length. The recital of it fairly melted the meeting, and must have carried to many a listener a message of encouragement to persevering and hopeful effort on behalf of those whose salvation they desire. Said Mr. Rainsford: I would like to tell you a fact in my own ministry which I hope will be an encouragement to any teachers among you. We are sometimes apt to get discouraged at finding so little response to our testimony. Some time ago, before I went to London, I had a parish in Ireland. It was my great privilege and honour to lead into the light, the family of the steward of a nobleman whose chaplain I was at the time. The steward had two daughters, one of them about seventeen and the other about twelve. They were both smitten with consumption, and they had that sad beauty that betrays a short life in this world. I used to call and see these two girls; they were both confined to their beds, and were in the same room. Sarah, the elder, was a very beautiful creature, but very ignorant and shy. Whenever she heard me coming up the stairs she would cover herself all over with the bed-clothes, and for six weeks I never heard the sound of her voice or got a glimpse of her face. As for the other girl, Annie—a dear little thing—I never thought of speaking much to her. She used to tell me she was half-witted. I continued to visit poor Sarah, and told her the lovely story of the Gospel. One day I went into the room rather downhearted; I could not tell whether she had understood a word of what I had been telling her. "Well, Sarah!" I said, "you are the most uncomfortable parishioner I ever had. Here I come to see you week after week, and I really don't know whether you are listening, or whether you are asleep, or even whether you are alive." I knelt down and prayed, and then I went away. The next day, just as I came into the room, I saw one great big black eye peeping out of the blankets, and that was all. It was a beautiful eye, I can tell you. Before I left the room that day the poor wan face was all revealed. She told me that Jesus had spoken to her, though she had not spoken to me. I had some delightful times with her afterwards. I went in one day and found she was dying. I sat there talking to her with her hand in mind. While she was just breathing her last, her mother got behind me and put her arms round my neck. I did not know at the time that she was blind drunk, but I never came so near being strangled in all my life. I assure you it was as much as I could do with all my strength to get rid of the woman. The girl died then and there, and I thought the mother's behaviour was due to her extreme agitation; I never at the time suspected her of drinking. We buried poor Sarah, and then I used to go and see little Annie. Then happened that I ever experienced in my ministry. I would tell her of the love of Jesus—that He came and died for her; that He would come one of these days, and not very far distant I thought, and take her to Himself in heaven. She would say to me, "There is no use in my telling a lie; I do not think anything at all about it." I believe she said that to me twenty times. Just at that time I went away somewhere. When I came back I saw her again; a resurrection from the dead could not have made a greater change than that which I saw in her. I said to her, "Annie, you are looking so different; what has brought it about?" "Sit down," she said, "and I will tell you all about it." "Well, now, what is it?" "I want to tell you this," she said. "I remember all the lessons I used to learn in the Sunday-school. The teachers said there was no use in teaching me anything, as I would never remember it. But I remember it all; and I will tell you more: I remember all you used to be saying here." "How did you get it all?" "I got it all since you were here." "Tell me how it was." She opened her little mouth, and poured out her tale of the love of Jesus. I sat listening like one entranced. "How is this?" I asked. "Don't you know?" she said; "the Holy Ghost came and gave it all to me." I believe it. Weeks passed before she died; and I hardly ever missed a day listening to hear her talk of Jesus. At first she would have me read hymns to her, but at the last she would have nothing but the Bible—not a hymn. She would say, "Now tell me some of the promises." I would read some of them, and no matter what it was, whether from the Old or New Testament, she would always say, "Aye, He said it, and He'll keep to it."

A TOUCHING NARRATIVE,

One day I went in, and I saw the child was dying. She said to me, "Oh, I thought you would never come! I am so anxious to have you do three things for me before I go home." "Well, what is it?" "You must be quick about it. One thing is to bring all your own children to see me." I have five sons and two daughters, and they were all brought in; they were children then. Oh, if you had heard her. She made them all kneel down beside her bed. She put her little hands on each of them, and blessed them in the name of the Lord. Then she went on to say what a dear Saviour the Lord Jesus was. "If He were here, He would come and play with you. He was very fond of little children. He used to take them in his arms; and if He were here, He would take you up in his arms." My children never forgot that scene; certainly four of them are now serving the Lord Jesus Christ. They were taken out of the room in hysterics, crying as if their young hearts would break. They had brought strawberries and flowers to the two girls, and had become greatly attached to them.

Annie lay back very much exhausted when they were gone. She said to me, "I hope I will last until I get you to do the other things. I want you to call in my father, my mother, my brother, and sisters." They had all gone out, and I was alone with her. They all came in and knelt down. "Now promise that you will do what I ask you." "Yes, I will do whatever you ask, God helping me." "You put your ear down"—she could only speak in a whisper—"and you repeat what I whisper." She commenced to pray for her father; that father died a Christian since. She prayed for her sisters; these sisters have died in the Lord Jesus Christ since. She prayed for her brother; he has died a Christian since. At last she came to her mother—and this was the first time I ever suspected that anything was wrong with the mother. She said: "Now say—'Oh, Lord God, for the Lord Jesus Christ's sake, won't you forgive mamma? You know how often she used to send me out to the hedge in the garden for the bottle of whisky that the grocer used to leave there.'" As soon as I had repeated this, the woman rose up, cursed her own child, and told her she was an infernal liar. Oh, the power of strong drink; it is something fearful! I never heard that any good came to this poor, unhappy woman, or that she did not die as she had lived.

The poor girl was so exhausted that it was about twenty minutes before she seemed to be able to open her eyes. She took no notice of what her mother had said; but when the prayer was ended all the family went out of the room. Then she looked me in the face with a look that I will never forget. "I want you to do another thing?" "Well, what is it?" "I want you to give me a kiss." I put my arms round her neck, and pressed my lips to her forehead. She put her little hands against my face, and with a strength of which I could not have believed her capable, pushed me away from her. I saw her whole face light up as with heaven's light; her sweet eyes became fixed on one spot, and she began to speak: "Oh, my beautiful Jesus; how very lovely you are. You have come for Annie; I am sure you have. You won't go away again, you lovely Jesus." "Annie, dear," I said, "what do you see?" She took no notice of me, but she went on speaking. "Oh, beautiful Jesus! you did come down from heaven, and you did die for Annie; you dear Lord Jesus, how I love you!" Soon after Annie went into the presence of the King, to go no more out. Let all Sunday-school teachers and workers among the young be encouraged to labour on. They can never tell when and how the fruit may appear.

SECOND DAY—THURSDAY, AUGUST 5.

Mr. Moody is nothing if not practical. He is strong on doctrinal points, it is true; but having laid a good substratum of truth, he makes haste to rear on it the structure of the Christian life. This morning he plunged into a subject which he has so emphatically made his own—that of

HOW TO CONDUCT AFTER MEETINGS.

He had delivered himself a few days before on this same theme to the college boys at Mount Hermon, but it was noticeable that he by no means repeated himself. Even if he had it would have been excusable, as his audience was a very different one. This, said he, is a very vital question. If every Gospel address were followed up by an after meeting judiciously conducted, there would be ten times the fruit that we see in the churches. There is no pit of difficulty into which a human soul has fallen, out of which he cannot be helped by some passage from God's Word. It is a sad fact that so few Church members are able to lead an anxious soul into the light. Who can estimate the number of those that remain in darkness, because of the lack of this kind of help. It is amazing how few people are converted under the ordinary Church sermons, and apart from individual effort. People say the preaching ought to be so plain that anyone can find the way of life through simply hearing the Word. That may be true; and yet we know there were many who desired further light after the preaching of John the Baptist and the Apostles, although their preaching was plain enough. The hearers asked questions. What would the modern minister think if, in the middle of a metaphysical discourse, some hearer were to interrupt with the question: "Tell us what we must do to be saved." It seems to me that preaching is of no use unless it awakens the spirit of inquiry. When we fully realise this, and act upon it, we will get results. As to you cannot lay down a hard and fast rule. As God has not made two men alike, so no two inquirers can be treated alike. We must suit the remedy to the disease. No true physician would indiscriminately prescribe cod-liver oil to a lot of people suffering from varied complaints. Mr. Moody then took up different classes of inquirers, and indicated how each should be dealt with. Backsliders are great stumbling-blocks in the way of Church progress. One backslider will nullify all the good that ten Christians can accomplish. Jeremiah is the book out of which to convince them and lead them back to the point where they began. What utter ruin does a backslider bring on his family. An old man in St. Louis was restored from an ungodly life, at one of our meetings there, and his face beamed with joy. Next night, when he came to our meeting, he was the most miserable-looking being I think I ever saw. I asked him what the trouble was. He said he had spent the most wretched day of his life. "This morning, after breakfast, I started out to visit my children, who are married, in the city. I have spent the day going round telling them I have been restored to God's favour, and I did not see one of them who did not mock me. I have led them into the world, and now I cannot get them out." It was the story of Lot in Sodom over again. Questions were asked of Mr. Moody as to whether a restored backslider should be encouraged to engage in public work. Certainly, he replied; God never used David and Peter so much before as after their fall and restoration. What a blessing to the Church have been David's psalms, written after he was restored to the favour of God. If a backslider thinks he is so far gone that there is no hope for him, take him to the case of Peter, who denied his Lord with oaths and curses, and yet was restored with one gracious look from the Master.

Those who are not fully convicted of sin should be taken to Sinai and made to hear the thunders of the condemning law. On the other hand, the penitent should hear the sweet invitation, "Come unto me, all ye that labour and are heavy laden, and I will give you rest." In all this work recollect that the Holy Spirit alone can convict men of sin. Unless He is grieved, He will work with us and honour the word. Nothing grieves the Spirit so much as a church quarrel or a family feud. I would not waste my life preaching to a church where the members could not agree among themselves; I would get out of it, and work up a congregation of my own. If a man has not got "a clean record," by no means permit him to work in the inquiry-room; let him know that he must straighten out his own life before he can engage in work for God. A man ought not to object to be told his faults. The best friend I have is the man who points out my failings to me; if I have not grace enough to hear his message, the less I attempt to do for Christ the better. The man who wants to win souls must know how to handle his Bible. During the last year or two, perhaps the sermon that has been most blessed in my preaching has been that on "Sowing and Reaping."

MR. RAINSFORD'S INQUIRY ROOM.

Another incident from his ministerial experience was told by Mr. Rainsford in his peculiarly graphic and inimitable way. A lady lived near me, he said, who had an ungodly husband, and who suffered from heart disease. The doctor had forbidden anyone to go near her, especially a clergyman, as any mental disturbance might be the death of her. I did not want to be the death of her; but it was laid on my heart to try and visit her, though how to accomplish it I knew not. But how wonderfully God opens the way for us, when we have anything to do for Him. One beautiful evening I went to her house, wondering if there was any chance of getting in. As I approached, I could see through the window that the lady was in the drawing-room. The hall door was wide open. I knew I was forbidden the house, but I prayed the Lord to guide me in the matter. I knew they could not hang me for it, at any rate. I entered the hall door and went straight into the room where the lady was reclining on a couch. As if I did not see her, I walked right up to the window and looked out; what a lovely view it was. As I admired the prospect, I began to repeat some words of Scripture, to comfort myself as it were. As God would have it, I read the words towards the close of Isa. xliii. :—

> This people have I formed for Myself; they shall shew forth my praise. But thou hast not called upon Me, O Jacob; but thou hast been weary of Me, O Israel. Thou hast not brought me the small cattle of thy burnt offerings; neither hast thou honoured Me with thy sacrifices. I have not caused thee to serve with an offering, nor wearied thee with incense. Thou hast bought Me no sweet cane with money, neither hast thou filled me with the fat of thy sacrifices: but thou hast made Me to serve with thy sins, thou hast wearied Me with thine iniquities. I, even I, am He that blotteth out thy transgressions for mine own sake, and will not remember thy sins. Put Me in remembrance: let us plead together: declare thou, that thou mayest be justified.

When I had finished, I heard a voice behind me: "In the name of God, Mr. Rainsford, what am I to put Him in remembrance of?" I was almost afraid to turn round, so I read again, "Thou hast not brought Me the small cattle of thy burnt offerings; neither hast thou honoured Me with thy sacrifices," and so on. Then she said again: "In the name of God, what am I to put Him in remembrance of?". I read it again. "You don't mean that I am to put the Almighty in remembrance of these things?" "Yes, that is what it says; but it says something else." "What is that?" "I, even I, am He that blotteth out thy transgressions for mine own sake, and will not remember thy sins." She clapped her hands and exclaimed, "That will do for me." I thought then I might turn round and talk to her face to face. For some weeks afterwards it was my privilege to visit her, and she never lost her joy. She used to call me her darling after that, poor soul. When she was dying she said to me, "Darling, give me my verse." So I repeated it to her, "Thou hast wearied Me with thine iniquities. . . . I am He that blotteth out thy sins for mine own sake. Put me in remembrance." Her poor lips moved, and she whispered, "I do, I do," and then she went home. Thank God for that inquiry meeting.

continuing the subject of dealing with different kinds of inquirers, said that returning backsliders were more hindered by the cold reception they receive from professing Christians than by any other cause. He told of one man in his own congregation who was redeemed from drink, opium smoking, and other gross sins. The poor penitent got up in the prayer meeting, confessed his faults, and stated his determination by God's help to lead a different life. Scarcely one hand in the church was held out to help him; the people came and said they did not want him to take part in the prayer meeting, they had no confidence in him. They would not consent to his being restored to Church membership or to his teaching in the Sunday-school, though he said it was his salvation to get something to do for Christ. This is no exceptional case, they are happening in the churches every day.

MAJOR WHITTLE

told how he had frequently presented a hearer with some gift, in order to show the freeness of salvation. On one occasion he presented his knife to a young man; his father said some time later that there was good evidence the boy had taken Jesus Christ as his Saviour. The Major also told of a sceptic whom he visited in an institution in California. He got permission from the man to read the Scriptures to him day by day. When he came to Isa. liii. the man broke down, and on his knees threw himself on the mercy of God. He had been a very hard-hearted man, and had ill-treated one of his daughters. Strangely enough, just as he rose from his knees this girl came, desiring to see him. She timidly opened the door. He did not hesitate a moment. With the tears running down his face he took her in his arms and said, "My dear child, will you forgive me? Jesus Christ has forgiven me."

HOW AN INFIDEL WAS WON.

In the afternoon Mr. Rainsford gave a suggestive running commentary on the story of the Syro-Phœnician women, and closed with another of the illustrative anecdotes, drawn from personal experience, that are greatly charming these Northfield audiences. It was about an infidel who was sick, and whom he was desired to visit by a friend interested in his salvation. I wrote, said Mr. Rainsford, saying that I would be glad to call on him if he would allow me. I got a civil letter in reply, thanking me for my very kind intention, and saying he would be glad to see me, only he would not on any condition have a parson call on him. I encouraged myself in the Lord, and next day I went to the house, parson and all. I found the housekeeper in tears; she had just received the news that her son, who was a soldier in India, had been killed. "He was a poor, thoughtless young man," she exclaimed; "God help him! there was no one to speak a word to him about Jesus Christ. Oh! oh! my poor son!" I passed into the room, and found the gentleman lying in his bed. He was all covered with abscesses, poor fellow, and his life was slowly ebbing away. When he saw that I was a parson, he just turned round in his bed and lay with his face to the wall. Not a word would he speak. I told him some of the gracious promises of God, but he did not seem to heed what I said.

I called again, and was met at the door by the housekeeper, who held up her hands, and said, "Go away! Go away! I never saw anybody so angry as the gentleman was the last time you called. You must not go upstairs." Remembering what she had told me on my previous visit, I said, "Is that the way you would have liked your poor son to be treated when he was dying on the field of battle?" I went on, and spoke to her in this strain, and at last, poor old soul, she said to me, "Go up with you! Go up! I cannot help it." I went up; the moment the man saw me he again turned his back to me and his face to the wall. I repeated some texts to him as before, and the only response I got was a gruff "Ugh!" This went on for three or four visits. At last one day he turned round, looked me straight in the face, and said, "Are you like the rest of them?" "What do you mean?" "Are you like the rest of the parsons?" "Well, I don't know; what do you mean?" Said he, "They have been very good at eating my dinners, and drinking my wine, but that is all the good I ever knew them to do." I said I did not know about drinking his wine, but probably I might have eaten some of his dinners, if he had asked me. Said he, "I believe you would. Now, sir, you have been very good in coming here and reading to me some very wonderful things. I suppose one day you will stand at the judgment seat of Christ, and, as you hope to do so, I want you to answer me one question. I am not going to make a confession of my past life, though I have lived no better than I need. I have not troubled the church much for the last twenty years, and what I have done would not go far to recommend me in another world, I grant you. But I want to ask you if the things you have told me are true?" "Yes, they are." "Are they unlimitedly true?" "Yes." "How do you know they are true?" "They are God's Word, and He never told a lie." "But what I mean to ask is: Are they so true that a fellow who has never served God, and never been to church for twenty years, but has served the devil faithfully all that time, may take them all to himself?". "Why, yes, they are God's own message to you." "You tell me that in the presence of God?" said he. "Yes, I do." "Then, God Almighty, I believe it." For a month after, I had the privilege of visiting that man, and he was full of the joy of the Lord.

One Sunday evening, after preaching, I went to the house, and found that his spirit had just departed. The poor old housekeeper was sitting by his bedside, crying bitterly. The Bible was open at the words: "Fear not, for I am with thee; be not dismayed, for I am thy God. I will strengthen thee. Yea, I will help thee: yea, I will uphold thee with the right hand of my righteousness." Said she, "He made me read that about five minutes before you came in; isn't it very pretty?" Poor soul, she did not know the meaning of it; but he understood it, and on these precious promises he had pillowed his dying head.

THURSDAY EVENING.

Two meetings a day, and each so full of matter, might be thought sufficient for a Summer Conference in a place like Northfield, with such magnificent outside attractions and surroundings. But past experience of such gatherings has shown me that it is not easy to satisfy the appetite of earnest Christians, either for study or for work. On this second evening three meetings were arranged. At the East Hall a company of men assembled to hear Dr. Pierson answer questions on various expository and practical topics.

INDIA'S WOMEN.

The chapel of Marquand Hall was the scene of an interesting gathering of ladies to hear Miss Gardner, a missionary of India, tell of the work of the Lord there, as she had seen it for the last twenty years or more. She has recently laboured in the Gospel in the city of Cawnpore. On furlough for the last year or so in this country (for she is an American), she has addressed about one hundred meetings throughout the States, putting the claims of India's perishing and ignorant millions before her fellow countrywomen. She purposes soon to return to India, and hopes to commence a school for the higher education of native girls in Calcutta. This will be a new movement in the city, and is one more indication of the growth of native sentiment on the subject of the elevation of India's women, and their release from the bonds of superstition and of evil customs that have enslaved them so long.

Some twenty-five years ago, mainly through the consecrated zeal of the late Mrs. Doremus, of New York (a lady whose name is well known and much revered in the history of modern missions), there was founded

THE WOMEN'S UNION MISSION SOCIETY.

It was the pioneer society of its kind in America, and for several years it held the field. Since then many forward steps have been taken, and now every great missionary board in the States has its women's branch. When Miss Gardner went to India, the zenanas were sealed against foreign intrusion. In Calcutta, where the strictness of zenana life began to be relaxed, it was then common to hear the remark from native gentlemen: "If you want to teach our boys you may do so as much as you like, but you must not go near our girls. The reputation of our families depends upon our girls being kept in seclusion, and being married at an early age." How different it is to-day. In the Bengal district there were three years ago 58,000 girls being instructed. The movement begun in Calcutta, spread to Allahabad, and latterly to Cawnpore. Miss Ward and Miss Gardner began work there with four native houses into which they the entrée. Now there are 180 houses visited, and 25 girls' schools; that is an index of the growth of Gospel work and education among the women of India. On the general subject of Indian missions Miss Gardner has to tell. She speaks sorrowfully of the influence exerted by many English residents, and those belonging to the military profession. You may pass by a Parsee shop on the Sabbath day in an Indian garrison town, and there you will find the carriage of the Englishman standing at the door while the owner is inside purchasing cigars. They feel free to do many such things that they would avoid at home, and there is ample scope for evangelistic work among them, as well as among the natives. Some of those in places of authority and influence are happily on the side of the missionary and of Christianity. One English lady, the wife of a surgeon-major, is very active in good works. She has learned to repeat in Hindustanee the text, "God so loved the world," &c. To every native she meets she hands a tract, and if he stops she will repeat to him this text. If all the English people were equally zealous, what a power of good they would be in India.

A special interest has lately centred around the missionary work in India of Rev. S. Knowles. He is there under the American Missionary Board, and up to the last year or two has been working very quietly. Of late he has received a baptism of the spirit of consecration and power, and wonderful results have followed his preaching of the simple Gospel message. He has a thorough command of the language, and goes out to the villages preaching. Recently he wrote of a whole village turning to Christ and being baptized, from the high-caste Brahmins and priests downwards. At a mela or native festival for the worship of their gods near Lucknow he went to preach; as a result 242 natives were baptized in the name of Christ. They scattered to their homes carrying the Gospel message.

Zenana visitation is not the only channel through which they can be reached.

"GHAT" WORK

is very interesting. The "ghat" is a pier at the river side, where the females gather for washing clothes. Perhaps two hundred of them will meet there early in the morning. The lady missionaries go down and sow the Gospel seed among them, though of course it is very difficult to tell how far it has taken root. Sometimes there are good grounds for hope. Miss Gardner tells of one occasion shortly after she went to India. There was great sickness in the district, and a woman had come a long distance to make a special offering to the god of the river. These women are very particular not to touch anything that would, in their eyes, pollute them or interfere with their caste ideas. This woman had brought her little all as an offering to the gods, if so they might spare the life of her child. She went to the river and began her prayers, but she could not get peace to her spirit. She thought the gods for some reason were still angry with her, and in her sorrow she sat down on the edge of the pier. While sitting there she heard a strange voice singing in her own tongue a hymn with the refrain, "Jesus will save, Jesus will save." She walked up the pier steps to where the lady missionary stood on the highest step. When the lady finished the singing she told the people about Christ, and how all the water in the river could not wash away their sins. This poor woman was so affected by what she heard that she forgot all about her caste prejudices, and pressed close up to the missionary who was telling of Christ and his saving efficacy. She had never heard of these things before. She took the truth home with her in her heart, and though she was not heard from again, in all probability she got the peace that comes from a simple trust in Jesus Christ.

THE SOCIAL CONDITION

of Indian women is a great hindrance to the progress of the Gospel, but it is slowly changing for the better. The Methodists in Cawnpore lately erected a new church. The minister had a private entrance made in one corner, so that the secluded women might come in and take part in the worship in a place set apart for them, without being seen. When Miss Gardner heard of this she was perfectly delighted with the idea, but scarcely believed it could be carried out. Some months later, after she had left India, she heard that at the dedication of the church there were present fifteen zenana women, who had never before left their homes for such a purpose; they had come in closed carriages, and were admitted by the private door. Some of these were a little while ago bigoted Mohammedan women, and the thing was quite unique in Indian experience. The men are coming to see that the women are naturally as intelligent as they are. The mere fact that a school is about to be opened for the higher education of native girls, shows the great change in feeling on this vital subject. The opposition now comes mainly from the old people; when the younger generation rises up to take their places the change will become far more apparent. The system of child marriage shows symptoms of decay, but it takes long to uproot customs that have been woven into the very fabric of society. These early marriages cut short the education of the girls; as soon as they are married—and it is counted a great disgrace not to be married by the age of twelve—they are secluded, and Christian influence over them is largely withdrawn. The main object is to instil in their young minds Bible truths that they will not be able to forget.

Miss Gardner spoke of several Indian ladies, now in America, who have attained to high distinction in intellectual knowledge. She also expressed very warmly her appreciation of the efforts of Lady Dufferin to extend medical knowledge among the women of India, and the provision of qualified lady practitioners. There are many cases in which women die for lack of competent medical aid. I am sure your readers will be interested to know these details of work in a singularly promising missionary field, and will wish Miss Gardner God-speed in her new sphere of work in Calcutta.

A GOSPEL MEETING.

The announcement, posted upon some of the gigantic elm-trees that line the Northfield High-street, that Mr. Sankey, Major Whittle, and others would conduct a Gospel meeting in the Congregational Chapel, drew together a good audience, notwithstanding the double attraction at the Seminary Buildings. Mr. Rainsford had also been announced, but was too much fatigued to come. His place was taken by Dr. Munhall, the well-known evangelist of the West, whose recent successes in California were noticed in your columns. The Doctor is, perhaps, the most versatile man now sojourning in this valley, excepting, of course, Mr. Moody himself. He is a man of culture, and has a keen, vigorous mind; it was a treat of no ordinary kind to see him sitting in the stone porch of Marquand Hall one evening, the centre of a critical group, and holding his own against all comers on various topics of current interest. At this Gospel meeting he treated the audience to a thoughtful talk on the absolute impossibility of living the Christ life of self-abnegation and self-denial without partaking of the Divine nature. The argument was, perhaps, too philosophical for some of the village youth who were present, but to any thinking Unitarians who happened to be there (and Northfield has still a goodly show of the professed disciples of that dreary system of negation), it must have proved of special value. Dr. Munhall was followed by now a mechanic, resident at Lockport, New York, but once a soldier and a Roman Catholic. He told the story of his conversion through the preaching of Mr. George Needham, and, in the course of an interesting narrative, gave some thrilling experiences of the civil war, in which he attained the rank of captain.

As the president of the meeting, Major Whittle made an earnest appeal for decision, and the impression thus made must have been greatly helped by

A NEW SONG FROM MR. SANKEY.

Some two weeks since Miss Fanny J. Crosby, the blind lady so well known on both sides of the Atlantic as a voluminous writer of Gospel hymns, was a visitor at Mr. Sankey's home. She attended some of the sessions of the Mount Hermon Summer School, and, during her stay, wrote several new hymns, one of them on the words, "Whosoever calleth on the name of the Lord shall be saved." The hymn, set to a very pleasing and effective melody by Mr. Sankey, was sung by him for the first time in public this evening. Judging from the readiness with which it was taken up, it is likely to prove a favourite. Its key text was suggested to Mr. Sankey as the theme for a song by an incident of the last London campaign, which I well remember. During the meetings at Lavender-hill, Clapham, Mr. Moody was absent one afternoon on account of a troublesome tooth—the only occasion in all my recollection on which he did not fulfil his engagements. He sent an explanatory telegram, giving also a passage of Scripture, which was read out to the meeting by Mr. Sankey. This passage was, "Whosoever shall call on the name of the Lord shall be saved." Two weeks after, in another part of the city, Mr. Sankey met with a Swede working in the inquiry-room, who told him that that text read from Mr. Moody's telegram was the means of his conversion, humanly speaking. With such a genesis, the new hymn ought to be destined to a useful career. Mr. Sankey rang out the Gospel contained in it with all his old-time sweetness and power. He has lately composed some fine melodies of the flowing and sympathetic type, and your readers will doubtless have the benefit of them in due time. There was no after-meeting in the church this evening, but quite a number rose as expressing their desire for spiritual blessing, and I heard of at least two cases of soul decision.

THIRD DAY—FRIDAY, AUGUST 6.

MORE COUNSEL FOR WORKERS.

This morning Mr. Moody again took the stand and continued his talk on dealing with the different classes of inquirers. If the workers gathered here are not well equipped for their task, it will not be the fault of our evangelist and host. He began by a reference to those who raise objections to the Divinity of Christ. I understand that many of the Unitarian dwellers in these parts are attending the Conference meetings, and it may be he intended this word for their special benefit. In dealing with such, he said, those sayings of our Lord which claim supernatural power and equality with the Father should be quoted. Christ not only healed men of bodily diseases, but pronounced the absolution of their sins. He allowed men to worship Him, a thing that no mere man, if he were honest, would permit. "All power is given to Me in heaven and on earth"; could there be any bolder assertion of his divinity than that? Give such objectors the Word of God without argument and leave the Holy Spirit to apply the message. Some anxious souls say they fear they will not hold out. Give them Christ's word about no one being able to pluck his sheep out of his hand; and Paul's confession of faith, "I am persuaded that He is able to keep that which I have committed to Him." As the vine clings to the oak, let them be encouraged to cling to Christ who has said, "I will uphold thee with the right hand of My righteousness." Your readers are familiar with Mr. Moody's keen exposure of the folly of trusting to or waiting for "feeling" as a testimony of salvation. It is the devil's last plank. The word "feeling" never once occurs in the whole Bible as a condition of acceptance with God. What He wants is obedience; let a man obey, and the right feeling will come without asking. The devil can play on one's feelings like a harp, but he cannot change the eternal word of God.

At this point Mr. Moody was sharply questioned from different parts of the hall as to the relative importance of sorrow for sin and repentance as precedent to peace with God. He admitted the value of these elements in the case, but insisted that they must not be put forward as things that must be experienced in a particular way before the sinner can accept the Saviour. Make no barriers between the soul and Christ. God commands all men everywhere to repent, and a command always pre-supposes the power to obey it or reject it. Get inquirers to trust by simple faith on the word of Christ, and all else will follow in its right place. A word of caution came next as to teaching perfection in the flesh. If a man thinks he can be freed from the motions of sin he will be grievously disappointed, and a revulsion will be sure to come. Let the young convert be encouraged to confess Christ at once; the lack of this often brings darkness into the soul. The absence of a forgiving spirit towards others is frequently a great stumbling-block in the way of peace with God. Above all, there is the crowning sin of unbelief—the mother of all sins. He that believeth not the testimony of God concerning his Son maketh Him a liar; what greater insult could be offered to the Almighty One? There are those who think they cannot be saved all at once. Show them that if salvation is a gift, there is a definite time when it must be accepted or rejected. The crucial point in the experience of the anxious soul is the moment when the will is surrendered, and the heart is yielded up to God. In some solemn closing words, Mr. Moody dwelt on the deplorable waste of energy in so many churches; many young ladies are ready to patronise sewing circles, and so forth, but few are willing to take up real spiritual work. An earnest word was addressed to the pastors about utilising Sunday evening services for drawing the Gospel net. In many of our churches we want a moral earthquake. As a whole, we are making no headway in the world; indeed, the increase of population is far greater than the growth of the churches. Many of them think they have had quite a successful year if they have paid the pastor's salary and all the other debts, though not a solitary soul may have been brought into the fold.

"WHAT BROUGHT HIM TO HIMSELF?"

Some remarks on the same line followed from Mr. Rainsford, and, as usual, he pointed them with a story. It does not matter so much how you believe, he said, as what you believe. The story illustrated the point of repentance, and was about a dying young man whom he was called to visit on a stormy winter's night. He had burst a blood-vessel, and was just gasping for life. "I thought you would never come," he said to me. "I am dying, and there is no hope for me. I have neglected God all my life, and there is no hope whatever." I quoted the promise: "Him that cometh to Me I will in no wise cast out;" that means you. "Oh, yes, but I must come with repentance." "Christ says, 'I will in no wise cast out.'" "If there is one thing fixed in my mind more than another, it is that God will not receive me without repentance." "My dear friend, you are putting repentance where God never put it." "Well, I believe, I must repent before I can come to Christ." Said I, "Did you ever hear the story of the prodigal son?" "I cannot say that I have; I have heard my poor old father talk about a prodigal, but I thought it might be myself he meant." "It is a beautiful story in God's Word;" and I told him the story. When we came to the place where it says, he came to himself, I said, "Now tell me; what brought him to himself?" Said he, after a pause, "Well, I suppose it was because he had nothing but husks to eat." "Poor fellow," said I, "you had nothing but husks to eat for a long while, but that never brought you home. Now, what brought him to himself?" "Well, I suppose he found out he was a bad boy." "No, you have not got it yet." I shall never forget the poor fellow's agony as each time I told him he was wrong. I repeated the story once more, and when I came to the words, "he came to himself," I saw a beautiful light shine over his face. "I have it!" he exclaimed. The tears began to roll down his hollow, pale cheeks, and he said: "He remembered that his father loved him, and had a heart big enough to take him back." Then he began to pray: "Oh, my God and Father, would it be within the bounds of possibility for a poor prodigal like me to return?" So he came back. While the Lord spared him I used to go and see him, and joyful times we had. I happened to be beside him when he died. A friend of his who had been an ungodly man came to see him, but when he noticed me he withdrew. I said "Come in and speak to your friend." I wanted him to get something that would do him good. He came in and said to the dying man, "Poor fellow! I am sorry we are so soon to lose you." His voice was almost gone, and he could not reply. I said, "Ask him where he is going." He said, "Do you know where you are going?" The poor thin finger went up, and he whispered, "To the Father; to the Father." I said, "Ask him how he knows." "How do you know?" said his friend. Again he whispered, "The Father tells no lies." And that was the last thing he said. I learned there just where to put repentance.

FRIDAY AFTERNOON.

The event of Friday afternoon was the reading of an elaborate paper by Dr. NATHANIEL WEST, of St. Paul, Minnesota. Dr. West's voice had not hitherto been heard at Northfield, and it was only by a happy chance, humanly speaking, that he was there on this occasion. He had prepared a paper to be read at the Niagara Conference, not expecting to be able to attend himself on account of illness. When that Conference was held, a week in advance of Mr. Moody's, Dr. West was well enough to be present, and to read his paper. Some of the friends who heard it were so struck with it that they persuaded the Doctor to cancel some other engagements and go to Northfield to re-deliver his address. He came, he read, he spoke, and, without a doubt, he conquered the hearts of many of the people, Mr. Moody among the others. If he is spared, his musical voice will certainly be heard on these hills again. He is a theologian of the good old school, a scholar of large and varied attainments, thoroughly well versed in all the doctrinal and scientific discussions of the day, and a most able defender of the faith, as it is held by evangelical Christians of the premillennial school of prophetic interpretation. Some of the friends whom I met at Northfield, and who are acquainted with this side of the water, expressed to me the strong conviction that he would be a very acceptable speaker on the Mildmay platform; and I quite agree with them.

Dr. West's address this afternoon was on and was founded on Dan. xii. 1—3. It was of such great length as to preclude its reproduction in full in your columns, but the following extracts will show its style and quality:—

The hope of the resurrection, so dear to God's Old Testament saints, is carried through the New Testament, and shines with superior light on the last pages of Divine revelation. It is a hope into which we ourselves are grafted, by sharing the grace of Him who is Israel's King and ours. I need not linger to refute that unbelieving criticism of our day which restrains the interpretation of these solemn words, in Daniel, to Maccabean, or Neronian times, or degrades them to a merely figurative import. They do not refer to the transient era of Maccabean independence, nor to the favour that came to the Church in the days of Constantine, nor to the Reformation of the sixteenth century, nor to the regeneration of the soul, nor to its ascension to heaven, nor to any political or ecclesiastical victory in this present age. Such violence to the plain letter of Scripture is its own refutation. The eyes of the revealing angel who speaks to Daniel, like those of the angel who speaks to John, reach to Israel's final outcome, "in the latter days," when Daniel, awaked from his "rest," shall stand in his lot "at the end of the days;" in other words, to the close of the present age.

Two great events stand out, in bold relief, in the foreground of the angel's observation. He looks forward to the "great tribulation" connected with Israel's final fortunes in the great crisis to come, the bisecting epoch that divides our present age from that of millennial glory, and fastens his eyes upon them. These events are: (1) the deliverance of the surviving remnant of Israel from the power of the last Antichrist; and (2) the resurrection of Israel's righteous dead, foremost among whom are Israel's faithful martyrs. Daniel's "people" are not the Christian Church, nor are "the children of thy people" believing Gentiles, as certain commentators would foolishly have it. It is the literal believing Israel whose living remnant is delivered, and whose faithful dead are raised; even that same reproached and outcast race to whom the Lord's mercy comes "in the latter days," when "the veil that is spread over all nations is destroyed," and "death is swallowed up of victory," and the Lord "takes away the rebuke of his people from off all the earth," and the "Jew" is no longer a proverb and a byword, and Jerusalem no longer is trodden down under foot of the Gentiles, but is a crown of glory in the hand of the Lord, and a royal diadem in the hand of her God.

Of the second of the two great classes just named—viz., Israel's faithful dead—the revealing angel gives a complete description, one that has touched the heart of Jew and Gentile in all ages.

THEIR REGISTER.

(1) He describes them from their register. Their names are found "written in the Book." By this phrase is meant the eternal predestination unto life of the righteous, by the sovereign will of God. "Chosen, faithful, and true," they are heirs by Divine right to eternal glory, having been "written in the Book of Life from the foundation of the world" (Rev. xvii. 8). The remaining unraised company of the sleepers, unregistered, sleep on in their sins and their graves, destined to eternal shame and contempt. They have no part in the "first resurrection."

(2) They are described from their number. They are "many," not all of Israel's dead, but only they who are "written in the Book;" not a few, on the other hand, but "the many" of verse 3, who "have been turned to righteousness"—a multitude. To Abraham, it was said in covenant, "I will make thy seed as the dust of the earth." A remnant at most at any one time, yet, in the outcome, a multitude that no man can number; the elect out of all the tribes, sealed with the seal of the living God, and gathered out of all the nations and kindreds and tongues where they are scattered. Like the springing wheat from the grain that is sown, or the drops of the dew from the morning's womb, so shall Israel's faithful dead be in the resurrection of the just. Multitudes! multitudes! of Israel's host, thick and bright as the beads of morning dew! Jacob's heavens shall drop down dew, when the souls of the righteous descend from above, and their bodies, revived, ascend from their graves; and the land shall become "the land of the living," and not of the dead. How vast the number!

THEIR CONDITION.

(3) They are described from their condition. They are "sleepers of the earth-dust," and, in Isa. xxvi. 19, the "dwellers of the dust." The dead are viewed in their whole personality, body and soul, and the description of them, as "sleeping," is taken for the repose of their material part in the grave. Sleep is the image of death. As to the souls of the righteous, they are "in the hands of God, and dwell near the throne of his glory." Soul-sleep is nowhere taught in the Bible. Their bodies rest in the grave, waiting the hour when the spirit's energy passes over to the material part of the believer, and along with this, earth's glorification begins. It belongs to the blessedness of the believer, that his body still remains united to God in covenant, and in fact. It is dust already redeemed. His sleep, unlike that of the wicked, is a blessed sleep. As he sinks to rest in the grave, and wraps the dark robe of death around him, he can calmly say his evening prayer with David, "I will both lay me down in peace and sleep, for Thou, Lord, only makest me to dwell in safety" (Ps. iv. 8). "My flesh also shall rest in hope; for Thou wilt not abandon me to the grave" (Ps. xvi. 9). And, sure of his rising in the morning, he can say as his eyelids close, "I will behold thy face in righteousness; I shall be satisfied when I awake with thy likeness" (Ps. xvii. 15).

THEIR REWARD.

(4) They are described from their reward. And this is twofold. (1) A reward of life; (2) a reward of glory; and both everlasting. "These," who awake at that time, "shall be unto life everlasting." That is their destiny. There is no more separation now of soul or body. They were, indeed, possessors of life everlasting, prior to their death, and by virtue of their faith. But the life was a hidden life, a life in mystery and not in maturity, an inward spark not an outbursting flame, a firstfruit not the fulness of unfading fruition in glory. But more. The reward is a reward of glory, and special glory to all who turn many to righteousness. "The teachers shall shine as the brightness of the firmament, and they that have turned many to righteousness, as the stars forever and ever." What a motive to work! Ecclesiastical orders and titles are nothing here. The reward is not to a titled clergy as such, but to "teachers" of the law and the promise. It is not to fruitless preachers, but to "turners of many to righteousness." There is a glory in the kingdom for all, no matter how varied or numerous they are. A glory belongs to Christ, the central sun, none of us may claim as our own. Another glory belongs to the Church, the moon, that none of us may inherit, a borrowed splendour that covers the whole company of saints as one. But there is glory that belongs to the individual "glitterers" of the firmament, different in degree, and it is ours, so to turn many to righteousness, as that neither Alcyone's sheen, nor the stars that burn in Orion's belt, shall surpass our brightness, in the resurrection of the just. And what a miracle of splendour that will be, when sun, moon, and stars all shine in the firmament, at the same time! We shall, each, have our own peculiar glory while yet lost in the "Greater Light" who rules that golden day.

THEIR CHARACTER.

(5) Once more: they are described from their character. This we have in the context, in chapter xi. 32, 33, to which the "many" here refers. In times of trial they count not their lives dear to them. Martyrdom for them has no terrors. "They fall by the sword and by flame, by captivity and spoil," and yet they "do exploits" for God. Such the prophets. Such the Maccabean heroes whose valor and faith Paul had commended; the martyred mother and her seven sons—a story that should magnetise the world into life; the dauntless host that "resisted unto blood, striving against sin;" God's unflinching braves who "were stoned and sawn asunder," the "tempted," the "wanderers about in sheepskins and goatskins, being destitute, afflicted, tormented, and of whom the world was not worthy." Such were, not only the martyrs of the law, but also, those of the Gospel, who were alike made "a gazing stock, both by reproaches and afflictions, and were companions of them that were so used"—elect souls who "took joyfully the spoiling of their goods, knowing that they had, in heaven, a better and an enduring substance." Pioneers, they were, of the suffering saints who found their only home on earth, in Roman catacombs, or Alpine solitudes, or in the cells of Spanish inquisition! Ease and popularity could not buy them. False brethren could not intimidate them. Calamity could not dishearten them. A trimming and time-serving policy could not attract them. Wealth, respectability, and power, could not overawe them. Honied flattery could not seduce them. The institutional morality, the customary ethics of society, a cunning prudence and desire of personal influence and social self-entrenchment, the neutrality so odious to God, had no charms for them. They were no "middle men." Deceived, betrayed, maligned, forsaken by friends, their worst foes those of their "own household," they still chose to "suffer affliction with the people of God, rather than enjoy the pleasures of sin for a season, having respect unto the recompense of the reward" (Heb. xi. 26). And they shall "shine!" Asleep in the dusty earth, they shall one day awake from their graves at the trumpet's call, and soaring upward, shall gleam as they go, flashing like the welkin's glance, and beaming as the stars, for ever and ever.

A PHILOSOPHY OF HISTORY.

What shall I say in conclusion? The book of Daniel is simply a philosophy of history in its great design. It was meant to be that. It has little to do with the doctrines of grace. It has all to do with the outward fortunes of Israel and the world-empires, and the outward development of the visible kingdom of God. The "New Testament Church" is not found in it once. It touches only on the beginning and close of the New Testament times. It busies itself, wholly, with Israel and the times of the Gentiles, or nations. Its one great object is to sketch a sacred calendar, covering in outline the whole range of four successive Gentile empires (the fourth of which still exists, though broken into various kingdoms and kings) from the first fall of Jerusalem and blotting out of the visible kingdom of God on earth, down to the "finishing of the mystery of God" with respect to Gentile, Jew, and the Church of God. Its one purpose is to lead us rapidly over the whole period of Israel's national ruin, rejection, dispersion, and expectation, on to the time when Gentile power shall no longer have any succession, but the sovereignty hitherto wielded shall be transferred, through judgment, to Israel's King and his saints. Apply it to the "Church" if you will. "Application is not interpretation." Make it belong, in a sense, to the first advent. It belongs in its truest sense to the second.

How glorious Israel's now waste and desolate land will be "in that day," and "at that time!" The whole territory, so mountainous, rough, and uneven now, shall "become a plain" in the midst of which the mountain of the Lord's house shall rise exalted in beauty and glory above all surrounding hills. Canaan shall become like the Arabia that stretches from Lebanon to the Dead Sea. The borders of the Holy Land shall be enlarged, its valleys exalted, its mountains brought low, its deserts made as the garden of Eden, and the Holy City rebuilt and adorned, with a temple of glory unseen before, Jerusalem shall be "a new thing in the earth," a "diadem of glory in the hand of her God." Salvation and praise will be the one music from her walls and her gates. A glorified land, city, people, and nation, the metropolitan point and splendour of a new age, shall Palestine and Jerusalem be in the day of the deliverance of Israel's remnant, and resurrection of Israel's faithful dead—a forelight of that further future regenesis, when not only a part, but "the whole creation shall be delivered from the bondage of corruption into the liberty of the glory of the children of God," and a new heaven and a new earth shall appear.

And now, O anxious believer in Jesus, waiting, watching, looking for and loving his appearing, "Go thou thy way till the end shall be!" If the Bridegroom tarries, "thou shalt rest," but—resting, or toiling till He comes—"thou shalt stand in thy lot at the end of the days."

THE THEATRICAL MISSION.

DURING the summer season the large Institute has proved most successful in inducing numbers of employés to frequent its comfortable and homely apartments, the weekly attendance registered being larger than any previous year. The Committee are most anxious to raise the remainder of the purchase money for Macready House before September 25, as, unless £2500 is then paid to the builder, a year's rental of £380 will be required.

Spiritual results afford cause for deep thankfulness to God. The personal conversation of Christian friends with many new members has resulted in much precious fruit, while among the theatrical children taken to Lowestoft for change, there have been some definite cases of conversion. Letter-writers and visitors alike are testifying to the encouragement with which they are meeting, and we can but believe that the fields of theatrical life, which have long been "white already to harvest," will furnish golden grain to the workers who have been associated with the Director and his indefatigable wife. All communications should be addressed, Mr. Courthope Todd, "Theatrical Mission Institute," Henrietta-street, Covent-garden, London, W.C.

PARIS CITY MISSION.

ESTABLISHED in 1879 by the late Lord Shaftesbury, this Mission has been acting as an auxiliary to the other evangelical forces in Paris. We have received a report of an address by Professor Yeatman, delivered at the sixth anniversary meeting, in which he calls attention to the greatly increased facilities for Gospel preaching in France. While he does not minimise the opposition of infidelity on the one hand, and rationalism on the other, he asserts that now, "for the first time in the history of France, is religious liberty the birthright of every citizen." Twenty years ago no religious meeting exceeding twenty in number could be held, and then never without a policeman being present.

In 1813, there were only 150 Protestant pastors in France, now there are 900, beside orphan homes, asylums, reformatories, and other results of Christian effort. In 1875, the French Bible Society circulated only 16,000 copies of Scriptures, but in 1885 the circulation was increased to 60,000. The "Société Centrale" began with three missionaries, it now employs 170, and has opened 360 mission stations. In 1871, a Lancashire pastor, on a holiday tour, was distributing tracts in the Belleville district, when the words of a working man led him to resign his charge and commence a mission in Paris. To-day the MacAll Mission has thirty-six halls in Paris and sixty in other parts of France.

These facts show that great doors and effectual are opened for the Gospel in France. It only remains for Christians to joyfully enter. Mr. MacAll, in a letter to the Professor, expressing his opinion of the situation, said: "The alternative for France surely is that it be flooded with the Gospel, or moral, social, total ruin." Such being the case, we are glad to see the report of the work of the Paris City Mission, and hope that the little—too little—band of missionaries, seven in number, may soon be increased to seventy, especially when we find the following record of the work accomplished:—

Domiciliary and sick visits	54,413
Meetings held or attended	11,684
Attendance at meetings	345,838
Bibles and Testaments sold or given away	10,087
Tracts and portions distributed	171,274

A meeting was held on Monday week at 5, Rue Daru, Paris, in the drawing-room of Rev. T. Howard Gill, Rev. W. Burnet presiding. After a short statement by the Secretary, Mr. J. M. Weylland said it was a pleasing surprise to see so large a gathering, showing their deep sympathy in the work of the Paris City Mission. In the records of the London City Mission (vol. i.), we found a record of a Paris City Mission, founded by David Nasmith fifty-four years ago. At that time a tract distributor was taken to prison, and was only liberated by an application to the British Ambassador. Now the missionaries were received gladly by some of the people. The Society is undenominational, and is helping all the Paris workers, and we must help to sustain this and every kindred work. Rev. W. Gibson, Rev. R. W. MacAll, Miss de Broen, Rev. C. T. Winckley, and Rev. W. Burnet addressed the meeting, and two of the missionaries (Messrs. Dedieu and Bresson) gave an account of their work.

Now that a holy ardour for missionary service has been kindled, and is extending in our midst, the sunny land within a few hours of our own coasts should not be forgotten by the Lord's people. Seven pastors are now waiting for missionaries. Further particulars respecting the Mission may be obtained from the Secretary, Mr. W. J. Lockie, 71, Rue des Batignolles, Paris, or the Honorary Secretary for England, Mr. J. M. Weylland, 31, Carlton-hill, St. John's-wood, N.W., who will also supply copies of a tractate, entitled "Facts and Narratives of Paris and the Paris City Mission" (1d.) by Mr. Weylland, giving an interesting account of the rise and progress of the Mission.

MR. C. RUSSELL HURDITCH writes:—Thank God with us for much blessing with the tent meetings in several places; and pray for us.

MR. PASCOE'S WORK IN MEXICO.

Friends interested in the work in Mexico will be glad to read the following extracts from Mr. Pascoe's paper. Of the work in Toluca he writes:—On April 29 I was enabled to start for Toluca, accompanied by my wife. I had wished to go at an earlier date, but the brethren of this neighbourhood were so eager for me to hold special services here during the so-called Holy Week, that I felt it right to remain, and a glorious gathering we had, which I must describe in its own place. What to do about the work in Toluca was my principal care. The congregation there had been several weeks without a preacher, and services being suspended in our old mission salon, they had taken to the other two Protestant temples, where, instead of being kindly received, they were much annoyed by taunts and ill-timed jeers from the preachers about the collapse of the undenominational church. So annoyed were they that several resolved to stay at home rather than be preached at, and made a laughing-stock of by "hirelings," who thought they had won the day.

I knew nothing of this state of affairs before reaching Toluca; but was constrained to make another effort before quite abandoning our old field of God-owned labours. I printed a brief circular letter addressed to the old and primitive converts in the various towns of the Toluca Valle, inviting them to join me in a fresh attempt to extend the Gospel in greater purity. That simple letter, distributed a few days only before my arrival in Toluca, caused quite a sensation. The rejoicing of the scattered members of our old congregation was indeed great, and we were crowded at our meetings. I preached morning and night on Sunday, May 2.

On Monday I visited one of the oldest converts, and sent messages to others. The next day several assembled, and, after prayer and consultation, I mentioned the absolute necessity of the brethren carrying on their meetings themselves in simple dependence on Christ's word and Spirit, without ever again depending on a salaried preacher. No less than fourteen of those present, all married men, undertook to carry on the meetings, and to preach themselves if no better could be found. The earnest prayers of those brethren revealed their great joy at the unexpected but much-hoped-for turn of the tide. I was deeply impressed by their thankfulness that the clear sound of Christ's teaching was not to die out in Toluca. I will at once add the good news that, during the eight weeks since I left them, they have done well, the meetings are crowded, as from many sources I learn, and their animation is unabated.

SAN TELMO.

Here the congregational work has been continuous and satisfactory, by which I mean that the attendance is numerous and animated; and various new comers have appeared as a tangible proof that the glad tidings continue to spread far down our mountain slopes.

We have had visits from other converts from the Hot Country: men converted through reading our publications, and who never heard a living preacher of the Gospel before they came here. And "poor" men, too, who travelled a whole week on foot in order to learn the way of God more perfectly. The services in Passion Week were crowded. Our new salon is a spacious room; lime-washed, it is true, its only ornamentation being long lines of printed texts; but it is large enough for several hundreds. We had various teachers, and the discourses of all were intensely spiritual, with the clear unmistakable ring of the Gospel.

A FAMILY ANXIETY.

That terrible plague, small-pox, rages in parts of this Republic. Our mountain isolation had so far been a great shield to us; but a family from Las Llaves recently brought a baby here infected with the terrible disease. They kept us ignorant of the fact that they were fleeing from the danger, hoping to save the baby, until the evil declared itself, and the child died. Next sickened and died here in our house also the youngest child of another family from the same place. Thus, without any imprudent act on our part, we have had the evil brought into our midst. Eight days have passed since the last child died, and to-day my little work-fellow Frank is laid down with strong fever symptoms and sickness. I promised that, God willing, he should go to Toluca this time with me to see the steam press. He has been quite excited over the prospect, and watched with eager interest my operations in fixing up a saddle for the donkey he will go on, should he go. This little anxiety is a family matter certainly, but I can ill afford to lose my little helper just now. In the Lord's loving hands I trust him: let Him do whatsoever seemeth good and is for his glory.

From a private letter we gather that the salon in which the brethren at Toluca meet may be purchased for £240, and the writer offers to give £100 towards the purchase, if the balance is raised by other friends.

STRATFORD & WEST HAM REFUGE.

One of the most difficult branches of Christian service is that of rescue work. We have before us a booklet in which Mrs. Pelly tells of the past work of the Stratford Refuge, and hopefully looks forward to its increased usefulness in the future.

Since the Refuge was opened, in 1883, no less than 309 cases had been received up to the end of 1885, and 13 women were then in the Home. While the faith of the workers has been sorely tried by financial difficulties, the wants of the Home have been supplied week by week, and at the end of the year there was a balance of £1 in hand, but outstanding liabilities to the amount of £79, for rent, repairs, &c.

Notwithstanding these difficulties, the work has increased, and another house has been opened next door to the Refuge as a Preventive and Training Home. The necessity of taking this step was forced upon the management by their previous experience of the work, and as an old house next door was offered for sale at the time when the need pressed, an arrangement was made whereby it was secured for two years with option of purchase. It has since been fitted up as a laundry, where the girls will be trained for service. Since September twenty-nine girls have been received there; some have gone into service, and sixteen were in the Home at the end of the year. A free registry office has also been opened. One of the urgent needs is a crèche, which we are told will cost £100 to start, and £1800 is needed to purchase the Refuge (Linden House) and the new Home. These do not exhaust the needs, but we must refer our readers to the report, which may be obtained from the Lady Superintendent, Mrs. Cooper, The Refuge, Stratford-green, E.

LITTLE SCOTTISH EMIGRANTS.

On August 30, a party of twenty-five emigrant children left Edinburgh for Liverpool, whence they sailed next day by the ss. Carthaginian for Nova Scotia. They had all, with one exception, been in the various Homes originated and superintended by Miss Stirling, and connected with the Edinburgh and Leith Children's Aid and Refuge. Miss Stirling herself took a similar party to Nova Scotia in the earlier part of the season, and is busily engaged superintending their establishment on a farm which she has purchased there.

It is needless to say that nearly every one of these children left behind them antecedents of want, misery, wickedness, and drink; but almost all, thank God, carried with them the frank, confiding ways of children used to an atmosphere of love. Further information as to this good work will be gladly supplied, and help received, by Mr. J. McDonald, secretary to the Homes, 3, Pitt-street, Edinburgh; or by Miss B. Thomson, St. Leonards, Wardie, Edinburgh.

OBITUARY.

REV. ROBERT HUNT.

We regret to record the death of Rev. Robert Hunt, late missionary in Patagonia and C.M.S. missionary in North-West America, which recently took place at his son's residence, St. Paul's Vicarage, Penzance, after a very short illness, in his eighty-first year. Mr. Hunt, who was born in 1805, rendered conspicuous service in the mission field.

MR. JOHN DOUGALL, NEW YORK.

We learn with much regret that Mr. John Dougall, editor of the New York Weekly Witness, died suddenly of heart disease on August 19, at the age of seventy-eight years. His attempt to establish a daily Christian paper in New York, The Daily Witness, continuing through eight years from 1871, was heroic. The enterprise was, however, not self-porting, and had to be abandoned.

MR. HERBERT SHAW.

This faithful servant of Christ died at Chesterfieldon the 24th ult. in his forty-third year. He was treasurer and assistant superintendent of the Chesterfield Ragged Schools, for which he had laboured many years, and was also a member of the Town Mission. The interment took place at Chesterfield Cemetery on the 27th ult., a large number of people following to the grave.

DR. J. G. WAKLEY.

This gentleman, the editor of The Lancet, expired at his residence, Heathlands-park, Longcross, near Chertsey, last week. He was the youngest son of the late Thomas Wakley, Coroner for Middlesex. For twenty-five years he edited The Lancet. He was one of the founders of the Hospital Sunday movement in London. Dr. Wakley suffered for nearly three years from cancer of the tongue, which carried him off somewhat suddenly at last. He was beloved by the poor people in his own neighbourhood, who were the objects of his constant solicitude.

THE PEOPLE'S PALACE, MILE END.

We have already referred to the proposed Sunday opening and the sale of intoxicants at this leviathan place of popular resort now in course of construction. These proposals are properly exciting much opposition among the friends of temperance and Sabbath-keeping in the East-end. Our friend, Mr. John Hilton, of Langveld House, Burdett-road, E., informs us that a strong committee has been formed with the view of nipping in the bud these undesirable projects. The chairman of the committee is Rev. Thomas Richardson, vicar of St. Benet's; the hon. treasurer is Mr. F. N. Charrington, of the Great Assembly Hall, Mile End, E.; and Mr. Hilton is hon. secretary. Memorials to the trustees of the People's Palace are prepared, and helpers are desired in getting these memorials extensively signed by the inhabitants. The success of the movement will largely depend on the number of volunteer helpers, and we trust that of these there will be no lack.

Workers will be welcomed at a meeting of the committee to be held at 7.30 to-morrow (Friday) evening, at St. Benet's Mission Hall, Mile End-road, E. Those who cannot give personal help are asked to strengthen the hands of the workers by contributing to the necessary expenses.

FAREWELL TO MISSIONARIES.—On Friday, August 27, a large congregation assembled at the Downs Chapel, Clapton, to commend to God the following missionaries, who sailed on Saturday week for the Congo:—Rev. W. H. and Mrs. Bentley, Messrs, R. D. Darby, R. H. C. Graham, H. Phillips, J. H. Shindler, and Miss Seed. Mr. Bentley had been out previously.

SHELTERING HOMES, LIVERPOOL.—Mrs. Birt writes to us from Knowlton, Canada, that the three parties of boys and girls have this year had a quicker placing out than ever, and the homes obtained are good. Very much of the lasting success of the juvenile emigration depends upon the training the children receive before coming to Canada, while strict supervision from the Distributing Home must be kept up. This work cannot be done in a very wholesale manner, for each child requires to be treated precisely as one of a family. Mrs. Birt and her helpers hope to sail for Liverpool in the Parisian on September 9, and ask to be remembered in prayer when on the restless sea, returning to their work in the great city amongst the lost little ones.

For the Young.

LESSONS FROM HARVEST.

MY DEAR YOUNG FRIENDS,—Some time ago I wrote you a letter about sheep and goats. I am sure they have given us many lessons since we came here. Lately we have heard another, which I think I must tell you. One day Miss Mudie was with Madame B——, when they met a goat with a bell round its neck, followed by three little lambs. Madame B—— said, "What a tiresome creature that goat is! We don't know how or why it does it, but it can always make the lambs follow it, and it always leads them away from the flock. I don't know where they would go now if I had not met them. I must lead them back to the shepherd." I think some of your friends will say, "Ah, it is often so with our little lambs; they are so easily led away by some companion, and sometimes we seek a long time before we can lead them back to the Good Shepherd."

Now I will tell you about the harvest. Miss Mudie and I are staying some weeks in this mountain village. I wish you could see it. Lean your slate or book against the wall of the schoolroom. You can fancy Gigors placed on the tip of the slope on three or four terraces, one above the other, while the wall will represent great precipices which overhang the village. Higher even than the precipice you can see the walls of the ruined chateau. The steep fields below the village are mostly cornfields, and during the past week, each family has been busy reaping. Such small sickles and such small sheaves! The children have been gleaning, and the old women, too. We have met them coming up the steep path, by the fountain, carrying their handfuls. The weather has been splendid, just enough rain to spare the trouble of watering the cabbages, and to hinder the grass from being burnt up; but not a day has been lost, and now the harvest has all been carried home.

As we are, perhaps, the only ones in the village who have not been actively engaged in the work, we have had the time to watch and think over the lessons of the harvest.

After the sheaves are brought home comes the hardest work—the threshing. There is a threshing floor, "aire," to every house. It must be in a high place so that the wind can sweep over it, and unshaded so that the full heat of the sun may strike on the sheaves, for unless the sun is hot the grain will not leave the husk. All day long the mules go round and round on the aire, dragging after them a heavy stone roller. Often the wife leads or drives the mule, while the husband arranges the sheaves. Our next neighbours are not rich enough to have a mule, so their wheat was threshed a different way—with a rod. The rod is from six to eight feet long, composed of long willow wands, bound together nearly their whole length. Three persons struck alternately on the "aire" till the work was done. You have seen threshing with a flail, of course, but I think never with a rod; at least, it was new to us. Now I want you to read the last verses in Isaiah xxviii. There you will find all these different ways of threshing, and others beside—cart-wheel, horses. Watching and reading all this we know there must be a lesson for us in it all, for the Bible tells us that if men know how to sow and how to reap it is because God has taught them Himself.

Shall I give you the lesson I learned as I watched the harvest and the threshing? I saw what pains men take to have the grain separated from everything else. First it is cut loose from the earth, leaving the root, which has nourished it all summer, to die in the ground. Then it is beaten, rolled, trodden, to separate it from the straw; then winnowed, to separate it from the chaff. Would you not think all was done? No; after that the wheat was taken to the fountain, and carefully washed and dried in the sun—carefully watched all the time, for fear the fowls should steal a single grain. And God's people are called "his wheat." You remember the parable where we read "Gather the wheat into my garner." The sharp sickle, the strokes of the rod, the crushing of the heavy roller are like the trials and bereavements God sends on his people. They are not to hurt the wheat, only to separate it from other things. No one likes sickness or sorrow, but they are God's way of threshing out his wheat.

But remember, trouble does not always do good. Some children are amiable enough when they are well, and can have their own way, but if sickness or disappointment comes they are fretful and unreasonable (I am afraid grown-up people also are sometimes). Some may think that a long illness must make people patient and submissive; sometimes it has just the contrary effect. You see, patience and submission come from God, and not from the disease. The grain needs to be winnowed as well as threshed, and after that the dust of the trodden chaff and straw stuck to it still. And so when we have done and suffered our best, we still need to be washed. We need the precious blood of Christ to cleanse us as much at the end of our Christian life as at its beginning.

Our neighbours were busy all day long washing and watching their wheat, and late in the afternoon it was taken down the steep pass to the mill, in the deep valley behind the rocks. This morning early they went to fetch it, and brought back the sacks of white flour. The last separating process was over. As we look on the fine, white, smooth powder, I like to think that only a few hours ago it was trodden under foot, and soiled with the dust of the threshing-floor. We can say, God can, will, do as much for us. "He that has begun a good work in us will perform it to the day of Christ." He loves his wheat too well not to separate it from everything that could defile it.

Your sincere Friend, S. R. GELDARD.

WHAT THE FLOWERS SAY.

THE DAISY.

☞All little children in this country know the daisy, that hardy little flower that springs up on the tiny grass-plot, and covers the fields, till they sometimes look as if sprinkled with snow. Perhaps many of you have spent pleasant hours making daisy-chains, but did you ever think that the little daisies you were picking had a message for you? Let me tell you what they say to me. I love to think that the flowers which brighten our earth so wonderfully are like the little children, who bring such sunshine into our hearts and homes. Now, how can a daisy be like a child in any way? Look at the flower—it has a yellow heart, surrounded by snowy little leaves (each really a tiny flower), and many of these are tipped with red. It looks upwards, and only opens fully in the sunshine; if you go out after sunset, you will find the daisies closed.

Gold is the emblem of the great King, so that golden heart tells me of King Jesus, who makes a little child's heart his throne when that little one opens the door to Him. Then the white leaves round it show what the life will be when Jesus has the heart—pure, loving, unselfish—living to please Him instead of self, the question now being "What would Jesus do?" instead of "What do I want to do?" And does the crimson tip of the snowy floweret mean anything? Little ones who are living for Jesus often know what it is to be sorry because they have grieved Him, and they want forgiveness. That red edge tells of something very precious, of "blood that cleanseth from all sin," that washes away every stain, even the precious blood of Christ.

Then, little ones, keep looking up to Jesus, and open all your hearts to Him as the daisy opens to the sun. Tell Him all your troubles, all your sins, and all your joys; talk to Him about your lessons, your play, and all that concerns you; so you will be a bright little flower, helping to gladden some who need cheering, as well as giving gladness to the dear Lord Himself. J. C.

☞PARIS Y.M.C.A.—On Monday evening, Sept. 1, Mr. George Williams addressed a meeting at the rooms of the Paris Y.M.C.A., 160, Rue Montmartre. He gave a warm-hearted and earnest address to the French and English branches united. Rev. R. W. MacAll and Rev. W. Gibson were present. Mons. Van der Beken, the French secretary, who is going to the United States on behalf of the Y.M.C.A., gave a farewell address. M. Buscarlet, the President of the French branch, also spoke. Mr. Lee is the new English secretary. All present were much encouraged and edified.

INTERLAKEN, SWITZERLAND.—An English correspondent who has sojourned at a pension, situated at the end of the lake of Thun near Interlaken, kept by Madame Simpkin, states that he was delighted and astonished, when Sunday afternoon came, to see the great number of children gathered together from all the neighbouring châlets for Bible instruction, &c., in her garden. This lady spends much time and money during the winter in spreading far and wide the truths of God's Word. She deserves hearty sympathy and support in the work. Our correspondent is assured that any help, either in money or German hymus or tracts sent to Madame Simpkin, St. Beatus, Interlaken, would be thankfully received.

SOLDIERS AT GIBRALTAR.

MRS. OSBORN, writing of the Soldiers' Home at Gibraltar, gives some particulars, which will be interesting, respecting Miss Aimers, who was called home while at her post on the Rock. Referring to the meetings she (Mrs. Osborn) held in April and May, she says:—The little classroom holding comfortably about fifty was crowded to excess night after night, and often there were from eighty to eighty-five, and more in the room and "about the door." The seed had been sown during the winter by Miss Aimers and Miss Archibald, and when went out I found a great readiness to hear and believe the Gospel. There was very deep conviction of sin, the same men came night after night anxious. They did not need to be pressed to remain behind, we had to watch lest they should be late for answering their names. A large number professed faith in Christ, and from letters received since, the greater number are steadfast in the faith. Meetings were held in the Soldiers' Institute in the town. A number of sailors of one of Her Majesty's ships gave themselves to the Lord, as well as from among the soldiers. At the North Front we held meetings which were well attended.

Miss Aimers, who was with us in Egypt two years ago, had gone out to live on the Rock in November last. Having means of her own, she not only gave herself, but helped to make the little Home bright in many ways. The Lord graciously used her in the conversion of not a few. During one of my visits she had had a bilious attack, from which she was recovering when I left, and was almost well. Shortly afterwards a telegram came, saying that she died while Miss Archibald was watching by her side in the early morning. The doctor said it was enteric fever. Her friends decided that her body should rest among the soldiers she so loved, in the North Front, Gibraltar, and they carried her from the hearse to her grave, where she rests until the dead in Christ shall rise. Her gentle life had told, and the soldiers mourn her loss. Until within a few nights of her death she had been holding classes for young converts who could not read. After Miss Aimers' death I arranged that Mr. Pickering, who had been in Egypt with his regiment and who had done good service for the Lord, should go to help Miss Archibald. The chaplains have been kind, and the officers commanding regiments have given permission to him to visit the troops. Every night meetings are held in the Home; while Mr. Pickering also holds a meeting in the North Front, and visits the soldiers stationed there and at Catalan Bay, as well as at the great hospital.

It is a great joy to hear that our friends in the town are to have a new Institute; we too want a larger Home at South End. There is room for both The soldiers stationed in the South seldom go into town, except on duty, and we need to let down the net where the men are to be found. There is a glorious opportunity for sowing the seed.. Many regiments are stationed on the Rock for a short time, and then pass on. In the town, many soldiers are stationed, while at the South we have Europa Point, Windmill Hill, Bueno Vesta, Rosia, and South Barracks, filled with British soldiers of all ranks, with their wives and little ones. I see there are sixty-three licensed drinking-houses on the Rock, and wonder whether the canteens and sergeants' messrooms are included in this total. Is it too much that we should have two Homes to shelter and save? Another lady worker will have to go to help Miss Archibald, and about £400, yearly, will be needed to meet all expenses. If we had a Home of our own, we should save the rent yearly. And we need water. A kind soldier carries from the Government tank two cans daily, which is all our supply; yet there is much to praise our God for. In the thirsty land "He satisfieth the longing soul, and filleth the hungry soul with goodness."

CHRISTIAN COMMUNITY.—The notorious public-house in Poplar just taken and transformed into a mission-hall by this Society was opened on September 1, when a large company of sympathising Christian friends assembled. After tea all united in praise and prayer, and dedicated the place to the service of the Lord Jesus Christ. The hall, in its transformed condition, was admired for the chaste, clean, and comfortable appearance it presented. From the spirit and enthusiasm of the large number of local workers present, there is every reason to believe that much blessing will follow its dedication to God's service.

Notes and Comments.

SINCE the lamented decease of the Earl of Shaftesbury, nearly twelve months ago, nothing has happened to cause such universal mourning in the political, social, and religious world as the death of Mr. Samuel Morley, which took place early on Sunday morning, after a protracted illness. We had hoped, from the recent medical bulletins, that Mr. Morley's valuable life would be prolonged for the benefit of his generation; but God has willed it otherwise, and we can but bow in humble submission, while feeling keenly the loss the community has sustained. In our next issue we hope to furnish a portrait of Mr. Morley, and a sketch of his most useful and devoted life.

Mr. A. S. Walker, of Birkenhead, writing with reference to a paragraph in a recent issue on female emigration to Australia, denies that situations in domestic service are difficult to obtain. On the contrary, he says, the demand for domestic servants is far beyond the supply. Our correspondent does not touch, on the other hand, a question referred to in the same paragraph —viz., that young servants in Australia are "met by hardships, ensnaring temptations, and the gravest dangers." We should be glad if some of our Australian readers, adequately acquainted with the true state of the case, will inform us with respect to it. Meantime we draw attention to the communications to be found on page 17.

Mr. H. O. Arnold-Forster writes a striking article in The Nineteenth Century on "Our Superstition about Constantinople," in which he says:—"It has gradually come to be admitted that a final grand catastrophe is in store, which will end in the Crescent being removed from St. Sophia. . . . In a certain very limited number of years from the present time—it may be two, or it may be twenty—Constantinople will have changed hands, and the hands into which it will have fallen will not be those of England. . . . At present Russia and Austria are racing for the goal." Mr. Arnold-Forster wishes that Austria, but apparently fears that Russia, will win. The main contention of his paper, however, is that England's policy is to cut herself off entirely from her European complications. That which interests us most is the corroboration which it affords of the speedy departure of the Turk from Constantinople, and the consequent opening of the way for the Jewish people to their own land.

In the same review Mr. Devendra N. Das, himself a Hindu, writes most pathetically of the terrible sufferings of "the Hindu widow." He shows that, "thanks to the generosity of the British Government, the inhuman practice of suttee, or the self-immolation of widows, has now been completely abolished in India, but that when the British Government lopped off the outward and more flagrant part of the pernicious system, it did not strike at the hidden root of it." He speaks hopefully, however, because "the natives themselves are, under the benign influence of English education, awakening to the horrors of their vicious system." This is good, but we have more hope in the benign influence of the Gospel of Jesus Christ; in proportion as it obtains a hold of the native mind, in that proportion will the cruelties of this diabolical system disappear, and the tears of the Hindu widow be wiped away.

In close connection with this subject we have read with regret the following paragraph in the Calcutta Indian Witness:—

> A marriage case has been decided in the Madras High Court, involving issues of great importance to the Native Christian community. Hitherto the marriage laws have placed an educated Christian girl at the mercy of an ignorant heathen man she never saw. But this case has given the property of a Christian husband to the relatives of a heathen wife who utterly repudiated him till he died.

All the friends of Christian missions in China will have seen, with great regret, a newspaper announcement of the massacre of Christians in Cochin China and in Eastern Si-Chuen. The Shanghai Courier of July 13—15 contains descriptions of riots at Chung-King, during which the buildings of the American, the China Inland, and the Roman Catholic missions were destroyed, but we cannot gather that there has been any loss of life to justify the use of the term "massacre." It would appear that the disturbances are attributed to the building of some houses by the American missionaries on a prominent site, which has given umbrage to the natives. How far the prejudices of the people have been needlessly excited we cannot say, with the information at hand; but we trust that later dispatches will modify the alarming character of the reports.

The New York Independent has the following:—

> The Chung-King outrages upon missionaries are only an echo of the Wyoming, massacre of Chinamen. We are thankful it is so faint an echo, and that China has so little of the spirit of revenge. She might shut every American missionary out of the Empire if she were disposed to follow the policy of our Government.

It has been stated that a site cannot be found in Shoreditch for a soup kitchen and cottage hospital, much as those institutions are needed in the East-end of London. A gentleman who died five years ago bequeathed £10,000 to establish and maintain such an institution, and, as a position for it has not been found, Justice Kay has decided that the scheme cannot be carried out. It was recently argued before the Justice that the order should be altered as there was plenty of land to be obtained in the next parish, but the Judge refused. Assuming that land is too costly in Shoreditch, surely, in these times of deep distress, it might be found possible to set aside a small difficulty such as that which appears to be placed in the way of those who, doubtless, in the circumstances named, would fully carry out the intentions of the testator by opening the hospital and soup kitchen, even at a short distance from Shoreditch.

A leading German writer upon economic questions, Dr. William Roscher, has pointed out that the community of goods of the first Christians at Jerusalem was one simply of use, and not of ownership. This seems to be quite clear from Acts iv. 32, but it is often overlooked or misstated by those who defend Socialism, and it is important that the point should be borne in mind, because it is evident that had the reverse been the case wise safeguards would have been wanting. The act, too, was a voluntary one of love, and not a hard and fast duty (Acts v. 4), and in this respect it was higher and nobler than it would have been had it been an obligation based upon a rule.

We commented a few weeks ago upon an utterance of Cardinal Manning with reference to the want of a more extended Bible teaching, and we pointed out that, without waiting for changes in the Board School system, the Cardinal had it in his power to introduce the Bible into many Roman Catholic schools. We cannot anticipate, however, that he will make the experiment even only in Westminster, especially if he condescends to read The Universe, a Roman Catholic weekly paper of wide circulation. That journal in a recent issue expresses what, unfortunately, must of necessity be the opinion of the majority of Roman Catholics with regard to the study of God's Word, and does so in the following disgraceful terms:—

> Her Majesty is not an imbecile. She knows as well as other educated people that the profanation of the Word of God by the irreligious sects which swarm in this land is something too terribly shocking to contemplate, unless one be compelled by duty to do so. She is also aware that nearly all the blasphemy uttered in one way or the other against God and his revelation, and in which crime England takes, by many fearful strides, the lead, is due simply and wholly to the fact that the Bible societies find it to their interest to put God's written Word into the hands of every irreverent buffoon, and to leave him to explain it as his own passions shall suggest, or his brutal ignorance shall devise.

A little further on in the same choice article there is the following:—

> Voltaire said that he came to finish the work which Bible Protestantism had commenced, and the French Encyclopedists confessed that they found the weapons for their anti-Christian warfare ready prepared for them in the English heretical armoury. Atheism, as a system, was born in Bible England.

We might safely take exception to the accuracy of certain of these statements, but their untruth will be evident to all who know anything of the religious history of Great Britain. Of all other countries, France, Spain, and Italy are deepest sunk in scepticism, yet these are the very lands in which Rome has been most successful in keeping the Bible from the people. It may quite fairly be assumed that if there had not been a Romish Church in France, with its army of foreign ecclesiastics, there would not have been a Voltaire. Whatever opinion Voltaire may have had with regard to Christianity (and we should not like to take the statement of The Universe even with regard to that), we know that he had so decided a contempt for Romanism that he said he wondered how any two priests could meet without bursting into laughter.

Our brother craftsman and valiant defender of the faith, Mr. H. L. Hastings, of Boston, U.S., is about to publish in London a monthly periodical entitled The Christian Safeguard and The Armory, hitherto issued in connection with his (American) Christian. The Safeguard will specially advocate temperance and social reforms, while The Armory will do battle on behalf of revealed truth. Mr. Hastings has long ago won his spurs in these departments of Christian warfare, and we wish him all success in this fresh effort. Particulars as to terms of issue may be had from the publishers, Messrs. Haughton & Co., 10, Paternoster-row, E.C.

TO GODLY PARENTS.—The undermentioned (who is in no way connected with the school) is desirous of recommending an old-established YOUNG GENTLEMEN'S BOARDING SCHOOL, DELIGHTFULLY SITUATED ON HIGH GROUND, WITH VIEWS OF THE SEA, on the South Coast, a short run from London, in which a thorough and a first-class Education is given, based upon the teaching of the Holy Scriptures.

It is one of the few remaining schools in which the power of the Gospel of our Lord Jesus Christ influences the hearts and conduct of the pupils.

The success, happiness, and training of the Boys have been so remarkable in this school that a BOOK OF TESTIMONIALS GIVEN BY THE PARENTS, together with the papers of Examinations passed and Honours gained, should be read to appreciate results so unusual. Two Vice-Chancellors have placed their wards as pupils in the school. Reference kindly permitted to Dr. THORN, Paddington, London.

COLLEGIATE SCHOOL, BRIDLINGTON QUAY.

The convulsions of last week cannot fail to have recalled to every reader of the Bible the "earthquakes in divers places" foretold by our Lord in the great prophecy of Matt. xxiv. The newspapers specially remark the universality of the recent visitations: thus one says:—

> In England we have fortunately no experience of the terrible seismic convulsions which are just now shaking the earth from pole to pole. Kilauea goes out; apparently transfers its hideous forces to New Zealand, destroying one of nature's most famous wonders; breaks out again in Greece; and now overwhelms a great American city, brings destruction on a score more, and throws a vast continent into a panic.

It is said that "the superstitious population thought that the end of the world had come." Why superstitious? There will be a generation (perhaps it is living now) in whose days the end of this age will come, and earthquakes in divers places will be one of its accompaniments. The report proceeds:—

> At every place where the fugitives had collected prayer-meetings were formed, and were addressed in fervid language by preachers—negro and white, amateur and professional—who passionately warned the people that the visitation was due to the just vengeance of an offended Deity. "Repent of your sins" was the burden of the exhortations, and in most instances the words of the preachers were spoken with a pitiful accompaniment of tears and wailings and protestations of repentance. Ever and anon the necessity for this religious fervour was emphasised by fresh earthquake shocks and the crash of falling buildings.

It is surely much less ignorant to antedate a period which many signs of the times indicate to be near at hand, and to recognise these terrors as visitations from on high, calling men to repentance, than to speak of their effects on the consciences and minds of men as superstition. It is no superstition that the end will come, and that convulsions of nature are among its antecedent tokens.

> It is said that 600 American girls are studying music at Milan, Italy.

In view of this fact, asserted by an American contemporary, special importance attaches to an article on "American singers in Italy," which appeared in a recent issue of the New York Independent. The writer, who is a lady, and dates her communication from Milan, has, from personal observation, come to the sad conclusion

> That any young woman who sets out on a dramatic career in this part of Europe, bravely bent on retaining the simple virtues and modest graces of a blameless, private life, is handicapped in the desperate race.

This sweeping statement is amply made good by the writer in her detailed description of the struggles and temptations that await the aspirant for operatic fame. It would be to us a sorrowful fact that so many of America's most gifted singers should place themselves in such slippery places, even were their ambition of the most exalted kind. That they should do so, merely in order to sing in a foreign tongue, the imbecilities and immoralities that make up the most of our operatic plays, is deplorable beyond expression. The divine gift of song, especially in woman, was never meant to be degraded in that fashion.

"Fresh light comes with fresh obedience to present duty."

We remarked, last week, that while it is vitally important to obey the commandments of God, it is a great evil to multiply sins—to forbid what God has not forbidden. The evil of inventing sins is flagrantly illustrated by the prohibition of marriage with a deceased wife's sister. The truth of this is exhaustively proved in the current number of The Nineteenth Century by Baron Bramwell, who discusses the subject on its theological or religious and its social sides. He shows that Lev. xviii. 18, "'Thou shalt not take a woman to her sister to be a rival to her . . . beside the other in her lifetime,' is a limited prohibition, and, therefore, by implication, a permission out of the limits. . . . To say that it shall not take place in the joint lives is, by implication, to say that it may when both lives do not exist together."

St. Basil is cited on the other side; to which Baron Bramwell forcibly replies:—

> I should value his opinion more if he knew that hundreds of thousands of families are living each in one room, in thousands of which the sisters of deceased mothers are taking care of their nephews and nieces, with the inevitable consequence of cohabitation with or without marriage.

This is a startling view of the social side of the question; and the law of God ought to be unquestionable which makes that a crime which the unecclesiastically-warped conscience of mankind has never regarded as such in any age of the world nor in any nation. An article in Monday's Times says that the late Mr. Samuel Morley supported the Marriage with a Deceased Wife's Sister Bill, on the ground that his intimate acquaintance with the working classes showed it to be a necessary measure. He asserted from his own knowledge that in consequence of the restriction imposed by the existing law, concubinage was extending among the working classes, and that they were losing their regard for the sacredness of the law of marriage.

"Formerly men were persecuted for their beliefs on transubstantiation . . . and a variety of other subjects. They are now allowed their opinions on these; why not on marriage with a deceased wife's sister, unless social reasons are against it?" But we have just quoted a very cogent reason in its favour. The concluding paragraph of Baron Bramwell's enlightened paper is well worth quoting in full:—

> I believe the present law had its origin partly in asceticism, which delights to deny the pleasures, though innocent, which nature would give us, partly in the love of governing, ordering, directing, and of the influence and power that follow—a characteristic of priests, but which is only more marked in them than in other human beings because they have more opportunity of indulging it.

Europe is becoming infidel because of priestly assumption and ecclesiastical tyranny; evangelicals in England should shun like the plague all teaching for doctrines the commandments of men.

Several correspondents, some of them large employers of labour, have written to us, taking exception to the statements in a recent Note on the relations between masters and servants. These friends think we have overstated the case, and that many employers show the most earnest solicitude both for the temporal and spiritual welfare of those in their service. We gladly admit this, and, if all employers were actuated by true Christian principles, there could be no ground for just complaint. At the same time it appears to us beyond dispute, on a wide survey of the industrial world, and looking at the increase of social discontent, and the growth of socialistic movements, that the cordial relations between employer and employed are not what they were before machinery and steam converted workmen and workwomen into "hands."

It might be difficult to show satisfactorily whether the world as a whole is growing better or worse. But we think every candid observer must allow that evil is becoming more intense in form, and bolder in manifestation. Does it follow that the disciples of Christ should withdraw themselves from all that is going on around them, and seek only to preserve their own souls alive? We judge not. "Ye are the salt of the earth," said the Master, in an age when social vice and wrong-doing were probably far more rampant than they are to-day. It is the presence of the corrupting element that makes the salt so necessary. The greater the evil, the more need for the counteracting forces of good. Our Lord's request to the Father for his faithful followers was: "I pray not that Thou shouldest take them out of the world, but that Thou shouldest keep them from the evil." In the strength of these words, let our testimony be unflinching, while we always remember to "speak the truth in love."

It would be well for all people who are in positions of authority and responsibility to remember Massillon's fine saying, that, if God elevates anybody, it is that he may be a refuge and a resource for others. "I will bless thee," said God to Abraham, "and thou shalt be a blessing" (Gen. xii. 2), and it ought to be a matter of course that one who has received blessing, either spiritual or temporal, from the Lord, should be ready to convey a portion of it to others. "Bless me, and make me a blessing," may well be the daily prayer of the highest as of the lowest, and the man or woman who offers that petition from the heart will find it fully answered in opportunities. Let no one think, however, that the mere fact of being employed in religious work exempts anyone from responsibility with regard to the faithful and conscientious discharge of secular duties. The Christian life must have a foundation of that which is visible, and the Christian, of all others, ought to take care that he does not put it in the power of anyone to urge that in looking after the spiritual welfare of some he had neglected the temporal interests to others.

GIVE HER THE BIBLE.—Our attention has been called to the fact that the article in our last issue bearing this title had appeared in The Quiver. It was sent to us by a correspondent as original, and we now gladly give the credit to our contemporary.

REV. E. PAYSON HAMMOND.—We were glad to receive a letter from this friend of the children, announcing his safe arrival, in the ss. Pavonia, at Boston, after a ten days' voyage. The passage was longer than usual, owing to the contrary winds which prevailed. Amongst other passengers were two Swedish missionaries on their way to Alaska, and a large company of Swedes. Mr. Hammond spoke to them several times through an interpreter. A funeral at sea was another incident. A little lad, who with his mother were going to rejoin the father in the States, was taken ill and died. We must thank the Lord for giving our friend a safe voyage to America, and hope that he may continue to be greatly blessed there.

SLAVERY in WESTERN AUSTRALIA.

The Melbourne Daily Telegraph publishes some painful revelations as to the cruelties practised on the natives in Western Australia. The information was obtained through an interview with a missionary, Rev. J. B. Gribble, who has returned from that colony. Before he left, the Chief Justice wrote to him as follows:—"I believe you have right and justice on your side, and I believe and hope you will ultimately be able to prove this to be the case."

SLAVERY BY "ASSIGNATION."

On being questioned as to what is known as the "assignment system," Mr. Gribble said: The assignment of natives to white settlers is carried on under an unwritten law, and though the Governor, in an interview I had with him recently, refused to recognise the term, yet every one who has lived in Western Australia and has made inquiry, as I have, knows the practice. The assignment is made in this way: A settler desires to possess a native, we will say, for a labourer. He makes out a paper in which the native is made to say that he offers himself for employment for such-and-such a period. The paper is signed by the settler, and witnessed by the policeman, and "crossed by the unfortunate native, who is in absolute ignorance of its contents, and whose consent is, in the great majority of cases, never asked. In such way are the natives enslaved. The system is not legal, but yet the unfortunate blacks, if they run away or commit any offence, are punished under the Masters and Servants Act of Great Britain, an Act which was never intended to apply to barbarous peoples. In connection with the pearl fisheries, there has been such trouble with the native labour that the Legislature was obliged to pass an Act specially dealing with the natives pearling. That, however, only relates to the punishment to be inflicted for running away. Frequently the natives are first brought into service by capture, and "assigned" afterwards. The settlers are a law unto themselves. One evening, when staying at a station, I discovered a man assaulting a young black girl. I was horrified, and I asked him how he dared do such a thing. He was astonished at the inquiry, and with the most unblushing effrontery said, "She has been assigned to me by the police for six months, and I can do what I like with her."

BRITISH "JUSTICE" IN WESTERN AUSTRALIA.

"The natives have no protectors. I saw twenty-three natives brought down in chains from the outside country, charged with having speared cattle and burned a hut. They were all tried together, and on uncorroborated testimony were sentenced by a police magistrate and two justices of the peace to two years at Rotnest Island—a terrible place, about twelve miles from Fremantle, where there is a penal settlement for the blacks. The constable in charge told me that these poor fellows had never seen a white man until they were captured and the chains were put round their necks. They had no protection. They were driven, chained as they were, to an enclosure, driven on board a steamer, and they knew nothing of the reason. They could not understand English. For the capture of the natives mounted men go out, and they scour the country and seize the poor creatures, who are put in chains. These they dread, and are afraid to run away when threatened with chains. I was staying at a station once, and I asked the lady how it was the blacks were afraid to run away. She said they were afraid of the chains. Pointing to 'Billy,' she said of him that he was afraid now, though he had been most refractory at first, and putting her hand on a black boy she said, 'You won't run away, will you, Traveller?' He said, 'No; me afraid chain.' A number offer for service, but the great majority are kidnapped. In some instances the women and girls are employed tending sheep, but in others they are captured for the vilest purposes."

PEARLING HORRORS.

"On the authority of Mr. D. Carly, of Perth, I could give you," continued Mr. Gribble, "a catalogue of horrors culled from incidents in connection with the native labour in the pearl fisheries. Mr. Carly says, 'It is very well known by all who knock about Nichol Bay and the 'Flying Foam Passage,' that in one day there were quite sixty natives, men, women, and children, shot dead.' The natives themselves have shown him some of the skulls of fifteen who were shot. Three of the skulls were those of children, and two of the small skulls had bullet-holes through them. I have seen many natives shot in the back for no other reason than that of running away from their cruel slavemasters. I saw at 'Flying Foam Passage' no less than twenty-four natives handcuffed together, and then conveyed to Delambre Island, and there detained until they were required for pearl-diving, their only food being a little flour. In May, 1883, three men, well armed and mounted, left Cossack for the purpose of kidnapping on the Fitzroy River. I reported the circumstance to the authorities, and was told to mind my own business. In October of the same year these men returned to Cossack with twenty natives; some of them made their escape, but they were pursued and recaptured. I may state that during my sojourn in the North-west it was quite a common practice to sell cutters for a considerable sum over their real value, because of the numbers of natives they had attached to them. I have been sworn in Perth to this fact, and it has been allowed to die out, in order, I suppose, to prevent exposure. In this same year I saw for several days in succession large numbers of natives who had recently returned from the pearling grounds assigned as general servants by a drunken J.P. in a public-house at Cossack. Some of the natives told me that they did not want to sign, but they were forced to do so. I have seen numbers of natives brought in from the interior, and some of them had never before seen the face of a white man, and they were compelled to put their hand to a pen and make a cross, which they never could understand, and having done this they were then slaves for life, or as long as they were good for pearl-diving. Their rations consist of only a little flour when they are engaged in pearling."

Mr. F. W. Chesson, the Secretary of the Aborigines Protection Society, writing to The Pall Mall Gazette, on this subject, says that in February last the Society called Lord Granville's attention (1) to the alleged kidnapping of native boys who are employed in the pearl fisheries; (2) to the facts that in more than one case of gross cruelty in which the aborigines were the sufferers, the delinquents escaped with a nominal punishment; and (3) to the persecutions to which Mr. Gribble has been subjected on the Gascoyne River because he is a friend of the blacks. On May 5 a second letter was addressed to Lord Granville, quoting Mr. Gribble's statements, and expressing the Society's fear that the Western Australian Government has hitherto failed to secure legal protection to the natives. Lord Granville on both occasions promptly responded to their appeal; and he believes that these statements are now undergoing official inquiry. The result of such inquiry was given by Mr. Stanhope in reply to a question in the House of Commons on Thursday last. He stated that there had undoubtedly been exceptional cases of such offences, but their existence as a system had not been proved, and that a Bill had just become law in Western Australia under which a native board and a system of protection would be established, and the labour engagements of the natives would be surrounded with every possible security.

Since that reply was made, an anonymous writer has endeavoured still further to discredit Mr. Gribble's statements, and this has elicited from Mr. Chesson another letter, in which he fully sustains his position. He quotes from Mr. Gribble's correspondence as follows:—

> At the Junction police-station, where I stayed a day and night, I found several unfortunate natives chained like so many dogs to each other round the neck, and then the main chain connected with a tree; and, as though that was not sufficient to prevent their escape, some of them were coupled at the ankles. In such condition these poor beings sat hour after hour, and day after day, and week after week, awaiting the coming of the police magistrate from Carnarvon before they could be tried. They were quite nude, yet I noticed that when driven into the cell at night there was nothing in the shape of a blanket, and they were chained and fettered just in the same way as when in the open air.

The passing of a new law virtually corroborates and justifies Mr. Gribble's statements; these further revelations show not only the necessity for its adoption but for a radical change in the policy which allows such atrocities, and shields the criminals from the punishment they deserve.

BIBLE STUDIES.—28.

III.—JONAH RE-COMMISSIONED.

1.—"The word of the Lord came . . . the second time." How loving of the Lord to give his servant the same work again, sparing him life-long grief at having left one of his Master's errands undone.

2.—"The preaching that I bid thee." God's servants must be his mouth-piece; they must not choose their own messages. "Whatsoever I command thee thou shalt speak . . . Behold, I have put my words in thy mouth" (Jer. i. 7, 9; Isa. li. 16).

5—10.—The case of the people of Nineveh is an encouragement to all to turn to the Lord, who is "not willing that any should perish, but that all should come to repentance" (2 Pet. iii. 9). "Thou Lord, art good, and ready to forgive; and plenteous in mercy unto all them that call upon Thee" (Psa. lxxxvi. 5). "If we confess our sins, He is faithful and just to forgive us our sins" (1 John i. 9).

IV.—JONAH REPINING.

1.—"It displeased Jonah." Probably for two reasons. (1) His own reputation as a prophet might be injured. "When a prophet speaketh in the name of the Lord, if the thing follow not . . . that is the thing which the Lord hath not spoken" (Deut. xviii. 22). Self was not so lost in the Lord as to enable him to glory in God's pardoning grace and to leave his good name in his Master's care, "Jonah had been God's messenger of comfort to Israel in the time of Jeroboam II." (2 Kings xiv. 25—27), who recovered the northern border of the land, according to the word of the Lord by Jonah. But now Jonah saw that God, "through the threat, was providing for the Ninevites that they should not suffer the things threatened." He knew, by the Spirit, "that the repentance of the Gentiles was the ruin of the Jews." "A lover then of his country, he does not so much envy the deliverance of Nineveh as will that his own country should not perish." Therefore he fled—not from the presence of the Lord, he knew that was impossible (Ps. cxxxix. 7—10), but "from before the Lord"—from standing before Him as his servant (see 1 Kings xvii. 1, and Pusey's Commentary, quoting Greg. Naz., and others).

2, 3.—There are prayers which God loves us too well to answer, "not giving a stone when we ask for a stone."

4.—In the last chapter was a manifestation of God's love and patience towards repentant sinners, here we see it towards a grumbling saint, and know not which to admire most.

There is no place where earth's sorrows
Are more felt than up in heaven;
There is no place where earth's failings
Have such kindly judgment given.

6.—God deals with Jonah as with a hurt child, tenderly ministering to his comfort, instead of scolding him for his hardness.

8, 9.—It is so easy to rejoice in mercies given, so hard to realise that the same God who "prepared a gourd," also in love "prepared a worm," and "prepared a vehement east wind."

10, 11.—cf. Matt. vi. 30. We know so little that God teaches us often like children, by object-lessons. By and by we shall "know even as also we are known."

God's tender thought for the little ones and the cattle reminds us of assurances in both Old and New Testaments. "His tender mercies are over all his works" (Psa. cxlv. 9). "Are not two sparrows sold for a farthing? and one of them shall not fall on the ground without your Father" (Matt. x. 29).

THE BAPTIST CONGO MISSION.

GREAT FIRE AT STANLEY POOL.

DEAR SIR,—By the last Congo mail, letters from Mr. Whitley and Mr. Comber, dated the end of June last, were received, conveying the intelligence that a very heavy pecuniary loss by fire had fallen upon the Congo Mission, amounting, so far as present estimates show, to £3000, and crippling, at any rate for a season, the establishment and equipment of the new up-river stations. Immediately on the receipt of these sad tidings, steps were taken to despatch further stores of supplies, and large shipments are already on their way to the Congo River.

This severe loss, coming at a time when the financial resources of the Society are already taxed to the utmost to meet the heavy permanent liabilities, consequent upon recent and large extensions in various parts of the mission field, cannot but cause grave anxiety and concern to the committee. They feel it is most desirable that their loss should be recouped by special contributions, and not fall upon the ordinary receipts. A united effort will, they feel convinced, at once secure all that is needed, and supply the required funds for replacing the lost stores and equipments, and re-erecting the Mission buildings.

The prospects of the Mission were never so bright as they are to-day. Letters received by the last mail report that in some parts there is a great awakening among the people, special meetings are being held daily, and there are very many inquirers seeking to know more of Jesus; the people listen to the story of the Cross as they never did before, and a time of special blessing seems close at hand. Much of the pioneering work has been done, writes one of the brethren, and on all sides there are cheering indications, the people delight to listen to the story of the Cross, and school work is greatly prospering.

ALFRED HENRY BAYNES,
Gen. Sec. Baptist Missionary Society.
19, Castle-street, Holborn, E.C., August 31.

From the letters referred to by Mr. Baynes, copies of which he sends to us, it appears that this grave catastrophe was caused by the annual grass burning "which is sometimes carelessly carried on." In his letter Mr. Comber says:—"Our houses being all of wood, bamboo and grass, they ignite very readily. It is almost a wonder that this is the first fire we have had in our Mission, save two insignificant conflagrations at the same station. It teaches us that we must have permanent buildings of brick or stone, corrugated iron, or entirely of plank. These we are pushing forward."

As to the loss sustained, Mr. Whitley gives the following particulars:—"The outfitting of our three stations up river have been completely destroyed. The barter stock of this station also, and, worse than that, all our steamer fittings and gear. Of private goods, Messrs. Charters, Davies, Grenfell, Bentley, and I have lost large quantities, and of provisions Messrs. Charters and Davies have lost all that they had here. Mr. Biggs has lost a considerable proportion of his, and, I believe, Mr. Grenfell also. I have lost nearly the whole of mine. I am very sorry to say also that our best men—James Showers, John Greenhough, and Jonathan Scott—have lost all that they had here, which, I suppose, will be the major portion of their personal property.

"I have written down river for any goods for this station which may be in the country to be sent up at once, and they will be stored at Kinshassa, where stores are now being prepared for their reception. As all the stores for new stations are destroyed, we shall use up here anything at all available—such as nails, &c. In the meantime, we are absolutely without supplies of any sort for barter stock, except damaged wire, which, I fear, the people will not take. We expect Mr. Grenfell down daily, and, with his aid in valuing the steamer gear lost, we hope to be able to estimate the total loss, which it is evident will be very heavy."

EMIGRATION OF YOUNG WOMEN.

SIR,—I have been requested to send you the accompanying letter from Sydney, N.S.W., by desire of the Colonial and Missionary Council of the Young Women's Christian Association. I am the more glad to do so, as I see that attention has been drawn in your issue of August 12 to the article in The Pall Mall Gazette respecting the emigration of girls. The Y.W.C.A. in the colonies does look after young women who are commended to them by the Parent Society, so that all desiring protection and friendly counsel on arrival should communicate with the Colonial and Missionary Branch of the Y.W.C.A. before departure.

We are anxious to make it known that we have a band of ladies who correspond with the branches of the Y.W.C.A. in the colonies, and who will gladly give letters of introduction to any respectable young women going out. Efforts are being made to extend the work of the Association beyond the ports, and with a view to this a meeting was held in South Kensington in June last to enlist the sympathy of the colonial ladies then in London.

If any of your readers should be able to assist us in the formation of colonial branches their names and addresses would be gladly received by the Secretary of the Colonial and Missionary Branch, 316, Regent-street, W.

Believe me, yours faithfully,
MARY J. BARKER, President.

The President and Committee of the Y.W.C.A. in Sydney, N.S.W., wish it to be fully understood that they are prepared to receive at the Institute of the Association, Loma House, Wynyard-square, any governesses or young persons employed in houses of business, coming out with thoroughly good credentials; and should there not be room to receive them at Loma House, owing to the somewhat limited accommodation there, the general secretary or the matron will gladly undertake to find respectable lodgings for the new arrivals, and to do their best to find situations for them, and to give them such help and friendly counsel as they may need.

There are, however, some matters of fact and suggestion to which the committee deem it essential to draw the attention both of those who are desirous to go out to the Colony, and of those who, feeling an interest in such, have to give advice on the subject.

(1) It is not to be assumed as by any means easy, or a matter of course, to obtain a situation such as may be desired. It, indeed, often happens that some time elapses before the desired situation can be found. It is, therefore, well to be prepared to do something in the meanwhile to earn a living, and this can be done without detriment to ultimately obtaining the desired employment.

(2) With regard to governesses, employment in Sydney can, as a rule, be obtained only by those who are highly educated, and specially qualified. But there is a greater demand in the country, where governesses are much needed, and where such situations generally afford comfortable homes, though not always in respect of living, of a style equal to that which is usual in the towns. It is well also that a governess in the country should be prepared, on an emergency, to make herself otherwise and generally useful.

(3) Salaries given to governesses in the Colony are, as a rule, but little, if at all, higher than those given in England. The scale of the wages of domestic servants is higher, but forms no guide for the salaries of governesses.

(4) It is strongly recommended that any young person going out to obtain employment should have a small sum of money, not less than £3, at her disposal on landing, so as to be able to meet her current expenses while seeking for a situation or temporary work.

The President and members of the Colonial and Missionary Council of the Y.W.C.A. in England commend the above letter to the notice of all those who are interested in the emigration of young women to any of the colonies.

Any further information could be obtained by application to the Secretary of the Colonial and Missionary Branch, 316, Regent-street, W.

THE CONGREGATIONAL UNION will meet at Norwich from October 11 to 15. On Tuesday, papers will be read—"On the relation of Christian Faith and Godliness to National Stability and Progress," by the chairman-elect of the Union, Rev. A. Mackennal, B.A. On Wednesday the assembly will consider the questions of colonial missions and home missions in England and Ireland. On Thursday morning addresses will be given "On the Revival of the Spiritual Life of the Churches," "On the Holding and Conduct of Missions to promote such Revival," "On Special Efforts to Reach the Undecided and Careless," and the proceedings of the Union close on Friday evening with a meeting for young men.

SOUL CHANGE, THE SPIRIT'S WORK.

A DUTCH friend sends us some interesting comments on 2 Cor. iii. 17, the substance of which we should like to share with our readers:—

This verse, "Now the Lord is that Spirit; and where the Spirit of the Lord is, there is liberty," is usually understood as a general statement of truth thrown in here with no vital connection with its context. But in truth the connection of thought is very close. In the verses preceding (12—16) the Apostle speaks of Moses under the old covenant as the one man who contrasts with the "we all" of ver. 18—a verse which applies to the "ministers of the new covenant," i.e., all true believers. Ver. 17 is interjected in order to show clearly that this blessed liberty of spiritual vision, leading to soul transformation, of which he speaks, is entirely the work of the Holy Ghost. He it is, and He only, who can remove from the unregenerate heart that "veil" which hides the beauty of the King, the glory of the Lord, from the soul—"Where the Spirit of the Lord is, there"—and only there—"is liberty," the liberty of open vision through the unveiling of the heart.

Then our attention is called to the improved translation of verse 18 in the Revised Version. Instead of "Beholding as in a glass," it is "Reflecting as in a mirror." This applies to Moses as well as to the Christian believer, but with a contrast. He reflected the glory of God, but the glow was outward and visible. It was also transient. Whereas, the "we all" of whom the Apostle speaks reflect a beauty which is moral and spiritual, and which is also permanent. Nay, it is more, or at least it should be. The glory we reflect deepens and brightens "from glory to glory."

The passage as a whole gives us three great thoughts. (1) The believer's great privilege—to shine by reflecting the highest beauty—the glory of the Lord. (2) How this is done—by attaining to the liberty of spiritual vision through the unveiling of the soul. (3) The great author of this transforming liberty of vision—the Holy Spirit.

UNBELIEVING LITTLE ONES.

DEAR SIR,—As one who is filled with love towards the little ones, I can fully enter into the feelings of "Young Christian," as expressed in your issue of August 19, regarding the children, and would earnestly pray that the work of winning them for the Saviour might be taken up more heartily and readily than is sometimes the case. Many of your readers are not idle in this direction. One Sunday evening, the sight of some children playing about, regardless of it being the Lord's Day, filled me with a desire to try and teach them the way of life. After consulting with a friend (Mr. D. J. Whiting), we resolved to hold an open-air meeting for them, which was well attended, and a most blessed time was spent, but the following week a change of weather prevented us. So the matter was laid before the Lord, and the much-respected superintendent of the Old Ford Mission (Mr. A. Farnan) very kindly placed a large room at our disposal, and the children were informed they might meet there.

The year has been one of great joy and blessing, the average attendance being nearly one hundred of the very poor, and mostly those who attend no Sunday-school whatever. On Tuesday, August 17, our first anniversary was held, when the place was densely packed, some of the children bringing their parents, who seemed to thoroughly enjoy the meeting. We are looking forward to do more during our second year. The name of our Society will henceforth be known as the North Bow Juvenile Mission. We do not ask for money, but for the prayers of your readers as we journey forth trying, in our humble way, to lead the lambs safely into the heavenly fold. Gifts of children's books or tracts would be very gratefully received and acknowledged by yours very truly,

EVANGELISATION SOCIETY OF VICTORIA.—The annual meeting took place at the Y.M.C.A. Hall on the first Tuesday in August, in conjunction with the monthly meeting of the Prayer Union. The reports given by the evangelists exceed in interest those of any previous year.

BRAVE AND TRUE.

Be brave and true, O heart, amid the sweep
Of tempting voices luring thee to wrong;
O whisper not and say that thou art strong,
And hast no need to launch out in the deep:
Far nobler souls than thou have had to weep,
That from their "watch-tower" they have gone away,
For one brief hour in folly's path to stray,
And of its bitter fruits have had to reap.
Keep close to Christ, and now in one great gift,
Give Him thy heart's best, truest love,
And with the hand of Faith take hold of Heaven;
Then from Heaven's pathway thou canst never drift,
And day by day thy God will to thee prove
The best of friends that can be to thee given.

YOUNG WORKWOMEN IN THE CITY.

I have been asked by many what we are doing in the City, and also how the work was commenced, and what progress has been made. About ten years ago, I commenced a systematic visitation of all the warehouses within a radius of half a mile or so from St. Paul's. When business is flourishing there are, I believe, some twenty thousand young women and girls employed in various manufactures, many of whom are upon the top floors of wholesale warehouses, and not factories proper, so that it is no easy work to reach them. I invited them to a daily dinner-hour meeting, and also an evangelistic meeting for an hour every Saturday afternoon, and often from eighty to one hundred attended. Rev. H. Dening and other beloved servants of God were used to the conversion of many, and this first effort laid the foundation of a work which has so continued to develop, that now every available warehouse is reached by lady readers and Bible women, and, as the need arose, evening classes have been formed and meetings held after business hours, in Cross Keys-square, Little Britain, and "The New Welcome and Home," in Jewin-street. These two are well filled daily, and are an inexpressible boon to the hundreds who flock to them. Bible-classes and other meetings are held night after night, as opportunity offers.

We are glad to announce great increase of spiritual blessing as the result of weekly visits to the work-rooms. Our young sisters hail our visits with that delight and avidity which denote soul hunger. There are two restaurants entirely devoted to their welfare. Interesting cases of decided conversion have cheered us greatly in our Gospel services, and at the Monday night meeting at my own house.

We have to thank those kind friends who have invited many of our girls for rest and change, some free of charge, and others for the small sum of five shillings weekly. One lady reader writes: "A dear Christian family invited 100 out of my rooms to a garden tea-meeting. We had a blessed time, first for Christians. Many were greatly refreshed, and brought nearer to the Lord. At a large gathering in the drawing-room in the evening, three from one workroom professed to find Christ. One of them said she had been seeking Him for years. Meetings such as these cannot but produce much good, and be the means, in God's hand, of bringing many to Himself.

We are also most grateful to our many kind friends who send flowers, texts, pincushions with texts, &c.; also the weekly supply from the Bible Flower Mission, which is most welcome. We took 410 for some hours' recreation and fresh air last month. We had a good service in the open air, and we were encouraged by visible tokens of blessing amongst the Christians, and also those who were not before decided.

We should be thankful for the help of a few consecrated women specially interested in the salvation of the young, if they could only give us an hour weekly. We could do much more for our dear young sisters if we had more accommodation. I trust that some whose hands are not full will "come and help to gather in the golden grain, for soon, very soon, the sowers and reapers shall rejoice together." Any further information will be given gladly any day at the Welcome, Cross Keys-square, Little Britain, E.C.—Yours very truly, (Mrs.) Eleanor Fisher.

CORNWALL.—During August Mr. F. T. Snell has been labouring in Cornwall, organising and conducting open-air gatherings, and preaching at Roche, Tregenetha, St. Day, Portreath, Connor Downs, Roseworthy, Illogan, Harris' Mill, Constantine, &c.

PLAN TO EVANGELISE THE WORLD.

Last year papers, written by Revs. A. T. Pierson and J. M. Driver, appeared in an American periodical relative to this important subject. These coming to the notice of our fellow-countryman, Mr. Robert Arthington, of Leeds, by whose practical sympathy with missionary enterprise Africa is largely benefiting, he sent the proprietors of the magazine, a copy of a resolution he had moved at one of the "February Simultaneous Meetings," without receiving a seconder. It was to the effect that the time had come to map out the world in portions, in its heathen parts, and allot it amongst all the missionary societies, thus enlarging the fields already occupied, and giving new spheres to each society, so as to cover the entire globe. Mr. Arthington suggests that the directors of each of the missionary organisations of Europe and America, would do well to devise a plan of putting this in practice, which in a conference of delegates should be submitted to all the others, that thus might be obtained a plan for general adoption.

"Would not," he asks, "the occupation of the whole world, simply for its evangelisation by the Word of God, be greatly to his glory? I judge it would not be difficult to make prayerfully the proposed apportionment of the unevangelised parts of the world." Again Mr. Arthington says, "If we do not attain all we could desire, it would be a great advance to have made the apportionment. Who can doubt that this plan, if accepted and carried out, would lead to an amazing increase of missionary effort and success? Anyone might still be free to preach the Gospel in any part of the world, but for economy of time, strength, money, and forces, all might be entreated not to establish missions in parts assigned to others, and occupied by them." At the request of Mr. Arthington, a copy of the resolution was forwarded to Dr. Pierson and Dr. Driver, both of whom cordially approved it. Dr. Pierson wrote: "This is just the thing. Why not print Mr. A.'s letter, and keep the subject prominent? 1892 is the 400th anniversary of the discovery of America, and the 100th anniversary of the first Baptist Missionary Society of England. The apportionment ought to be made, and the fields occupied by that date."

Is there anything unreasonable and impossible in all this? The plan of economising effort has been attended with signal success in the Pacific islands; and it was the boast of even the Apostle Paul himself, "Yea, so have I strived to preach the Gospel, not where Christ was named, lest I should build upon another man's foundation." There might, in this agreement of purpose, be at last found that union in division which is all we can hope for in pre-millennial times! Would the supporters of societies be less likely to give willingly of their substance when they knew that tracts of land were wholly dependent on their efforts and their messengers for a knowledge of the truth? We think not; but rather that augmented responsibility would incite to greater earnestness, interest, and liberality. These may seem like Utopian dreams, but, at least, let them be proved in actual experience to be so before Mr. Arthington's scheme is finally rejected.

THE CHURCH CONGRESS will be held at Wakefield on October 5, 6, 7, and 8. The official programme has been issued. Church Reform is one of the most prominent subjects for discussion, three sessions being devoted to it, and one to "The Church in Relation to Social Questions." The Bishop of Ripon is President, and the Archbishop of York and the Bishops of Rochester, Manchester, Liverpool, Meath, and Edinburgh (elect) are announced to take part in the proceedings.

MR. CHARLES JAMES, the young Welsh lecturer of the Gospel Purity Association, has just concluded a two months' lecturing compaign in Wales, on the Purity Question. The meetings were well attended, considering the time of the year, and all of them were highly enthusiastic. Indeed Mr. James was received with unbounded heartiness by his fellow-countrymen. In response to many pressing invitations, he expects to visit Wales again in the autumn. His address is 31, Paternoster-square, London, E.C.

RUSSIAN PERSECUTION.

The oppression of the Evangelical Church in the Baltic Provinces of Russia is greatly on the increase. We have heard lately that the Government has resolved, in reorganising their schools, to substitute the Russian for the German language, and teachers who have not learnt it after a fixed time are dismissed. History also, by official order, is only taught from the Russian standpoint.

In ecclesiastical matters the case is the same. Those who have left the Protestant to join the Greek Church are not allowed to return to it. Teaching from its pulpit is forbidden. Children of mixed marriages belong to the State, so that the Lutheran Church is scarcely tolerated. Sixty pastors have been brought before the Court of Justice for preaching, and one, Pastor Brandt, was sentenced at Smolensk to hard work, for which he received 2½d. a day.

Treating the shepherds of the flock thus by robbing them of their office, it will easily be seen that it cannot go well with their fold. By cunning and by power, especially by arbitrary judgment, through the refusal of work and confiscation of property, the Lutherans are kept down, until in a weak hour they yield and deny their faith. Is it to be wondered at that distress and despair have driven many to suicide? The door through which they might have re-entered their fathers' Church is for ever closed to them! On account of this persecution those that left the Lutheran Church in 1885, numbered 850, whilst in the year before there was not half that number. What a sum of misery and violence and distress is hidden in this fact! And it seems only the beginning of the perversion of conscience, destruction of communities, and unhappiness in their homes. The Government is determined to destroy a Church, which throughout centuries has been a school of fidelity to the Empire, and a blessing to the Baltic Provinces! Whilst every other seat of learning in Russia is full of Nihilistic elements, the Baltic University has always been loyal, but now they intend to alter its character and to make it Russian.

Except in the Baltic Provinces, darkness, ignorance, and poverty reign throughout this large empire; but here, on the shores of the Baltic, we find industries flourishing, and universal prosperity and enlightenment under the Gospel influence. It is no doubt this fact that has aroused the fanatical jealousy of the priesthood, and all means are to them justifiable to quench the light which came by the Reformation; but in giving its aid the Government stands in its own light, and robs the country of its wealthiest and most intelligent subjects. Let us pray that their eyes may be opened before it is too late. May we not see the hand of the Lord suddenly showing itself in the fact that the organiser of these oppressive measures, Procureur-General Pobedonozzew has been struck down by an incurable form of insanity?

Surely we in our comfort and ease ought to feel the distress of our brothers as if it were our own? Is it possible that three flourishing Protestant provinces should be sacrificed to the Panslavic propaganda without a voice being raised on their behalf by any Power in Europe? It is true that we must leave the responsibility to those to whom the Lord gave the office and the power, but all the more we ought to join in prayer for the sufferers. In the last meeting of pastors, in Berlin, a proposal was made to this effect, and all those present were organised in a phalanx of prayer. The same happened at the Whitsuntide Conference in Leipsig.

Could not Christian people in England make it a subject of prayer, and lay the sufferings of this oppressed church before the Lord, so that He may shorten them?

E. P. Goergens, Head Master.
Concordia, Ouchy.

UPPER TOOTING.—Services have been held in a tent here for five weeks, and the Gospel has been faithfully preached by members of the Evangelisation Society, and on two occasions by Lord Radstock. Much blessing has resulted. Sinners awakened and not a few converted to God. The meetings have been well attended—at times crowded. They were reluctantly closed on the 30th ult., with a praise meeting, when several persons testified to the benefit they had received at the services. One element of success was a daily prayer meeting, which was held in the tent at noon.

LESSONS FROM NEHEMIAH.

MR. KIRKHAM AT THE STRANGERS' REST.

At the monthly workers' meeting of the Strangers' Rest, St. George's-street, E., on Friday last, the above was the topic of an adddress by Mr. Gawin Kirkham. He began by pointing out the purpose of Nehemiah, viz., to rebuild Jerusalem and restore religion; and that this purpose was fostered by his patriotism and his piety. Everything which affects our country should affect us, but only that action which was born of the fear and love of God could be lasting. Hence the prayerfulness of this material and moral reformer. His work began in prayer (i. 4), was continued in prayer (ii. 4), and was ended in prayer (xiii. 31). Our tendency was to pray at first, when we realised our ignorance and weakness; but to depend upon ourselves as we made progress, and grew familiar with our work. And in this Nehemiah rebuked us. We should wait, like David, for "the sound of going in the tops of the mulberry trees," and "then go out to battle" (1 Chron. xiv. 15). But this prayerfulness was coupled with watching (iv. 9). No amount of prayer would make up for the neglect of ordinary means of security. And, further, this spirit of prayer was wedded to the spirit of praise (viii. 10). Cheerfulness in the Christian showed the world how happy he was in the Lord. Truly in Christian work the joy of the Lord was our strength.

Nehemiah's preparation was next dwelt upon. It was two-fold; first, he enquired of others (i. 2) and then examined for himself (ii. 11—16). That midnight ride round the ruined city did more to open his eyes to the real state of things, than any reporting could have done. Mr. Kirkham told us that when he first came to London, in 1855, he took a midnight walk from west to east, which did more to show him what the moral condition of London was than anything he had seen since. And here he took occasion to express his belief that the Christian worker was safe anywhere, so long as he was on the Lord's business. Even ladies might go into the lowest lodging-houses in perfect security.

Coming to principles, which were the basis of practice in Nehemiah, he mentioned two as illustration—first, the law of purity (xiii. 23—28), and then the law of the Sabbath (xiii. 15—21)—and took occasion to say that Christians were bound to see that good laws were made for the preservation of the purity of the nation, and also to see that, when made, they were enforced. He also made some strong observations as to the laxity of Christians about Sunday post and Sunday travelling. His Society, the Open-air Mission, never sent out preachers where Sunday travelling was involved, and he himself had never yet set foot in any public conveyance on the Lord's Day, though he travelled 12,000 miles a year.

The plans or modes of action of Nehemiah were adapted to the needs of the people, and in carrying them out he sought the co-operation of others. The illustration here was the famous open-air service described in the eighth chapter. Thus we were taught to try all methods of reaching the masses, and to do the work in the best way by finding out what each worker was best suited for. Mr. Kirkham described this open-air meeting as united, scriptural, sensible, devotional, powerful, practical, and protracted.

The last point was the perseverance of this heroic man till the work he had undertaken was finished (vi. 15). He persevered amidst opposition from friends and foes who tried ridicule (iv. 1—3), stratagem (vi. 2), lying (vi. 6), threats (vi. 10), and unbelief (iv. 10), but all in vain. The great lesson, therefore, was, "If God be for us, who can be against us?"

Mr. R. C. Morgan, who presided, added a few words about the importance of searching the Scriptures.

NORWICH Y.W.C.A.—On Thursday last, September 2, this Association entered upon new and convenient premises, 14, St. Giles-street, which had recently been vacated by the Y.M.C.A., the latter institution having removed to a much larger habitation. The event was celebrated with a social gathering of the members and friends, who were afterwards addressed by Rev. W. A. McAllan, Mr. G. M. Chamberlin, and Mr. Robert Adcock, who all spoke in terms of thankfulness and hopefulness as to the present position and future prospects of the institution.

ANYWHERE FOR JESUS.

A REMARKABLE MISSIONARY MEETING.

On Wednesday, September 1, the Sunderland Young Men's Missionary Union held a farewell meeting in the hall of the Y.M.C.A. in connection with the departure of Mr. Fred Suter for China. The hall was filled, and many were standing on the landing and in the class-rooms. Mr. Reginald Radcliffe was in the chair, and commenced the meeting with an exhortation to earnest prayer for a mighty blessing, several in different parts of the hall engaging in short petitions in this spirit.

Mr. W. H. Paris introduced Mr. Suter to the meeting, and spoke of the consistent walk with which he had adorned the Gospel of Christ. Mr. Suter vividly described the manner in which the Lord had led him towards China while studying at Mr. Grattan Guinness's Institute, and how the door had been opened for him to go there. He earnestly exhorted the young men present to leave all for Christ—going, if need be, to the uttermost parts of the earth, and win the heathen for Jesus. Some very interesting facts brought his hearers face to face with the need for more labourers amongst those yet untouched by the Gospel. Mr. Walter Price, Secretary of the Missionary Union, in a brief prayer commended Mr. Suter to the faithful keeping of the Lord.

Rev. C. H. Gill, North Shields, said the Lord had laid the matter of going to labour amongst the heathen on his heart last year, and he had prayed that a way might be opened for him to go forth and labour amongst the Chinese. Although many obstacles intervened, they were now all cleared away.

Mr. Radcliffe, in a closing address, dealt with the claims of China on the devotion of Christian men and women, and, in a heart-searching address, clenched the exhortations of the previous speakers. Young women are wanted, as well as young men. Old men, with their grey hairs, may go forth and do something for Christ amongst the heathen. He appealed to some of those present to offer themselves to God, a living sacrifice, to spend and be spent for Him. At the close, twenty-eight young men (besides Rev. C. H. Gill and Mr. Frederick Suter) and two young women ascended the platform, and in short ejaculations of prayer told out to God their desire to lay themselves on the altar of service, and that a way might be opened for them to go to heathen lands as messengers of the Cross. Altogether it was the most remarkable missionary meeting ever held in Sunderland.

WORK for CHRIST in HAMPSHIRE.

Sir,—Will you kindly allow me a short space to advert to the work of God which is being carried on (under the auspices of the Winchester Soldiers' Home Evangelistic Mission) in Hampshire? The Mission was founded upwards of eleven years ago by the Misses Perks, two ladies who have consecrated their all to the service of the Master. It has been my privilege to spend a week in surveying the operations of the Mission, and my time and your space would be too severely taxed to describe the value and variety of the agencies employed to reach and reclaim the people. It must suffice to say that in addition to the Home (a building capable of accommodating 600 persons), and two rooms in the suburbs of the city, various stations are occupied extending over an area of fifteen miles; and that the Divine approbation and blessing are constantly manifest.

Besides the Misses Perks, the Superintendent (Mr. C. Edwards, formerly of the Evangelisation Society, London), the Assistant-Superintent (Professor J. Niedermann, Southampton), and a colporteur, no less than fifty brethren are actively engaged, either as preachers or helpers, in publishing the "glad tidings" of the Gospel. The various services, scores of which are held every week, are largely attended, and many are inquiring the way of salvation.

Friends and funds are urgently needed. Any communication would be gladly received and gratefully acknowledged by Miss L. Perks, Soldiers' Home, Winchester.—Yours truly,

A Visitor.

SUMMER REVIVALS IN AMERICA.

Encouraging reports of revivals still come. There is abundant evidence that the Lord, who is no respecter of persons, is no respecter of seasons either; and his Spirit is touching the hearts of the unconverted in many of the churches. But the Holy Spirit and the efforts of earnest workers are not confined to the churches. In many places the war for souls is being carried into the enemy's country. For instance, on Sabbath afternoon in this city a vast throng of people, most of whom are careless of the sanctity of the Lord's Day, assemble on the Common to listen to the band concert. As soon as the last strain of music has died away, and the musicians begin to pack up their instruments, from an eminence at the outskirts of the crowd the sound of the cornet is heard, and soon the voices of a group of young men singing a stirring Gospel hymn. At once a crowd is attracted, many of whom join in the singing. After several hymns, a brief passage of Scripture and a prayer, some preacher from the city, standing on a bench, preaches Christ for twenty minutes to a large congregation, composed mostly of those who seldom hear preaching in a church. The pastor of our Boston church says he never faced a more orderly and attentive congregation than the one which it was his privilege recently to address under these circumstances, though it included several Catholics and some men partially intoxicated. At the close of the short sermon an invitation is extended, and generally there are responses from sincere inquirers after salvation.

Still another out-door revival is in progress in this city in a large tent which is well filled six evenings in the week. Many a person that on these warm evenings would not shut himself within the walls of a church is found frequently under this "Gospel tent;" and many another that never goes to church is attracted by the music, and afterwards moved by the preaching, and led by the Spirit to give his heart to Christ. The summer is no time to relax revival effort; but evidently God honours adaptation of the effort to the season of the year. The principal need in adapting the church prayer meeting to the season is to keep it warm. No matter how hot the weather, if the prayer meeting be full of warmth the people will attend, and God's Spirit will work in it.—Morning Star (Boston).

SERMON LANE MISSION.

For nearly three years Mr. George Fuller, the Superintendent of this Mission, has been suffering from a serious and protracted complaint. Very heavy expenses have been incurred by him for medical treatment and necessary change of air, during the summer months, in addition to the sad accident to Mrs. Fuller, which invalided her for nearly four years. The President and Secretary, Mr. W. D. Lewis and Mr. Daniel Cooksey, with other kind-hearted friends, desiring to show their Christian sympathy, presented Mr. Fuller a few days ago with eighty guineas, in some measure to alleviate his severe trial, and to give expression to the appreciation in which he is held.

Mr. Fuller's numerous friends will be glad to hear that during the past few months some rays of hope have been shed upon his path, which have encouraged the impression that the worst is past, and that once more he may be able to carry on the work of the Mission as actively as in former years.

CHILDREN'S SCRIPTURE UNION.—The following are the portions for the ensuing week:—September 12, Joshua viii. 1—13; September 13, Joshua viii. 14—25; September 14, Joshua viii. 26—35; September 15, Joshua ix. 1—15; September 16, Joshua ix. 16—27; September 17, Joshua x. 1—15; September 18, Joshua xiv. 1—15.

PEVENSEY SLUICE, HASTINGS.—The first anniversary of the mission hall in this seaside village was recently held, a number of sympathising friends being present. The devoted labours of Mr. and Mrs. Matthews, in connection with the Mission, have been greatly owned of God, and the hall has been to many as a beacon light in a dark place.

Letters to the Editor.

RESCUE SOCIETY.

Dear Sir,—I beg to thank you most sincerely for your very kind notice of our report which appeared in The Christian, and trust you will allow me to supplement it by a few words. Many years have elapsed since the applications have been so numerous as this year, and some of the cases are peculiarly distressing. I fear also that your readers will not gather from your allusion to the increase of receipts last year that we are now greatly needing help. Yet such is the case. The bulk of our income arises from donations rather than annual subscriptions, and our contributions to date are quite £500 less than in the corresponding period of last year, consequently we are in very pressing need of funds to support the nearly 200 depending on us for daily food. Who will help us to "Save our Lassies?"—Yours faithfully,

C. Stuart Thorpe.

CHRISTIAN STUDENTS AND BIBLE STUDY.

Sir,—I have read, with a considerable degree of interest, and perhaps with some jealousy, of the gathering of students at Mount Hermon, Mass. I say jealousy, because, as a Christian student, I feel such a systematic study of a portion of God's Word, as it appears has been made at Northfield, would just suit my case. I do not know how it is at theological colleges, but, speaking as an undergraduate of an English university, my experience is that the mode of reading Divinity in vogue there is little calculated to help one in reading one's Bible with a view to extracting its spiritual truth.

While I read of Mr. Moody's Convention, my soul thirsts for a similar one in England. There are many spiritually-minded men in London who could undertake a similar work, and, surely, it might be done. We have gatherings to discuss set subjects, but none to study any portion of the Bible in a systematic manner. I, for one, would gladly devote a portion, or, indeed, the whole, of the Christmas vacation to attending a class or school in London, if such could be formed.—Yours, &c.,

HOLIDAY HOMES FOR POOR CHILDREN.

Sir,—For many years the Committee of the Ragged School Union have been wont to transfer some of the enfeebled children of the local schools and mission centres from the close atmosphere of the London court to the healthy air of the country. Begun originally in a desultory way, mainly through the private liberality of the late Lord Shaftesbury, it has greatly developed, and this summer, if the necessary funds are forthcoming, not less than 1000 weaklings will enjoy the benefit of at least a fortnight's change, as against 600 of last year.

At first, the children were all boarded out amongst the villagers, but it was soon found that separate homes would be preferable for a portion of the poor children, as bath and special dietary arrangements could be ensured with personal influences of the best kind. Whilst largely using, therefore, carefully selected cottages, the Committee have opened three separate "Holiday Homes" in rural places about thirty miles from London, the last one in the hop district, consisting of an old-fashioned cottage, embosomed in flowers, kindly offered, ready furnished, and free of rent for the benefit of the poor children. Space is also reserved for the benefit of the elder scholars, many of whom, though young in years, are old in toil, and have, in not a few instances, never before enjoyed two consecutive days' outing. The Homes, moreover, are useful to a limited extent, all through the winter, to meet special cases of convalescence, which are constantly occurring amongst the 190 affiliated ragged schools with the aggregate of 50,000 scholars. Will your readers help to sustain a movement which brings untold good to the entire community? Yours faithfully,

John Kirk, Secretary.

RESPONSE TO A SUGGESTION.

Dear Sir,—Being practically interested in your "Recent Subscriber's" "Suggestion," I beg a little space to say how much I hope many of your readers will take up his plan and carry it out. It would, I am sure, prove greatly helpful to many missions who depend on voluntary offerings for support. I can speak from experience how a small gift has often been of great value to me in supplying some immediate want among my orphan children. Sometimes even letters are written and have to wait for stamps in order to be posted. Others engaged in similar work well know the hundred things coming up daily.

Your correspondent truly says that some of us in the smaller and less-known institutions "hardly know how to struggle on." Yet, probably, he would wonder to see how calmly one comes to paying out the last farthing, and trustingly waits for the next supply. I hope he will be able to keep a good stock of his Postal Orders, and be richly blessed in despatching them to the charities which touch his heart.—Yours faithfully,

Mary A. Parsons.

"AN ANXIOUS INQUIRER."

Sir,—In reply to the query (August 19) under this heading, I may quote the comment from Henry and Scott: "If God and his grace do not rule us, sin and Satan will have possession of us. The devil, by the Divine permission, troubled and tempted Saul by means of the corrupt humours of his body and passions of his mind." We may add to this, however, the declaration of the Apostle, that he had delivered a certain man to Satan for the destruction of the flesh, that he might learn not to blaspheme. So that the purpose of God does not end with permitting Satan to trouble us, but in this, as in all else, the goodness of God is leading to repentance that the spirit may be saved in the day of the Lord Jesus. Thus question (1) is answered—is it possible for a Christian to have a similar experience?—to be troubled by an evil spirit from the Lord.

(2) What is backsliding? It may be of two kinds, illustrated by Judas and Peter. The former went back from an outward profession of Christ, the love of whom had never possessed his heart. The latter, from want of watchfulness and desire for his own comfort, laid himself open to temptation, and fell into the snare of the devil; but he was true at heart, and when Jesus looked upon him, and he remembered his words of premonition, he went out and wept bitterly.

(3) Do Heb. vi. 4—6 and Heb. x. 26—29 bear any analogy to 1 Sam. xvi. 14—16, xviii. 10, xix. 9? They are analogous to these passages taken in connection with x. 10—13, xix. 22—24, where we read of Saul prophesying under the influence of the Spirit. There is an operation of God upon men, He may speak and act by them, and they may prophesy and do many wonderful works, while they yet remain unregenerate. Saul and Balaam in the Old Testament, Judas and those mentioned in Matt. vii. 21—23 in the New, are instances of this. The passages quoted from Heb. vi. and x. describe persons who have tasted of the heavenly gift, and have been made partakers of the Holy Ghost, but in whom the work of the Spirit falls short of regeneration. This is proved by the illustration drawn from two different kinds of ground, and the Apostle's assurance that he was persuaded better things of them than that they were like the bad ground. See also the illustration, 2 Pet. ii. 22, where some who had escaped the pollutions of the world, and known the way of righteousness, were still not regenerate souls—not sheep, but only washed swine; dogs who turned again to their own vomit.

Note that the impossibility of repentance does not lie in God, but in themselves. Through trifling with the Spirit's influences, and not fully yielding to them, their conscience has become seared, they are Gospel-hardened.

(4) Is there such a place as a backslider's hell? This is a figure of speech. Everyone, like Jesus and like Judas, goes to his own place: Jesus to the Father, Judas to perdition (John xiii. 1; Acts i. 25)—

Rivers to the ocean run,
  Nor stay in all their course:
Fires ascending seek the sun:
  Both speed them to their source.

Some will be beaten with few, some with many stripes. They who knew their Lord's will, and did it not, will suffer the most severely. This is what I suppose is meant by "a backslider's hell," which is not, however, a Scriptural expression. C. M.

ABSTINENCE FROM THINGS STRANGLED, &c.

My Dear Sir,—Is there anything in the New Testament more clear than that the Apostles (who were the mouthpiece of God by the Holy Spirit to assign the boundaries of what was, and what was not, to be counted right and good in this New Testament Dispensation) did definitely command that the Gentile believers should abstain from blood, as distinctly affirmed in the following verses, Acts xv. 28, 29, viz.: "For it seemed good to the Holy Ghost and to us (the Apostles and Elders of the Pentecostal Church at Jerusalem) to lay upon you no greater burden than these necessary things, that ye abstain from meats offered to idols, and from blood, and from things strangled, and from fornication, from which if ye keep yourselves ye shall do well. Fare ye well."—Yours in the love of the truth as in Jesus, A. R.

Sir,—In reply to the query of your correspondent as to the command to abstain from things strangled and from blood, it seems that the reason given was that Moses had in every city those who preached him, being read in the synagogues every Sabbath day. It was out of consideration to their Jewish brethren that the Gentiles received the prohibition, and, when this cause no longer existed, the prohibition ceased. The eating of things sacrificed to idols is treated similarly by the Apostle to the Corinthians (chap. x.), who permits them to eat because an idol is nothing in the world, but bids them abstain if the conscience of another is offended. M.

SOCIAL PURITY IN CALCUTTA.

Dear Sir,—You have gained a blessed victory in England by the repeal of those obnoxious Acts which for many years have held the British Government in guilty complicity with vice. The battle has yet to be fought out in India; and we shall need the help of Christians in England in the conflict which has already commenced. Act 14 of 1868 has been suspended in Calcutta for some years. By its suspension, the power to segregate immoral women was taken away, and, nothing having been put in its place, the consequence has been that the moral cesspools of the city have emptied their contents into other quarters, and houses of ill-fame have been placed side by side with the houses of respectable people. The condition of our streets is worse, it is said, than ever it has been; and the Christian community has at last risen in moral indignation to demand a remedy, and press upon the Government the necessity of fresh legislation.

It is to be regretted, however, that an attempt is being made to revive some of the objectionable provisions of the suspended Act. At a large meeting in the Town Hall, on Tuesday last, the feeling was strong in favour of such a course. The resolution, however, was not passed without protest, and the protest will, in all probability, take the form of a memorial to Government. It will be a melancholy thing if, after the victory has been won in England, and preparation is being made to carry the war into the British colonies, Calcutta should be found moving in the wrong direction.

I do not believe, however, that the recent meeting can be taken as an index of the Christian sentiment of Calcutta on the subject. The Missionary Conference has yet to express its mind. Sir Rivers Thompson, our Lieutenant-Governor, has also, in a recent resolution, declared against the revival of the suspended Act, so that I should hope the city will be delivered from entering on a retrograde course. What we need is power to repress without legalising vice. The question of repealing the Acts all through India will be pushed to the front, but along with this means must be devised for remedying the present condition of things, which has become intolerable, at least in this city.

You can help us by calling the attention of influential parties to the question which concerns every colony of the Empire.—I am, &c.,

Free Church Manse, W. Milne.
Park-street, Calcutta.

SYMPATHY WITH MR. LEYS.—We are informed on what seems reliable authority that the agents and counsel of Rev. Mr. Leys have declined to accept any fees or other acknowledgment for their services in the defence. Such a proceeding reflects the highest credit on the parties who have so generously acted, and is a strong testimony as to the sympathy entertained for Mr. Leys by a portion of the legal profession.—Christian Leader.

The Book World.

The New Headmaster. By Margaret Haycraft. 1s. 6d. T. Woolmer. A capital story, forcibly illustrating the evils of drink, and the results of setting a good example.

England's Jubilees. By E. H. Hudson. 1s. J. Ingalton Drake, Eton. The author has taken advantage of the Queen's jubilee year to give an account of the jubilees of three earlier English sovereigns.

Household Object Lessons is the title of a series of manuals published by J. Heywood for the English Girls' Garten Association. We have received the first volume, Teaching Methodically Daily Work (1s.) which is well adapted for the purpose it is intended to serve.

To-day and other Poems. R. J. Masters, 327, Vauxhall Bridge-road, S.W. This little collection of poems, drawn from various sources, we can commend. A spirit of devotion is breathed throughout the volume. It is published in three bindings, at 2s. 6d., 1s. 6d., and 1s. respectively.

Instructions in Reading the Liturgy. By Rev. J. H. Howlett, M.A. 2s. 6d. Thomas Murby. The author gives some sensible advice to readers, which might be studied with advantage by all who have to read in public. In the later sections he directs attention to those parts of the Church Service which are most imperfectly rendered.

Family Prayers for a Month. Compiled by Rev. George Smith, B.D. Hatchards. The compiler has gathered together and arranged several Psalms, the Lord's Prayer, and Collects, to form an order of service for daily, morning, and evening prayers. May be useful in some cases, but we think it better that the head of the family should conduct family worship without such aid if possible.

Prayers for the Use of Children. 1s. J. Nisbet & Co. These prayers were originally compiled by a father for the use of his children. The second part of the book contains suggestions in regard to private prayer, and gives some helpful advice on prayer. We think it better, however, for children (and everybody else, for that matter) to compose their own prayers, and ask God for just what they feel they need.

Livingstone Anecdotes. By Dr. Macaulay. 1s. 6d. Here we have a valuable addition to the "Anecdote Series," published by the Religious Tract Society. This book gives a faithful sketch of the life and character of the heroic missionary, explorer, and philanthropist, who devoted his life to the opening up and evangelisation of the Dark Continent. It is full of interesting anecdotes about his travels and missionary career. A striking portrait forms the frontispiece.

Peril and Adventure in Central Africa. By the late Bishop Hannington. 1s. Religious Tract Society. This amusing and instructive book is composed of letters written by the martyred Bishop to the youngsters in the old country. It gives graphic and interesting accounts of scenes in his travels and the sufferings which he passed through, illustrated by cuts from original sketches. Although the book is intended for young people, to whose minds it is well adapted, we can commend it to all who have the cause of foreign missions at heart.

Mr. John B. Gough, the Great Temperance Orator. 1d. Morgan & Scott. Under the above title we have a vigorously written life of the great apostle of Teetotalism, whose thrilling words have nerved thousands to fight and overcome the drink fiend. The letterpress is clear, and, besides an excellent portrait, several illustrations are given of places with which his life has familiarised us. The booklet is enclosed in a neat illustrated cover, and deserves the attention of Temperance workers, who might profitably use it for general distribution.

The Christian's Own Calendar. Seeley & Co. 1s. 6d. This calendar differs in its plan from the ordinary text-calendar, in that it is intended to be a record of blessings received, and of epochs in the life of its owner, so that it may be an incentive to prayer and thanksgiving. Spaces are provided for entries on each day of the year. The book also contains an introduction by Rev. H. C. G. Moule, M.A., on Prayer, which is worthy of calm study. It concentrates many helpful thoughts from various sources into a small compass. The following extract shows its spirit:—

> In secret prayer, whether intercessory or not, let us cultivate, with reverence, absolute simplicity and trustful utterance of detail. Pray in the spirit of Abraham's servant at the well. "Generalities are the death of prayer." The free, reverently free, utterance of the outpoured heart is one great secret of the life of prayer.

Christ and the Heroes of Heathendom. By Rev. James Wells. 3s. 6d. Religious Tract Society. In this book is reproduced the substance of five lectures delivered at a young men's literary institute. In the earlier addresses is given an account of the life and teachings of Æschylus, Socrates, Plato, and Epictetus, while in the fifth he contrasts their teachings with that of Christ. The book will be useful, if only to show the superiority of our Lord's life and teaching to that of the heathen philosophers, who are so highly lauded by a certain class of teachers.

Two West-end Chapels: Sketches of London Methodism from Wesley's Day. By Rev. John Telford, B.A. 2s. 6d. Wesleyan Methodist S. S. Union. This book is published at an opportune time, when the attention of the Christian public is directed to the proposed London Mission. It traces the history of Methodism in London from the time of Wesley to our own days in connection with West-street and Hinde-street chapels—names which will ever be connected with the progress of the Wesleyan movement in London. The account of the work at Hinde-street is very full, and will be specially interesting to Methodists.

The Expositor. Hodder & Stoughton. 1s. The September number is even above the high average which we have learned to expect in this serial. Dr. Godet opens with an invaluable exposition of the Epistle to the Colossians, seen in its historical setting, which will richly repay careful study—for it must be studied. Dr. Wesseley, who is now engaged in deciphering the Fayûm MSS., contributes an article which will have peculiar interest to many friends. He gives copious extracts from certain magical papiri, or ancient Egyptian documents bearing on magic, in which Jewish and Christian names and facts occur, e.g., "I abjure thee by Jesus, the God of the Jews;" "By Him who pointed out the way to Israel in the pillar of fire by night, and in a cloud by day;" "By the mighty God Sabbaoth, by whom the river Jordan was made to stand still;" "Hail, Jesus, the Anointed;" "O Great God Adonai," &c. These sacred words, thus intermingled with the language of Greek and Egyptian mythology, in MSS., earlier than the fourth century, show how Jewish and Christian thought had spread, even among many who remained grossly heathen. The number contains, besides, a long paper by Dr. Marcus Dods, another of great interest by Dr. Alexander, Bishop of Derry, and a third, "The Garments of the Renewed Soul," by Dr. Maclaren, which is in his best style, and that is saying a good deal.

The Bread of Life Picture Leaflets (4d.) is the title of a series suitable for distribution or enclosure in letters. They consist chiefly of extracts from Mr. Spurgeon's sermons.

The Society for Promoting Christian Knowledge send a specimen of their Penny Library of Fiction; but, while we wish to see the people won from bad literature, we cannot commend this venture.

Messrs. S. W. Partridge & Co. send us Faithful and True, and Rest at the Revelation of the Lord Jesus Christ (1d. each), expositions of Rev. xx. and 2 Thess. i. respectively, by Rev. Frank H. White. They are in the form of booklets, suitable for enclosure in letters.

We have received from Drummond's Tract Depôt, Stirling, four coloured pictorial sheets of Texts suitable for Reward Cards, entitled respectively—Bible Gladness, Bible Leading, Bible Love, and Bible Help. They are florally illuminated, contain texts suited to the titles given, and are published at 2d. each sheet.

We have also received the following books:—

From E. Marlborough & Co., Old Bailey: Is Life worth Living?

From Field & Tuer, Leadenhall-street: What is the Church?

From Funk & Wagnalls: Death of Hewfik Pasha, "Bictigheim."

From Religious Tract Society: The Crooked Sixpence, Outlines of the Life of Christ.

From Hodder & Stoughton: Recent Events, and a Clue to their Solution (Second Edition), Fallacies of Futurism.

PAMPHLETS RECEIVED.

From T. Fisher Unwin: The Bride of Greenlawns.

From Swan Sonnenschien & Co.: A Lecture on Church Reform.

From J. Nisbet & Co.: A Century of Protestant Missions.

From Haughton & Co.: Election according to Calvinism Unmasked.

From The Church of England Book Society: The Life and Martyrdom of Bishop Latimer, The Life and Martyrdom of Bishop Ridley.

From J. Kensit, 18, Paternoster-row: Gladstone, Ireland, Rome, Lord Robert Montagu's Reasons for Leaving the Church of Rome, The Second Advent, William Cobbett on the Church of Rome, A Sermon on "Transubstantiation," Evening Communings, The Massacre of St. Bartholomew, The Association of the Virgin Mary with our Lord in the Scheme of Salvation.

September Magazines received since last notice:—

Home Chimes, Sword and Trowel, House Evangel, Presbyterian Messenger, Messenger for the Children, London City Mission Magazine, All the World, Jewish Herald, Illustrations, Toilers of the Deep, On and Off Duty, Silver Morn, Word and Work, Christian Socialist, Free Church of Scotland Monthly, Children's Record, Congregationalist, Christian Irishman, Christian Treasury, Voice of Warning, Warning Cry, Messiah's Witness, National Church, Church Missionary Intelligencer, Gleaner, Juvenile Instructor, Anti-Infidel, Church of Scotland Home and Foreign Mission Record, Home Visitor, Evangelist, Believer's Pathway, British Friend, Our Boys and Girls, Monthly Interpreter, Our Boys' Magazine, Work and Worship, Irish Congregational Magazine.

POLYTECHNIC Y.M.C. INSTITUTE.

This highly popular Institution was en fête on Wednesday afternoon last week, proclaiming to the West-end world, by a huge banner stretching across the spacious street, the opening of the ninth annual Industrial Exhibition. To the assembled friends Sir John Lubbock, Bart., M.P., gave an address full of interesting allusions and classical quotations. He congratulated the students on the privileges placed within their reach by the munificent generosity of Mr. Quintin Hogg, who, according to the learned baronet, bestows £10,000 a year on the Polytechnic and its various agencies, besides much expenditure of personal time and labour. The great and distinguishing feature of the Institution is its technical training in various mechanical industries. Last year some 6000 students attended the classes, and we understand that many more would be glad to avail themselves of the advantages afforded, if there were sufficient accommodation. After Sir John Lubbock's address, some remarks were added by Sir Henry Holland, M.P. (new President of the Council of Education), who expressed very hearty sympathy with the work at the Polytechnic. In past years, he said, the artisans and skilled workmen of other European countries outstripped our handicraftsmen in technical proficiency, but now, thanks to such efforts as those carried on at the Polytechnic, the British workman is able to hold his own.

The collection of articles made by the students, which Sir John formally declared open, remains on exhibition till to-morrow, 10th inst. It constitutes a remarkably varied and excellent show of skilled and cunning workmanship, and does ample credit to the industry as well as the ability of the students. Valuable prizes are given for the most meritorious productions. It represents what may be called the secular branch of the Polytechnic scheme. The spiritual part of it is earnestly sustained by the Bible classes, Gospel meetings, and other endeavours, under the charge of Mr. Hogg, Mr. W. T. Paton, and Mr. J. E. K. Studd, all of whom act as Honorary Secretaries. It was most noticeable at this opening meeting that every mention of the name of Mr. Hogg (who was absent) evoked a rapturous cheer from the students. They evidently have a keen sense of their indebtedness to Mr. Hogg for his lavish benefactions on their behalf.

WESLEYAN METHODISTS AND MISSIONS.—The annual "Pastoral Address" of the Wesleyan Methodist Conference, recently assembled at City-road Chapel, London, states that there has been of late not only a decrease in numbers, but a serious falling-off in the income of several of the Connexional funds, notably the Home and Foreign Missionary funds, the result not altogether of the protracted agricultural and commercial depression, but more especially of a decay of missionary zeal and enthusiasm. An earnest appeal is made for increased sympathy and support, that the glory of Methodism as a Missionary Church may not depart, but that the grand purposes of redeeming mercy with reference to England and the world at large may be speedily accomplished. Special mention is made of Methodist work amongst the spiritual destitute in London, and of the initiation of the new movement, which is anticipated to be amongst the most influential of the new undertakings of the Wesleyan Methodist Church.

Vange, South Essex.—About fifteen months ago I began preaching on Sunday evenings in a farmer's kitchen in this village, and since then the regular attendance has been from 60 to 110 souls. The farmer is leaving at Michaelmas next, and we shall not be able to have the room. I have, therefore, undertaken to erect an iron chapel, which, with site, will cost about £200. The people are all poor, and can do almost nothing towards it; but the Gospel is sadly needed in the district, where there is no Nonconformist place of worship. William I. Belcham.

MISS VON FINKELSTEIN.

THIS gifted lady, having returned from the Holy Land, delivered her first lecture in London, at the City Temple, on September 1. A platform had been erected, and arranged to represent a desert scene, with a Bedouin encampment in the foreground.

Sir William M'Arthur presided, and introduced the lecturess. She was dressed as the wife of a Bedouin chieftain, and was accompanied by her brother, attired as a Sheikh; Mr. Alexander Howard, the Oriental traveller, in the garb of a chieftain; and a woman in the character of Hagar, a slave. The subject of the lecture was "Bedouin Life," and Miss Finkelstein, in the course of a long lecture, described the characteristics of the Bedouins, gave illustrations of the process of making bread, and many of the other duties which devolve upon women in a desert encampment.

She was ably assisted by her brother and Mr. Howard, who rendered an Arab war-song. Mr. Finkelstein also chanted a chieftain's call to prayer, and later in the evening sang an Arabian ballad, accompanying himself on a native instrument like a fiddle. At the conclusion of the lecture, the chairman on behalf of the audience thanked Miss Finkelstein for her interesting and instructive discourse. That the lectures at her previous visits were appreciated, her long list of engagements for the winter amply testifies, and, aided by her brother, the future will doubtless be even more interesting than the last series.

A VALEDICTORY MEETING was held on Tuesday at the Wesleyan Chapel, City-road, to bid farewell to five members of Richmond College, who have undertaken missionary labours in West Africa, India, and China.

MRS. ALLEN, widow of the late Richard Allen, of Dublin, has obtained the warm approval of Dublin Yearly Meeting to her proposed visit to Tennessee, U.S.A., to spend the winter in Christian work among the coloured people, and among members of the Society of Friends.

CALCUTTA.—New mission rooms have been opened in the densely inhabited district called Taltola. For more than ten years religious work has been carried on in this part of the city under considerable disadvantage, owing to want of proper accommodation. But this difficulty has now been completely surmounted.—Indian Witness.

PIPE PHILOSOPHY.—The London Lancet is reported as saying that "the moderate use of tobacco soothes the senses and leaves the mental faculties free from irritation, and ready for calmly clear intellectual processes." This is pipe philosophy, and pipe philosophy is worth no more than bowl philosophy. If men would let tobacco and alcohol alone there wouldn't be any need, in nine cases out of ten, of soothing the senses and freeing the mental faculties from irritation.—New York Independent.

TOWER HAMLETS MISSION.—Last Friday night Mr. J. Bennett Anderson, of Liverpool, concluded a fortnight's evangelistic mission in the great Assembly Hall, Mile End-road. Large congregations attended on week nights, and all parts of the great hall, holding about 5000, were crowded on Sunday evenings. Numbers of persons went into the inquiry-rooms at the close, and professed saving faith in the Lord Jesus Christ. At the closing service on Friday night, September 3, over forty men and women rose for prayer.

MISSION TO SHOWMEN.—A mission called "The Travellers' National Total Abstainers' Union" was formed in York, at a free tea given to these wanderers on the Sunday evening during the November fair in 1880. Since then, above three thousand of the van population have joined this Union, and we rejoice to add, many can testify to the saving grace of God. The Mission is worked by means of free teas given to the show people, on Sabbath evenings, in the towns or villages where fairs are held. When the travellers arrive in a town on the Sunday (which is often the case before a fair) they find warm-hearted Christian friends waiting to welcome them to a cheerful Gospel temperance meeting. Many successful meetings have been held in Lancashire, Yorkshire, Wales, and Scotland, and we are most anxious this Mission should spread in the Southern counties. The Society is thoroughly unsectarian, and our object is "salvation for the show-people." I shall be very glad to give every information respecting the Mission, and we hope wherever fairs, feasts, wakes, or marts are held, our show-people will be remembered in any evangelistic efforts that may be made.

TEMPERANCE NOTES.

IN 35 towns in Scotland, 53,073 inhabitants have voted in favour of a Direct Veto, and only 4628 against.

THE need for an English Prohibition party, independent of all parties, is being discussed in temperance organs.

The Christian Leader "believes it is a fact" that Mr. Parnell exacts from each member of his party, in Parliament, a pledge of strict total abstinence.

TIREE, made famous by the crofter agitation, is practically a teetotal island. It has not a single licensed inn, and is often used as a refuge for inebriates.

THE Royal Victoria Hall and Coffee Tavern was reopened for the season on Friday last by a demonstration of the Phœnix, Good Templar, and other temperance societies.

Truth defends Sir Wilfrid Lawson's recent refusal of an extension of drinking hours, pronounces the present licensing system absurd, and declares in favour of a Local Veto.

A PUBLICAN, at Wrexham, has been evading the Sunday Closing Act by means of a hole through the wall into an adjoining cottage, where persons were supplied with drink.

THE late Canon Amphlett was a staunch teetotaler. He was a magistrate, and often expressed his belief that offences by licence-holders were too often conveniently ignored.

A TRAVELLER on the Highland line justly complains of the common practice of treating railway guards, and thus unfitting them for their responsible duties, and endangering the trains.

LIEUT.-COL. WHALE, Tunbridge Wells, writes urging the need of Inebriate Homes for the poor. He thinks the experiment might be tried in a small house in the country, and offers to help to start one.

The Coffee Public-House News complains that coffee-houses confessedly conducted for religious ends are sometimes not so cleanly as they might be, and are not careful to supply good eatables and drinkables.

IN a circular to the Lay Helpers' Association, the Bishop of London says that, to persuade but one man to give up drink, and become a good husband and father, far excels what may seem more showy work.

IN his pamphlet, "True Socialism," Dr. Geikie, Vicar of St. Martin's-at-Palace, Norwich, warns the electors that the drink "ring" in this country will die hard. He urges them to send the "right men," and none but "moral men" to Parliament.

THE Norwegian Parliament has granted 8000 kroner (£200) to aid temperance work.

AN asylum for inebriates of Berlin and the Mark Bradenburg has been opened at Kothen.

THE prohibition party is said to be rapidly gaining strength throughout the United States.

MINNESOTA SALOONS are filling her State prison so rapidly that the State is about to erect a new one.

IN Paraguay, "yerba-mate" is a substitute for tea and coffee, and is made from the powdered twigs and leaves of a native tree.

THE Californian wine growers are alarmed by vile compounds manufactured in New York in imitation of "pure California wines."

MRS. BRADLEY, late of Ealing, has sailed for New York for two months' work on behalf of the Women's Christian Temperance Union.

THE liquor dealers of Rhode Island, Atlanta, and Raleigh, do not take kindly to prohibition, and trouble is expected in the law courts.

IN the National Temperance Hospital, Chicago, no alcohol is used. The death-rate has been much lower than in other hospitals in the city.

THE drink traders of Ohio propose to raise 60,000 dollars to fee counsel to contest in the courts the constitutionality of the new prohibition law.

AT the State Convention of Baptists of Mississippi, church members were advised that their duty as Christians required them to be total abstainers.

THE police report for the district of Columbia says an increase in the number of drink-places results in an increase of disorder, "in geometrical progression."

REV. G. C. HADDOCK, clergyman of the Methodist Episcopal Church, Sioux City, Iowa, has been murdered, on account of his action against the violators of the liquor laws.

THE State of Louisiana legislature has passed a law that saloons, amongst other places named, shall be closed from twelve o'clock p.m. on Saturday, till the same hour on Sunday.

THE Denmark Temperance Society reports, as a result of seven years' work, 371 societies with 17,033 members. Including those outside this society, there are, in Denmark, about 30,000 abstainers.

A BILL which was before the House of Assembly, Jamaica, and which would have legalised the wholesale manufacture of rum, &c., has been thrown out through the action of temperance workers.

THE liquor dealers in Atchison, Kan., have blown up the residence of J. W. Tufts, a lawyer, who has been active in prosecuting infractions of the law. The house was seriously damaged, but no one was killed.

IN Victoria an inebriate, by voluntary application to one justice only, may be committed to a retreat. Any relation or friend may apply to a county court judge who can summon the inebriate to show cause against committal, and, on statutory declaration by two medical men, the committal may be for twelve months or under.

AT Bombay, the bidding for liquor licences at the recent Government auction was brisk. They were put at the minimum price fixed by law, viz., 500 rupees, and though a large number were sold, all brought considerably more than the reserved price.

MR. PATRICK FORD, of New York, the Irish-American Home Rule agitator, says he regards whisky as the enemy of his race, and during the seventeen years he has edited The Irish World he has never admitted a line of liquor advertisement into its columns.

MAYOR WHITNEY is held responsible for the great increase of drink-places in Brooklyn. He was present, recently, at a public meeting on the question, when a minister said, the Mayor was either an ignorant or a false Methodist, and, if the latter, should be expelled.

MME. ANDERSON MEIJERHELM, of Russia, has taken up the work of the World's Woman's Christian Temperance Union, in Sweden and Russia. In a few months she has gained over two thousand pledges, and has persuaded her Russian sisters to don the white ribbon.

No such noble unanimity has been seen among Christian workers in Rhode Island as that developed in the recent temperance struggle. Another marked feature of the campaign was the leading and triumphant part taken in it by Christian women. Another feature was the power of prayer. In many places daily prayer meetings were held during the entire campaign, and one whole day was devoted to special prayer in the city of Providence.

REV. J. JACKSON WRAY resumed his lectures on "International Lessons for Sunday-school Teachers," at Whitefield Tabernacle, Tottenham Court-road, on Wednesday, the 8th inst.

SUNDAY-SCHOOL TEACHERS are greatly needed at St. John's, Cleveland-road, Essex-road, Islington. We shall be glad to receive the assistance of ladies and gentlemen living in the neighbourhood. The children meet in the church on Sunday afternoons from 3 to 4.30.

MR. RICHARD WEAVER has created much stir among the masses in that part of Liverpool by his meetings at Byrom Hall. The Gospel messages were given with all his accustomed force and fire. Speaking of one Sunday evening address, a correspondent says:—"How he kindled and fired and glowed when he got to the theme of God's great love to his prodigal children. A holy unction seemed to accompany the delivery of the truth. The net was drawn, and quite a number indicated their desire to receive salvation."

REQUESTS.—PRAISE for successful services recently held in the town and neighbourhood of Horsham.——PRAYER for rich blessing on a mission to be held in the Albion Hall, Horsham, from September 19 to October 8, by Mr. W. Notman.——For a series of meetings next week at Selkirk.——For a tent mission now being held at Brixham, South Devon.——For blessing on a mission to be held at Mundesley, Norfolk, and at the adjoining village of Knapton, from September 26 to October 11, by Mr. Farrington, of the Evangelisation Society.——For a fifteen days' mission in Spencer-place Chapel, Goswell-road, conducted by Captain Warner Dennis.——That young women may be won to Christ during a mission in connection with the Y.W.C.A., Leicester, commencing on September 12.

BLUE RIBBON GOSPEL TEMPERANCE ARMY.—On September 1, this organisation held its 3124th consecutive nightly meeting at the Hoxton Hall, when the work of the past twelvemonth was briefly reviewed. This period was characterised as one of quiet and steady activity, productive of sound and lasting results. Closely connected with this Mission is the Gospel Temperance Workers' Union, of which Mr. W. J. Palmer, of Reading, is the president. It was formed in 1884 to associate temperance workers generally for mutual assistance. It has proved successful in this direction. Returning to the work at the headquarters, we find that the meetings each evening are varied, Monday and Tuesday nights are devoted to special subjects; Wednesday, popular entertainments; Thursday, various special meetings connected with the "Help-myself" and other Societies; Fridays, prayer and praise, and Saturday, a free and easy entertainment. A large number of temperance pledges have been taken, and most are first pledges, and not persons rejoining. We find that twenty-two meetings are held each week at Hoxton Hall, and this record certainly shows some activity on the part of the promoters.

Notes on Daily Readings.

SUNDAY, SEPT. 12.—2 KINGS XIX.

1—7.—Hezekiah . . . rent his clothes, &c.—Moved, doubtless, by fear and distress, as well as by horror of Rabshakeh's blasphemy. "He, perhaps, began to doubt whether he had done right in yielding to the bolder counsels of Eliakim and Isaiah. He had not lost his faith in God, but his faith was being severely tried."—Sp. Com. Went into the house of the Lord.—There he got strength and inspiration, as men always do; for we read next (2) of his sending off Eliakim and others to beseech Isaiah's intercessions. Thus he made instant use of the most likely means, thereby honouring God through his prophet, and receiving a most comforting promise in reply (6, 7). Isaiah.—He had prophesied from the reign of Uzziah, through that of Jotham and Ahaz, up to the present. His tenth chapter has a very distinct reference to Sennacherib's invasion.

8—19.—Libnah and Lachish.—Situated in the S.W. of Palestine. Tirhakah.—"The great King of Ethiopia, whose warlike exploits remain to this day recorded on the walls of a Theban temple."—Kitto. Sennacherib was now most anxious for the immediate subjection of Judea, that he might be unembarrassed in his march into Egypt to meet Tirhakah. Hence his anger when Jerusalem held out, and the fearful blasphemy of his letter.

14.—Hezekiah . . . spread it before the Lord.—Let the reader dwell long on this scene. The King in his fearful peril, at his last gasp (3), casting his burden on the Lord. It proclaims its own great lesson. Observe the King's prayer (15—19), its brevity, intensity, spiritual insight, and its noble concern for God's honour (15).

20—37.—Verses 25—37, compared with Isa. x. 5—15, form a most suggestive and sublime comment on the words, "The Lord reigneth." They show us God using the Assyrian as "the rod of his anger," and working personally in and through the polities of the world. This shall be a sign.—A sign, not of the destruction of the foe, for that would happen at once, but of the continuation of Judah's freedom from Assyria's power.

MONDAY, SEPT. 13.—2 KINGS XX.

3.—I beseech thee, O Lord, remember now, &c.—"The old covenant promised temporal prosperity, including length of days, to the righteous. Hezekiah feels he has not deserved the sentence which cuts him off in middle life. He ventures, therefore, to expostulate. . . . According to the highest standard of morality, up to this time revealed, there was nothing unseemly in the self-vindication of the monarch, which has many parallels in the Psalms of David (Ps. vii. 3—10, xviii. 19—26, xxvi. 1—8)."—Sp. Com.

14.—From a far country, even Babylon.—Till this embassy was received, Babylon and Judah had been entirely separate. "As yet even the prophets had spoken but little of the great southern city. Up to this time she had been little more to them than Tyre, or Tarshish, No-Ammon, or any other rich and powerful, idolatrous city. Henceforth, all this was changed. These words (verses 16—18) never were, never could be, forgotten. Isaiah followed them up with a burst of prophecy (chaps. xl.—lxvi.), in which Babylon usurps altogether the place of Assyria as Israel's enemy, and the captivity being assumed as a matter of certainty, the hopes of the people are directed onward beyond it to the return." Idem.

Hezekiah's Sin.—As to time: it occurred very soon after his miraculous restoration (2 Chron. xxxii. 31). Its cause was twofold: (1) pride; "his heart was lifted up" (2 Chron. xxxii. 25); and (2) he was left to himself, "God left him to try him," &c. (2 Chron. xxxii. 31), doubtless because of the ingratitude and pride which was already at work. Its nature was also twofold: (1) ostentation, self-display, in opposition to the spirit that would exalt God; and (2) worldly dependence. The words, And Hezekiah hearkened unto them (13), and other things, suggest that a political alliance was a chief object of the visit. If so, Hezekiah sinned by forgetting that God was his defence, his promise (6), his hope. Observe the connection between pride and dependence, and humility and independence.

TUESDAY, SEPT. 14.—2 KINGS XXI.

3.—The high places.—"The first step seems to have been the restoration of the high places, where Jehovah was professedly worshipped (2 Kings xviii. 22), but with idolatrous rites (1 Kings xiv. 23). The next was to reintroduce the favourite idolatry of Israel, Baal worship, which had formerly flourished in Judah under Athaliah and Ahaz (2 Kings xi. 18; 2 Chron. xxviii. 2). After this, it only remained to go on to novelties; and Manasseh seems to have specially affected Sabaism—the worship of the heavenly bodies (3)."—Sp. Com.

6.—He made his son to pass through the fire.—I.e., offered his own flesh as a burnt offering to Moloch, as did Ahaz before him (2 Kings xvi. 3). Observed times. This refers, probably, to divination by omens. It was forbidden (Lev. xix. 26; Deut. xviii. 10).

7.—A graven image of the grove.—"Rather, 'the carved work of the grove.' The 'grove' (ashêrah) was an artificial construction, either of wood or metal, or of the two combined, carved or graven with tools. This grove itself (see 3)—not an image of it, as the English reader of the A.V. might suppose—Manasseh placed in the very Temple itself."—Sp. Com.

9.—Manasseh seduced them.—Like king, like people. "Altars for the worship of the host of heaven were erected on almost every roof (Jer. xix. 13; Zeph. i. 5); offerings of cakes were made in the very streets to Astarte (Jer. vii. 18); the sacrifice of children by their parents in the Valley of Hinnom became a frequent practice (Jer. vii. 31, xxxii. 35; Ezek. xxiii. 37); it was as common to swear by Moloch as by Jehovah (Zeph. i. 5). The corruption of morals kept pace with the degradation of religion."

16.—Manasseh shed innocent blood very much.—The godly, especially prophets, were persecuted unto death. Tradition says that Isaiah, when ninety years old, was sawn asunder at this time. It was a perfect reign of terror. If Christian men served Christ as Manasseh served devils, the world would soon be converted.

WEDNESDAY, SEPT. 15.—2 KINGS XXII.

Josiah.—"Josiah, and Cyrus of Persia, are the only personages in Scripture predicted by name long before their birth."—Kitto. See 1 Kings xiii. 2; Isa. xlv. 1. Shaphan (3) "is mentioned frequently by Jeremiah. He was the father of Ahikam, Jeremiah's friend and protector at the court of Jehoiakim (Jer. xxvi. 24), and the grand father of Gedaliah, who was made Governor of Judea by the Babylonians, after the destruction of Jerusalem." —Sp. Com. (2 Kings xxv. 22.) Hilkiah (4).—"Father (or grandfather) of Seraiah, high priest at the time of the Captivity, and ancestor of Ezra the Scribe." —Idem. Huldah the prophetess (14).—The other prophetesses mentioned in Scripture are Miriam (Exod. xv. 20; Num. xii. 2), Deborah (Judges iv. 4), Isaiah's wife (Isa. viii. 3), Anna (Luke ii. 36), and Philip's four daughters (Acts xxi. 9). There is reason to believe that the prophesying of women in Apostolic times was not uncommon.

In this and the following chapter, we have a fine illustration of the power of the written Word of God. We might have thought that no man could have been more earnest than Josiah had been before the roll was found and read. His general purpose to serve God, and to reform his kingdom, was full and steadfast. Yet it is very evident that a particular acquaintance with the law wrought a great change. It awoke deep concern, sent him to inquire of God, and procured him a most cheering promise, which would strengthen him greatly for further effort. Moreover, working in the light of the law, his work would be so much more intelligent, thorough, and authoritative, while his zeal would be greatly increased. We are often tempted to rest in a sincere but general intention to do the will of God, and are fairly well satisfied with our life as a whole. But as soon as we give ourselves to a steady and systematic study of the Word of God, all is changed. Misty generalities give place to the definite particulars of daily righteousness, while first principles are clearly seen in their reality and greatness. Self-satisfaction yields to self-condemnation and humility; and zeal, fresh strong, and well directed, commands all the powers.

THURSDAY, SEPT. 16.—2 KINGS XXIII.

2.—The prophets.—"Zephaniah, Urijah, and perhaps Jeremiah."—Keil. There were probably many others besides. Topheth (10) "was a spot in the valley of Hinnom, probably near its junction with the Kidron vale, where was a grove, watered from the Siloam pool, once, perhaps, a portion of the Royal Gardens. Manasseh and Amon had given it over to the Moloch priests for their worship. High places had been raised (Jer. vii. 31), and sacrificial furnaces had been prepared and lighted. Here, probably, it was that Manasseh offered his own son (2 Kings xxi. 6), and here ever since the Moloch worship had maintained its ground and flourished. See Jer. vii. 31, xix. 5, 6, xxxii. 35."—Sp. Com. The valley of the children of Hinnom (10) was "the valley west and south of Jerusalem, which guards the city on these two sides like a deep moat. From the horrors of its sacrificial fires, from its present pollution by Josiah, and, perhaps, from its being in later times the place where all the filth and offal of the town was thrown, the 'vale of Hinnom,' Ge-Hinnom, came to be regarded as the most abominable of all places, and so as a type of abomination. In this sense the term was applied by the Rabbins to the place of final punishment, and, corrupted into Ge-henna, or rather Geënna, passed into the language of the New Testament."—Sp. Com.

15—20.—Moreover the altar, &c.—Compare this fulfilment with the prophecy delivered 350 years before (1 Kings xiii. 2, 3), and see the sureness of God's Word. Because of all the provocations that Manasseh, &c.—"It is not to be supposed that a true repentance would not have averted God's anger, even after all the provocations of Manasseh. But the people had sunk into a condition in which a true repentance was no longer possible. Individuals like Josiah were sincere, but the mass of the nation . . . had feigned rather than felt repentance."—Sp. Com. (See Jer. iii. 10, iv. 3, 4, 14, v. 1—3, vi. 13, 14, vii. 3—7, &c.)

FRIDAY, SEPT. 17.—2 KINGS XXIV.

The Babylonians had succeeded to the heritage of the Assyrian empire two years before the death of Josiah. Young Nebuchadnezzar, who was in command for his father Nabopolassar, defeated Pharaoh-Necho at Carchemish on the Euphrates in the third (Dan. i. 1) or fourth (Jer. xxv. 1) year of Jehoiakim's reign. There was a great stir in Jerusalem in consequence. Jeremiah rejoiced in Egypt's defeat (xlvi. 1—12, and xxv.), foretelling that Judah would soon be possessed by the Babylonians, and counselling submission. Jehoiakim, however, determined to continue to stay himself on Egypt. This meant resistance to Nebuchadnezzar. Soon the Chaldeans appeared, and Egypt proved a broken reed, no help coming from her. Jehoiakim submitted to Nebuchadnezzar reluctantly, and many of the best of the people were led captive to Babylon, Daniel being among them (Dan. i. 1—4). Thus began the seventy years' captivity. Three years later he rebelled again, when Nebuchadnezzar sent Chaldean soldiers, who, uniting with Syrians, Moabites, and Ammonites (2), overcame Jehoiakim, and took him prisoner. The Scripture words are significant. They say (2) "The Lord," not Nebuchadnezzar "sent against him bands," &c. (see Ezek. xix. 8, 9). His son Jehoiachin succeeded him, working evil. Again Jerusalem is besieged, and now Deut. xxviii. 48, &c., begins to be fulfilled. The most of the Temple treasures remaining are taken; also the best part of the inhabitants, including Ezekiel and Mordecai. This was the second captivity. Josiah's youngest son, Mattaniah, afterwards called Zedekiah, the last of Judah's kings, is now set on the throne. For eleven years he reigns, doing evil. In consequence, he is left to himself, he plays false to Babylon (20), and is destroyed. This, too, was from the Lord (20).

SATURDAY, SEPT. 18.—2 KINGS XXV.

1.—In the ninth year, &c.—"As the final catastrophe approaches, the historian becomes more close and exact in his dates, marking the month and the day, on which the siege began, and on which it closed (ver. 3). Compare Jer. lii. 4, and Ezek. xxiv. 1, from which last passage we find that on the very day when the host of Nebuchadnezzar made its appearance before Jerusalem the fact was revealed to Ezekiel in Babylonia, and the fate of the city announced to him (6—14)."—Sp. Com.

Against Jerusalem.—At first the invaders spread themselves over Judah, besieging "all the cities that were left," as well as Jerusalem. Pharaoh Hophra attempted a diversion, and so raised both the siege and the hopes of the Jews. Jeremiah warned them that the Chaldeans would surely return (Jer. xxxvii. 6—10). He besought Zedekiah to submit, but all to no purpose (Jer. xxxviii. 17, &c.). The siege lasted eighteen months. "Its calamities are best understood from the Lamentations of Jeremiah, written probably almost immediately after the capture (see especially ii. 20, 21, iv. 3—20, v. 9—12). The famine (3).—That the city yielded only to famine, which brought pestilence in its train, is apparent from Jer. xxi. 7 and 9, xxxii. 24, xxxviii. 9, &c. The complexions of the men grew black with famine (Lam. iv. 8, v. 10); the rich and noble women searched the dunghills for scraps of offal (Lam. iv. 5); the children perished for want, or were even devoured by their parents (Lam. ii. 20, iv. 3, 4, and 10; Ezek. v. 10); a third part of the inhabitants died of the famine and the plague (Ezek. v. 12)."—Sp. Com.

Put out the eyes of Zedekiah.—He was to be carried to Babylon (Jer. xxxii. 5, xxxiv. 3); but he was not to see it (Ezek. xii. 13). Both prophecies, though seemingly contradictory, were thus fulfilled.

Mission and other Appeals.

Working Men's Mission (Collingwood-street, New Cut, S.E.).—The Brothers Young appeal for help in their work. Owing to depression of trade, many members are out of employment, and there are heavy bills to meet to clear off the debt on the new hall. They would be very thankful for contributions, which may also be sent to F. A. Bevan, Esq., 54, Lombard-street; or to Messrs. Morgan & Scott.

Dover Soldiers' Home.—The premises now occupied by the Home have been taken for a post-office from October next, and it is absolutely necessary to procure another building. Hitherto the rent has been paid out of the annual subscriptions, which have averaged £250 per annum, and we now appeal for funds to buy or build suitable premises. The sum required is £4000. Subscriptions may be sent to Miss Wright, Lady Superintendent, Soldiers' Home, Dover; or to Lieut.-Colonel Joseph Sladen, Ripple-court, near Deal, the Hon. Secretary of the Home.

. The Young Men's Foreign Missionary Society, in connection with the Y.M.C.A., 186, Aldersgate-street, London, assists young men by counsel, and by stated and special pecuniary grants during their period of training. The committee have lately received applications from several desirable candidates for preparation for Foreign Mission Service, whose cases they would be glad to help according to this excellent plan. They, however, being a young society, and not yet widely known, are prevented doing so at present through lack of means. The Hon. Secretary is Mr. A. L. Hall.

Ivyhatch, Sevenoaks.—In the summer of 1875 some open-air meetings were held here, and, through the goodwill of a farmer (Mr. G. Golding), meetings have been continued, originally in a barn, and subsequently in a large room, which was formed in the lower part of a house. There is a Sunday-school of about eighty children, and the Gospel meeting has an average attendance of 100. Mr. Golding died three years ago, and the property was sold. The new owner was averse to the meetings, and Mr. Gillingham (who has carried on the work) has to leave at Michaelmas. About £150 is needed to enable him to erect and furnish an iron room in the garden of a house within a mile of the present meeting-place. Contributions may be sent to Mr. G. Gillingham, Sevenoaks.

Notices.

Self-denial.—You will find the information you ask for in The War Cry, published at 101, Queen Victoria-street, E.C.

"MOON'S" SOCIETY FOR EMBOSSING THE SCRIPTURES AND OTHER BOOKS FOR THE BLIND.

DR. MOON'S simplified type, suitable for all ages and capacities of the Blind, is of universal application. It has been adapted by him to 251 languages and dialects. More than 160,000 volumes of the Word of God, and other books, have been supplied to the Blind of numerous countries.

Subscriptions and donations are urgently needed to carry on this daily increasing work, and will be gratefully received by Dr. W. MOON, 104, Queen's-road, Brighton (Acting Trustee); also by the Editors of THE CHRISTIAN.

THAMES CHURCH MISSION.

INSTITUTED 1844.

President—The RIGHT HON. the LORD MAYOR.
Chairman—CAPT. the HON. F. MAUDE, R.N.
Secretary—REV. H. BLOOMER.

Object—To win Souls for Christ.

Twenty-three Agents are constantly at work in the Port of London. The results of their previous efforts, made in simple faith, show that they have been greatly blessed by God.

FUNDS ARE URGENTLY NEEDED.

Numbers of THE CHRISTIAN, Magazines, Tracts, &c., are most necessary, and will greatly assist the Chaplains and Missionaries.

The Secretary will be pleased to give an account of the Work either at School Room, Lecture Hall, or Drawing Room Meetings.

THE CRY OF THE CHILDREN.

President—Right Hon. EARL OF ABERDEEN.

Over FIFTY THOUSAND of our poorest City Children regularly attend the 180 RAGGED SCHOOL MISSIONS affiliated with the

RAGGED SCHOOL UNION.

THE operations include Sunday and Bible Schools, Day and Infant Free Schools, Week-night Schools for Rough Lads and Girls, Industrial Classes, Gospel Mission Services, Mothers' Meetings, Ragged Churches, Bands of Hope, Temperance Meetings, and Crèches. Country Houses provided for the weakly or convalescent. Emigration is also promoted, and numerous other agencies for the benefit of the poor children and their parents. Additional funds are urgently needed, and will be thankfully acknowledged by

JOHN KIRK, Secretary.

Offices—Exeter Hall, Strand, W.C.

MORELLA

AT LAST! Advocates of Temperance have here what has been so long desired, a

Strictly Non-Alcoholic Unfermented Wine,

BOTH STILL AND SPARKLING,

from the pure juice of the famous Kentish Morella Cherry, preserved by a newly-discovered process without alcohol. Its delicious flavour charms the palate, whilst by its wholesome, fruity character and body it refreshes and sustains as no other Temperance drink can do.

Supplied direct, and sold by Grocers and others; the Still, in claret bottles, at 1s. 3d. per bottle. The Sparkling, in champagne bottles, at 1s. 5d. Half bottles, 10d. Urge your Grocer to keep it.

Small sample of the Still by post 7d. in stamps, and half bottle of the Sparkling for 1s. 6d. See analysis.

AUTHOR OF "CHRISTIAN SUNSETS," "EARLY CHRISTIAN WITNESSES," ETC., ETC.

Tinted Covers, 1s.; Cloth Limp, 1s. 6d.

"The book contains much profitable reading for the matured Christian, whilst it is calculated to excite amongst all classes of Christians a deeper interest in the typology of the Old Testament."
Church of England Sunday School Magazine.

"There is much wholesome spiritual food in this book; and no Christian can read it without being greatly refreshed in soul."—Fountain.

"The work is practical and useful."—Methodist.

The Original Edition may still be had. Cloth, Bevelled Boards, Gilt Edges, 2s. 6d.

London: MORGAN & SCOTT, 12, Paternoster-buildings, E.C.; and may be ordered of any Bookseller.

CHRISTIAN COMMUNITY

INSTITUTED 1772.

President: G. WILLIAMS, ESQ.
Vice-Presidents: A. PEASE, ESQ., M.P.; S. D. WADDY, ESQ., M.P., Q.C.; and J. H. GLADSTONE, ESQ., Ph.D., F.R.S., &c.
Treasurer: F. A. BEVAN, ESQ.
Honorary Secretary: THE REV. W. TYLER.

This, the oldest of all the Evangelistic Societies in London, is largely engaged in taking the Gospel to two classes, viz., those who cannot, and those who will not, attend ordinary places of worship. The former are met with in workhouses, infirmaries, and suchlike places; the latter in the open air, common lodging-houses, &c., besides in rooms and mission halls, where every sort of religious, social, and benevolent efforts are in daily operation, by 150 volunteer workers and a large contingent of lady helpers, who visit 12 workhouses and infirmaries, with 12,000 or more inmates.

During the winter, an earnest and most successful effort has been made to reach the "Outcast" from whom the "Bitter Cry" has come. Thousands of them have been sheltered all night, and fed in the Mission Hall, Thrawl-street, Spitalfields. Many have been secured work, and assisted in other ways. To sustain this and the general work, Funds are urgently needed.

Subscriptions and Donations will be most gratefully received by the Treasurer, F. A. Bevan, Esq., at the Bank; by the Secretary, Mr. James Atkinson, 10, Enfield-road South, Kingsland, N.; by the Bankers, Messrs. Barclay, Bevan & Co., 54, Lombard-street, London, E.C.; or the Editors of THE CHRISTIAN.

JAMES ATKINSON, Secretary.

Three New Musical Leaflets.

HEAVENLY UNION.

Come, Saints and sinners, hear me tell
The wonders of Immanuel,
Who saved me from a burning hell,
And brought my soul with Him to dwell,
And gave me heavenly union.

Printed on tinted paper, 1s. 4d. per 100; 3d. per dozen.

GO YE INTO ALL THE WORLD.

A MISSIONARY HYMN.

This Hymn is dedicated to MESSRS. STANLEY SMITH, STUDD, BEAUCHAMP, and companions of the CHINA INLAND MISSION party of 1885. Words and Music by JAMES MCGRANAHAN.

Far, far away in heathen darkness dwelling,
Millions of souls for ever may be lost,
Who, who will go, Salvation's story telling—
Looking to Jesus, counting not the cost.

Printed on tinted paper, 1s. 4d. per 100; 3d. per dozen.

CONFESSING CHRIST. WORDS BY WILLIAM LUFF.

I should like to be a soldier; but the flag I cannot bear:
I should like to win the battle; but the coat I cannot wear.
I should like to follow Jesus; but I think it would be best
I should wear my own black broad-cloth, and my own plain private vest.

AND

YE ARE CHRIST'S.

"Ye are Christ's!" oh, yes; I know it! for He bought me with his blood,
And I never can forget it, for He is my Saviour God.
In his hands I see the nailprints, in his face eternal love:
How I long to be just like Him in the Father's house above.

The above two pieces are printed on one 4-page leaflet, on tinted paper, 2s. 6d. per 100.

London: MORGAN & SCOTT, 12, Paternoster-buildings, E.C.
And may be ordered of any Bookseller or Musicseller.

Tinted covers, 1s.; Cloth limp, 1s. 6d.; Cloth boards, 2s. 6d.

May be had either in OLD NOTATION or SOL-FA.

THE CHRISTIAN CHOIR.

A Quarto Volume of Music and Words.

By IRA D. SANKEY and JAMES McGRANAHAN.

"It is as fine a collection of Sacred Airs as can anywhere be found. All the Hymns and the Tunes are beautiful, impressive, gracious; and the rendering of them, and the hearing them sung in private or public alike, have led many to change their whole course of life."—Oldham Chronicle.

"Of this Sacred Song Book it is scarcely needful for us to say a word. Thousands have listened, and thousands have sung these Pieces, and will retain their good impressions when all 'the mists have rolled away.'"
Baptist Messenger.

⁂ BOOK OF WORDS, price One Penny. Supplied to Missions at 7s. per 100 post free.

LONDON: MORGAN & SCOTT, 12, PATERNOSTER BUILDINGS, E.C.;
And may be ordered of any Bookseller.

May be had either in OLD NOTATION or SOL-FA.

THE GOSPEL MALE CHORUS BOOK.

Collection of New Part Songs, Choruses, and Anthems.

Written and arranged expressly for Male Voices.

BY JAMES McGRANAHAN.

"We can testify from personal hearing that these choruses are well harmonised, and excellently adapted for the rich effect of men's concerted voices."—Literary World.

"Organise a quartet, a double quartet, or better still, a chorus of male voices; and prove the power for good in the harmony of male voices, when consecrated to the glory and service of our divine Master."

LONDON: MORGAN & SCOTT, 12, PATERNOSTER BUILDINGS, E.C.;
And may be ordered of any Bookseller.

DRUMMOND'S TRACT DEPOT, Stirling, N.B.
London: S. W. PARTRIDGE & Co.

Messrs. MORGAN & SCOTT'S well-known Envelope Series of neatly printed small Books on important Subjects, by eminent Authors.

A REAL CHRIST.

An Address by C. H. SPURGEON.

Price One Penny; 1s. per dozen, post free.

> "The Cross was real. Oh, never let any mist hang before that! whatever else my soul does not see, let me ever see the Crucified. Whatever else becomes a phantasy, a myth, an imagination, may that living, and dying, and crucified Saviour be actual and real to my heart! For there is only comfort to me in proportion as that is real."
> Extract.

AMUSEMENTS

From the Christian Point of View.

By JAMES CULROSS, A.M., D.D.

Price One Penny; 1s. per dozen, post free.

> "Carry your religion into your recreations. Let them be penetrated by a Christian spirit, unselfishness, consideration for others, heart purity, and the recognition of the Divine Presence and oversight. 'Whatsoever ye do, do all to the glory of God.'"
> Extract.

REJOICE IN THY YOUTH.

By JAMES CULROSS, A.M., D.D.

Price One Penny; 1s. per dozen, post free.

> "The young man who acknowledges God as the ruler of his life will not rejoice the less, but the more. Youth will be a brighter time to him. It will be a happier time to look back upon, with no store of remorseful feeling and bitter memories."
> Extract.

SIN SELF-DETECTIVE.

By Rev. H. SINCLAIR PATERSON, M.D.

Price One Penny; 1s. per dozen, post free.

> "Sin does find a man out. There is no detective so keen-witted, so close and constant in his dogged search, as sin itself. It never loses sight of its prey, never fails to keep its grip of conscience, and heart, and mind, at last dragging the offender before the judgment-throne of God, when all the deeds done in the body are fully punished."

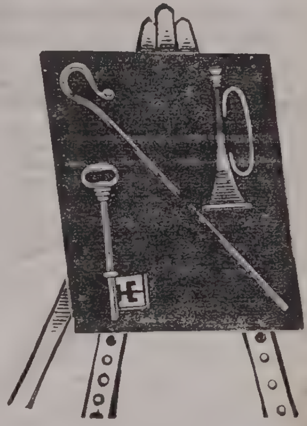
IMPORTANT NEW WORK FOR TEACHERS OF THE YOUNG.

220 Pages, Crown 8vo. Tinted covers, 2s.; Cloth boards, 2s. 6d.

CHILDREN'S MEETINGS

AND HOW TO CONDUCT THEM.

BY LUCY J. RIDER AND NELLIE M. CARMAN.



CONTAINS

Sixty Outline Lessons for the Class,
Forty-three Diagrams for the Blackboard,
Twenty-five attractive Children's Hymns.

"We have no hesitation in advising all who are engaged in the good work of teaching children and young people in Gospel principles, and the way of salvation, to possess themselves of a copy of this work. It will be found to be a very valuable and suggestive book, and helpful to the teacher of the Infant—as well as to the teacher of the Bible-class."—Baptist Messenger.

"Many really excellent people fail as teachers; and their failure is not attributable to ignorance, but to some defect in their method of teaching. In this book such persons will find invaluable hints on the arrangement and communication of the truths by which we seek to save our children. We commend it to all who have to address young people, and especially to Sunday-school teachers."—Primitive Methodist.

"A thoroughly practical book, by teachers who have learned by experience the best methods. Teachers will find it most helpful, especially in blackboard word-work. The Addresses are teachings, which very many Children's Addresses are not."—The Teacher at Work.

"We do not remember meeting with any better book than this for help in Children's Meetings. It is first-rate. There are objects to be drawn on the black-board; but there are also capital lessons to go with them. Black-boards get very, very black; and the children are very bored, when it is all chalk and no sound sense. Many of these Addresses would make sermons of the first water—and what more can we say of Addresses?"

BIRDS OF THE BIBLE.

Chats with the Children about Bible Birds. By James Bowker, F.R.G.S.I.

With Coloured Frontispiece and 29 other Illustrations.

Beautifully Printed on Toned Paper in Red and Black.

"A very pretty little volume, beautifully illustrated, handsomely printed, and very tastefully bound. It contains much information and much useful teaching about Bible birds. It is just the book for a present to our young friends, to whom it will prove very attractive."—Living Waters.

"Mr. Bowker knows much about the birds; and he makes his feathered favourites teach many a sweet lesson. By all means let the children have this prettily written and prettily illustrated book."—British Messenger.

"A beautiful little volume, printed in red and black, with numerous engravings. Will be found most interesting and instructive to the young folks who are fortunate enough to obtain a copy. One friend to whom we showed the book at once ordered three dozen copies for Sunday-school rewards. We hope that many others will follow his example."
Christian Treasury.

"We delight in books of this character. Scripture and Nature are set side by side; and the young are made to see the one illustrated by the other. Fine type makes these pages pleasant to the eye of the old, and simple language adapts it to the taste of the young."—Sword and Trowel.

"Chats with the children about birds mentioned in the Bible, in which are introduced anecdotes illustrating their instincts and habits, and explaining and applying the references to them in Scripture: contains many pictures and a pretty coloured frontispiece. A beautiful little book, and very handsomely got up."—Christian Age.

"In 'Birds of the Bible' we have pleasant chats about some of the birds referred to in Holy Writ, with good illustrations and a coloured frontispiece. The volume is nicely got up."—Christian World.

SIXPENCE (Post Free), or Large Edition (cloth), 1s. 3d. from the Author, Coombe Lodge, Peckham, S.E., and Elliot Stock, 62, Paternoster-row, E.C.

The Eighteenth Series of Weekly Cases is now publishing, from May to August.

NOTICE TO THE READERS OF "THE CHRISTIAN," WHO MAY BE PERSONALLY OR RELATIVELY

INTERESTED IN THIS MATTER.

Mr. Congreve will give ONE RECENT CASE, NOT PUBLISHED in this journal BEFORE, EVERY WEEK.

CASE FOR THIS WEEK.

ADVANCED PHTHISIS.—CASE of Mrs. WINGHAM, SOUTHAMPTON.

This case was recommended to me by MRS. SILVER, the wife of the clergyman of the parish, who had "known (she says) the good effects of the use of the medicine in other cases."

MRS. G. WINGHAM is a gardener's wife at Highfield, Southampton. When the case was brought to my notice two years since she had been suffering from asthma for sixteen years, with frequent attacks of acute bronchitis. The strength was at this time gradually declining. She had lost flesh all over the body. There was now decided lung disease, and cavities were reported, the last doctor pronouncing it Consumption, and one lung much diseased.

The cough was incessant, the expectoration profuse, being yellow or green, and streaked with blood; pain through the chest, breathing very hard, night perspirations and fever, palpitations, appetite gone.

It will be seen by this that the case had assumed a most serious aspect. Humanly speaking, the only apparent hope was in my treatment. I immediately forwarded advice and medicine, followed by correspondence from time to time, in the usual way.

I heard from Mrs. S. in a month or two that there was a marked change for good, and the patient in a few months recovered.

I have recently also had a letter, in which she says:—"Your medicine had a most signal and lasting effect on Mrs. Wingham, whom you first supplied with medicine two years ago. Of course it cannot reproduce lost lungs, but from having been given up by the doctors, she is fairly well, and able to get through her work."

NOTE. — Days of Consultation. — TUESDAY, THURSDAY, and SATURDAY Mornings ONLY, at Coombe Lodge, Peckham. Patients from any long distance should choose either of the two former days. Everyone is expected to have seen the book first.

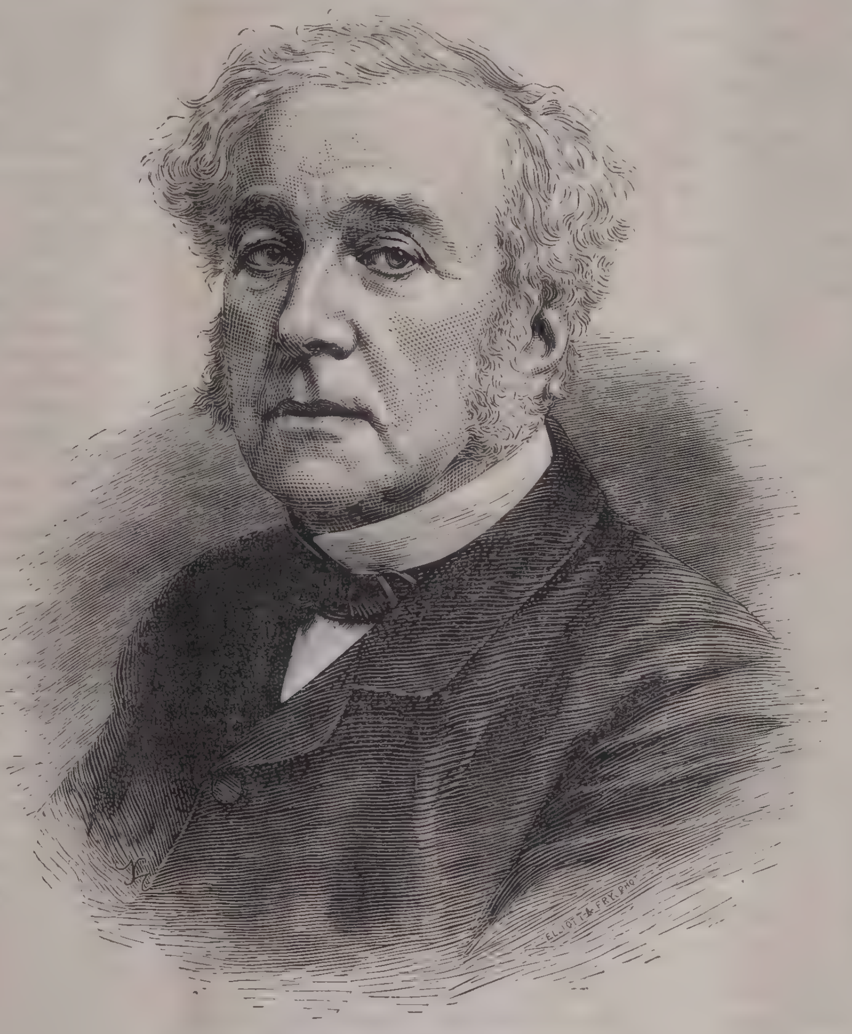
THE LATE MR. SAMUEL MORLEY.

ON Friday last, without any pomp or elaborate ceremonial, but amid the signs of sincere and widespread mourning, the mortal remains of SAMUEL MORLEY were laid in their last earthly resting-place at Abney Park Cemetery. While there are many elements of rejoicing in our thoughts of our departed friend, it makes us sad and sore at heart to know that his kindly thoughtful face, as it is presented to our readers in the accompanying portrait, we shall behold no more. The space at our disposal does not admit of our giving any circumstantial review of his life, such as its unique and many-sided character would demand. We feel, therefore, that we cannot better honour his memory than by reproducing the wise and sympathetic words spoken in Abney Park Chapel on Friday by Rev. Joshua C. Harrison, of Camden Town; and those uttered at the grave by Canon Fleming.

MR. HARRISON'S ADDRESS.

Let us, first of all, thank God, the Fountain of all good, for the life and work and tranquil death of our beloved and revered friend Samuel Morley. Good and great men are emphatically the gift of God. They beautify and bless his world, and help us to understand what it might be; what He intends that some day it shall be. They do much to fulfil his grand purpose concerning it. They lead the upward march, and encourage all to follow them. Among such men none has stood higher than our departed friend. If the noblest moral qualities place a man in the foremost rank, he not only belonged to, but was surely one of the chiefs in that rank—no one could claim precedence of him. His large and generous heart, filled with the spirit of his Divine Lord, constrained him to live to do good, so that he might have said: "When the ear heard me, then it blessed me: and when the eye saw me, it gave witness to me. Because I delivered the poor that cried, and the fatherless, and him that had none to help him. The blessing of him that was ready to perish came upon me: and I caused the widow's heart to sing for joy." He never, indeed, would have uttered such words with his own lips. Much rather would he have said: "What have I that I have not received? Not I, but the grace of God that was in me." But we feel it our duty to recognise his worth, and to rejoice in him as one of God's richest and rarest gifts to this world. And now that his course is ended, what can we do but give praise to Him who raised up and sent forth his servant to do so great a work in the world?



ELLIOTT & FRY PHO.

(From Photograph by Messrs. Elliott & Fry.)

And yet there is a deep undertone of sorrow beneath our joy. Never have I known so widespread and undissembled a grief. Men of all classes and ranks are bewailing his loss as if he had been a personal friend. Men in political life of both parties, men in commercial life, however slight their intercourse with him, religious men with their various shades of difference, those who had received his help, and those who only watched his munificence — all join in the general chorus of lamentation, and exclaim: "There is a prince and a great man fallen this day in Israel!"

To those who knew him well and intimately, and mourn him so profoundly because they loved him so truly, there was an inexpressible charm in his manner, arising from the sweetness and graciousness of his disposition. It is now fifty-five years since I first met him, and then was drawn into the closest relations with him in the transactions of daily life. He was at that time a very young man, just passed twenty, but he exercised a great fascination on all around him. I was struck then with the childlike simplicity and guilelessness of his character, his transparency, his warm kindly bearing towards all with whom he had to do, and his singular purity of thought and life. True, there was now and then a passing gust of impatience with slowness and incapacity, a flash of displeasure with indolence or carelessness, a strong indignation at any suspected want of truth or principle. But if he fancied he had caused the least needless pain, he was sure, in the most delicate and healing way, to show his regret. And his simplicity and singleness of mind were not in the least allied with weakness. He was quick and keen-sighted in business; he had deep convictions, and a decided will. He saw the bearings of any practical question at a glance. He held for many years the threads of his vast business in his hand, and nothing escaped him. As he entered more fully on public life he was necessarily more dependent on others, but with some modifications what I have said was true to the end. He was a strong man, and when strength and beauty are blended in character they are sure to awaken hearty love. Because he was loved, I repeat, he is so greatly mourned. In the inner circle, which must be sacred from any idle curiosity, he was more than loved; such reverence and yet such familiar confidence were mingled with the love. Yes, those who knew him best loved him most, and now mourn him most deeply.

But we should make a grievous mistake if we ascribed all that he was to natural disposition or careful self-culture. There was something deeper, and more to be relied on, to which he was indebted for his higher qualities. He was a pre-eminently Christian man, and all that he did was coloured and ennobled by Christian faith. He was brought up in a godly home by parents whom he held in profound veneration. And well he might. They were amongst the noble of the earth. His father in the city was a prince among merchants for character, for wisdom, and for insight. The son passed his early days in an atmosphere of Christian purity and love, and from childhood showed that these advantages had not been lost upon him.

About the time that I first knew him he came under the influence of two remarkable men, Rev. James Parsons, of York, and Rev. Thomas Binney, of the Weigh House. The former, by his vivid delineations of the Gospel, and clear exposition of its central truths, by his fidelity to the Cross, and his passionate appeals to all men at once to yield themselves to Christ, as well as by the glowing visions he opened of future blessedness, touched him profoundly. As he listened he felt that it was the highest wisdom to decide at once to trust and serve the Lord. He felt that if ever he was to enter upon the high joys of heaven he must live a life of purity now and here which would correspond with the life he hoped to live then and there. So he gave his heart to God, and sought daily the sanctifying influence of his Spirit. He strove to act on the inspired assurance, "Every man that hath this hope in him purifieth himself, even as He is pure." The other, Mr. Binney, while often touching on these same subjects with great intellectual power, maintaining their truth against all gainsayers, had special delight in showing how Christianity was intended to elevate our practical daily life here; to redeem it from selfishness and littleness. This remarkable preacher was never weary of insisting on the fact that the present offers a sphere for the attainment and exhibition of the loftiest character and the accomplishment of the most useful work. Both these orders of preaching laid a firm hold on the young Samuel Morley, and did much to mould his subsequent life. And thus his life became a life of calm, pure devotion, and intense realisation of the spiritual world, and at the same time a life of intense activity, of noble consecration to every good work.

He entered into Church fellowship with the Nonconformists. He was a firm Congregationalist, and, because firm, therefore temperate. His main work was in connection with Congregational churches, which he personally visited and encouraged, as well as assisted with munificent liberality. As years advanced his spirit became more and more catholic, and drew him lovingly to all good men in the evangelical communities. Indeed, through his whole life the one power which gave unity to his character was simply CHRIST—admiration of Christ, faith in Christ, union with Christ. "Lovest thou Me? Lord, Thou knowest all things, Thou knowest that I love Thee." That was the secret of all he was, and all he did. His heart became filled more and more with love to Christ, and this raised his natural sympathy into the loftiest Christian sympathy. This intense Christian sympathy appeared to be his chief characteristic to those who knew him best. Sometimes in his familiar address he spoke of the people as the masses, but he never could think of them only in the mass. He tried to look at them individually, and to enter warmly into the special needs of each. To him the term "people" were no mere abstraction; it represented a number of individuals, each claiming his sympathy. This enabled him to understand fully the different classes of sinners and sufferers. So he joined with others in great works of philanthropy. Children needed to be lifted out of the gutter; he joined hands with the promoters of ragged-shools and reformatories. The youth of the nation needed education—his spiritual instincts taught him, religious education—and he threw himself with characteristic ardour into the plans of those who sought this great end. The fallen needed to be raised out of their sin and shame; social purity needed to be protected, and he did not shrink from taking his part with those who laboured in this field. In a word, his heart yearned over the young and helpless who were exposed to temptation, over the drunkard in his pitiable degradation, over those who were living in spiritual ignorance, without God, without hope in the world, and all that his purse and his personal influence could do to save them he did with a whole heart. He felt that he was not his own—that nothing which he had was his own. He held everything in trust; he was a steward, and must be faithful. As his gains increased his givings must increase; nay, he would toil on in his business when he might have left it, simply that he might have larger means to carry out the will of his Master. It was to him a blessed thought that he was a steward—that he had the high honour of being a steward of Christ. It is only as we recognise that he did everything through the power and grace of Christ that we can account for the fact that through a long public life he remained uncorrupted. He was the same man at the end that he was at the beginning. Though exposed to all kinds of flattery he retained the simplicity and frankness of his youth. Though living in the heart of the world he never became worldly. No one ever connected the epithet "worldly" with his name. Though possessed of the means of procuring every luxury, he lived quite plainly. Though he saw only too often the very worst side of human nature, he would not, and did not, despair of mankind, but worked most hopefully for their elevation and their salvation. Though often deceived, often treated with ingratitude—for his judgment was not infallible—he never shut up his bowels of compassion; he pitied those who took advantage of his kindness with a boundless pity. Nothing could quench his sympathy. Every noble quality that adorned his youth shone with added grace in his old age. Had his been a commonplace life this might not have been wonderful, but to maintain a level so high all through, and never to come down—we can only account for it by saying, "Here is the finger of God."

Do I feel any apology needful for thus speaking of our departed friend? I do not. My wish has been to glorify God in him. And besides, we need truth presented in a life if we are to love it. I hold up then this imperfect sketch of Samuel Morley, and say to men who have placed before themselves no lofty ideal, Would it not be to your honour to aim at such a life? Your circumstances are very much like his; why should not your character be like his, your doings like his? You have sometimes said that Christianity does little for a man; did it do little for Samuel Morley? You have sometimes questioned whether there is any Divine reality in the Christian faith. How dare you say so, when it was this faith which made Samuel Morley what he was? You have sometimes doubted whether there is any adequate power in the life of Christ; try it, and see whether it will not save you from evil, as it saved Samuel Morley—whether it will not raise you to the same height as that to which it raised him? "He being dead, yet speaketh." Can you refuse to listen to the voice which speaks to you from the coffin and the grave?

As was his life, such was his death. When for a few minutes I was permitted to see him in his extreme weakness, he welcomed me with more than his old warmth and tenderness. When, led on by his remarks, I said, "What a blessing that our Lord Jesus is absolutely true and faithful," he replied, with intense animation, "Yes; and respecting Him there is no doubt—not the shadow of a doubt." And now he beholds Him whom having not seen he loved, and under the inspiration of whose love he did all that he was honoured to do. He has fought the good fight; he has finished his career; he has kept the faith; he has received the crown of righteousness which the Lord, the righteous Judge, gives to all those who wait for his appearing! O what would all his wealth be to him now without that precious faith by which, in Christ, he had laid hold of eternal life! And so we end, as we began, with praise. We are here to celebrate a victory, a triumph, not a defeat. We rejoice that, though we are about to commit the mortal remains of our brother to the grave, he is himself with the spirits of just men made perfect. Absent from the body, he is present with the Lord. He has begun the new song—the song of joy unspeakable. "Unto Him that loved us and washed us from our sins in his own blood, and hath made us kings and priests unto God and his Father: to Him be glory and dominion for ever and ever."

For Thy dear saint, O Lord,
Who strove in Thee to live,
Who followed Thee, obeyed, adored,
Our grateful hymn receive.

For Thy dear saint, O Lord,
Who strove in Thee to die,
And found in Thee a full reward,
Accept our thankful cry.

And we seem to hear a voice from heaven blend with the strain: "Blessed are the dead which die in the Lord from henceforth: Yea, saith the Spirit, that they may rest from their labours; and their works do follow them."

ADDRESS BY CANON FLEMING.

With the solemn words we have just heard ringing in our ears, we now stand at the open grave of our dear friend to utter some of the last words of earth over him. Good men are the most precious gifts of heaven. We all claim a part in Samuel Morley, for outside of his own denomination he has left the marks of his munificent philanthropy and Christian charity. He loved truth better than any sect, and Christ better than any Church, and he was loved and honoured by thousands from whom he differed conscientously, but always kindly. Happy in the circumstances of his life, happy in his family, happy in his abundant means of doing good, he was above all happy in that love of God which was the motive power of all his actions; for religion was both the rudder and anchor of his soul. His sagacious judgment never forsook him. He saw at a glance what would tend to promote the moral and religious welfare of his fellow men, and he did it, no matter what it cost him; for he felt that he was God's steward, and he found that liberal outlay became the condition of large returns. An eminent writer has said, "If we wish to give sight to the blind, we must do as Christ did, lay our hands upon them." This was the practical way in which he carried out his life mission. Working for God and man was the "one thing" he did.

Such a life reminds us where the strength of a nation lies—in its Christianity. It is only as we are Christians in our places, Christians in our mercantile transactions, Christians in our public life, Christians in our domestic relations, that we can accomplish as a nation the great purpose of God. Samuel Morley, from his grave, calls the young men of England to a noble Christian life by showing us in himself that "the Christian is the highest type of manhood." The best hope and promise for our country is found in the growth of a thoughtful, large-hearted, Christian manliness in all ranks of life. And he speaks to older men among us, telling us how a man may lead a most active life, socially and politically, and yet be a Christian at all times, in all places, and in all cases. Active, busy men connot always be engaged in religious acts. This would be to become hermits in order to become Christians; this would be to dissolve the bonds that bind society together. God does not require this. But our brother taught us that it is possible, before we enter on a work which, to be thoroughly done, will absorb all our energies, to consecrate our work to God, and feel that He will accept it all as done unto Him. There is a short but very beautiful prayer of Dr. Arnold, whom our late friend so admired—one of his sons bears the honoured name of Arnold. Dr. Arnold wrote it for his own use, before he went into the school of Rugby, every day:—"O Lord, I have a busy world around me: eye, ear, and thought will be needed for all my work to be done in that busy world. Now, ere I enter upon it, I would commit eye, ear, and thought to Thee! Do Thou bless them, and keep their work Thine: that as, through thy natural laws, my heart beats and my blood lows without any thought of mine for them, so my spiritual life may hold on its course at those times when my mind cannot consciously turn to Thee to commit each particular thought to thy service. Hear my prayer, for my dear Redeemer's sake. Amen." In the spirit of that prayer our brother lived and worked, and made his life a consecrated and therefore a successful ife.

We think of him as our loved and loving riend, and our hearts respond to those words:—

Friend after friend departs,
  Who has not lost a friend?
There is no union here of hearts
  That knows not here an end.
Were this frail world our only rest,
Living or dying none were blest.

Miserable, indeed, would be our condition if it were not for the Gospel of our Lord Jesus Christ. But that Gospel comforts us concerning our friends and ourselves. It tells us that if earth grows poorer, heaven grows richer. It tells us we shall meet again to find our separations here were but temporary; our re-unions shall be eternal before the throne of God. The lesson which above all things our friend would have wished us to learn from his death is the urgent need of preparation for our own. We must die—we may die soon. Who may be the next? The only safety is in Christ. Does not every one of us here desire "Let me die the death of the righteous, and let my last end be like his." Then we must live the Christian life. Our friend died as he lived, lived as he died. Old William Jay said, "Tell me how a man has lived, and I tell you how he died." I conclude in the words of the prayer of an old Divine:—"Eternal Jesus, incline us all to hear thy voice, to obey thy call, and to seek thy Holy Spirit; that so, when the net shall be brought to the eternal shore, and angels shall make the separation of the good from the bad, we may not be castaways, but be gathered into the communion of thy saints and the glories of thy everlasting kingdom."

THE FUNERAL.

Abney Park Chapel was crowded on Friday afternoon with ladies and gentlemen representing the many and varied departments of political, commercial, social, philanthropic, and religious activity with which Mr. Morley was closely associated during his long and busy life. In its full and excellent account of the funeral, The Daily News says:—"In harmony with the tenor of his life, and in consonance with his wishes, the burial of Mr. Samuel Morley was conducted in a simple and old-fashioned manner. A plain funeral car, drawn by four horses, and followed by five mourning coaches conveying members of the family, constituted, so far as those nearest to the lamented gentleman were concerned, the funeral cortège. But it was obviously impossible to leave out of consideration the many Societies who benefitted by, and were grateful for, Mr. Morley's counsel and benevolence; and it would have been equally out of place to ignore the manifestations of respect tendered by municipal, commercial, political, religious, and other representative bodies. Hence it was that a funeral, which in itself would have suggested the tranquil passage from a country home to a village churchyard, became, as it moved through London, the head of an imposing procession. The weather was in keeping with the mournful nature of the occasion. A steady and continuous downpour of rain prevailed from the time the funeral left Grosvenor-street to the conclusion of the service at the tomb in Abney Park Cemetery. A household service of prayer was held before the body encased in a lead coffin and outer shell of polished oak was removed. Not only was the coffin itself covered with beautiful wreaths, but the hall of the residence was made bright and light with those floral symbols of affection and esteem. Fully sixty had been received, and of these no one could be more touching in its simple significance than that from the Flower Girls' Mission, made by the girls themselves who had been rescued from the streets. Another came from Indian orphans, 'In sweet memory, with grateful blessing and tears, for our kind and noble Lat. Sahib, from his three little Oriental friends.' Three wreaths were sent by the employés in Wood-street, four from the Nottingham factories, one by the household servants, and others from the Young Men's and Young Women's Christian Associations, the young women of the Morley Home, Miss Sharman's Orphans, Bristol Operatives' Liberal Association, Cambridge Institute, St. Giles's Christian Mission, the Shaftesbury Home, Working Men of the Royal Victoria Coffee Hall, &c."

The spirit of Christian catholicity which so happily marked Mr. Morley's character was well maintained in connection with the funeral. Ministers of various denominations might be seen in the throng that filled the area of the chapel; while of those who conducted the public services two were Congregationalist and two were Episcopal. Rev. Nevile Sherbrooke, of Portman Chapel, read appropriate Scriptures, and engaged in fervent prayer in the chapel, and Rev. Dr. Stoughton offered prayer at the grave.

PULPIT NOTICES.

Numerous references to the deceased were made in London and other pulpits last Lord's Day. At Union Chapel, Islington, Dr. Allon said:—"Mr. Morley was a man of clear, strong common sense, of well-balanced faculties, a capable man of business, whereby he largely made the wealth that he so nobly used. Firm, clear-headed, prompt and decisive, he knew what to do, and he did it; sincere, upright, pure-hearted, he could neither tell nor act a lie. He sensibly raised the moral tone of commercial life in the City. 'Diligent in business, fervent in spirit, serving the Lord,' he was simple-hearted, altogether without vulgar ambition. When social distinctions were urged upon him they had no attraction for him. 'I am,' said he to me, when a peerage was urged upon him, 'of the people, and I will live and die one of them.'"

Rev. Newman Hall, in a discourse at Christ Church, Westminster Bridge-road, said:—"Although he was specially identified with one sect, he had the widest sympathies. He was a catholic Christian, and he was ready to aid all causes which furthered the cause of God. It had been estimated that he gave away £20,000, and probably his benefactions did not fall far short of £40,000 per annum. Some might say that if he gave so much he must have had a great deal to give, but how many were there who had a great deal and who gave nothing. He gave freely. He found pleasure in giving and did not give, as some did, grudgingly and merely because others gave. It would be difficult to estimate the number of mission halls, of temperance institutions, orphan asylums, ragged schools, reformatories, and churches which he had been mainly instrumental in founding."

At Bristol, which for many years he represented in the House of Commons, memorial services were held. At the Cathedral on Sunday Canon Percival said:—"The life of such a man as Samuel Morley made them feel the difference between the conventional and the real Christian. No man who came near Samuel Morley and felt the genuineness of his faith, his tolerance, his humility, his sympathy, his earnest desire to be doing good, could for one moment doubt the source of those gifts which made up so rare a personality. How his wide tolerance shamed the petty divisions and differences, the pride and the exclusiveness that separated some of them! How the unostentatious simplicity and self-denial of his life shamed their common luxury and indulgence! How his earnestness shamed their indifference; his untiring energy, their faith; his large-hearted, unstinted liberality, the general selfishness! It could hardly fail to make their life somehow a better life, to have known anything of such a man; to have seen the purpose of his life, or felt the power of his strong sympathy; to have joined him in any great work, and to have felt his influence. The example of the memory of such a man was worth more to them than that of some heroes; because he was so like them, and yet touched with an influence that made him so different. Let them pray for that touch of the Holy Spirit in their hearts which should make life also a new life in Christ, filling it with the purposes which distinguished their friend—moulding it to his sincerity and simplicity, and inspiring it with his enthusiasm for the common good."

NO SEPARATION.

Give dust to dust, and here we leave
  The earthly seed to die,
That so this mortal may receive
  Its immortality.

Spirits to spirits purified!
  And his hath soared on high,
Hath joined the members glorified,
  The brethren in the sky.

Saviour, thy love unites us all,
  The living and the dead;
'Tis but one body mystical,
  And but one glorious Head.

Keep us in fellowship of soul
  With the dear saint that's gone,
Make us in worship, service, love,
  Like those before the throne.

And now to Him who conquered death
  United praise be given—
Amidst the parting tears of earth
  The welcome-palms of heaven.

EVANGELISATION OF THE WORLD.

BY MR. REGINALD RADCLIFFE.

The magazine, Service for the King, in drawing attention to the Missionary Conference to be held at Mildmay Conference Hall in the first week of October, uses these words:—

> The humble question put by young Carey at a Baptist meeting in Northampton in 1786—exactly a century ago—may well be regarded as the real beginning of modern missionary enterprise, as far as Great Britain is concerned; Germany having ere this sent out to India able and successful missionaries. The Missionary Conference we are about to hold at Mildmay in October may thus be termed "A Centenary Conference;" God grant that it may be fraught with consequences proportionate to those which followed that simple question of Carey, and issue in placing missionary work in its true position, as the work given by the risen Lord to his Church, which was to occupy the interval of his personal absence from the earth.

There has just been published an admirable pamphlet by Mr. Johnston, an experienced missionary of the Free Church of Scotland. It strikingly dwells on what has been accomplished during these hundred years. This pamphlet* has so deeply impressed myself that I venture to draw attention to some of the writer's facts, and the dark table by which he illustrates them.

Mr. Johnston affirms that the Protestant Church has been, and still is, taking up the subject of Foreign Missions as a mere by-work,† and not as THE work of the Church. He begins his missionary century in 1786, and he tells us that since then there have been won, by Protestant missionaries, nearly three million converts from the heathen and Mahomedan races. This at first sight might seem to be somewhat encouraging, especially as he says it is quite as much as could be expected from the small effort the Church has made during this period. But then he pulls up in blank dismay when he adds that during precisely the same period the heathen and Mahomedan population has been augmented two hundred millions by natural increase alone. This is as if an Englishman and a swarthy native had started together to walk in 1786, and now, in 1886, the Englishman had walked three miles whilst his fellow-traveller had walked two hundred miles.

But Mr. Johnston proceeds to add to our dismay by telling us that, besides this increase by births, the Mahomedans are rapidly augmenting their numbers by their own missionaries out of the heathen, in fact, he would say winning thousands of heathen against the very few Mahomedans we are winning. Furthermore, that, when once the untutored heathen has become Mahomedan, it is most difficult to win him to Christianity, though it would have been comparatively easy to do so before.

Still further he tells us that our little flock of three million converts has been won in part (say one fifth) from nations already passing away, or not destined to survive, and in other part mostly from the untaught races. His final discouragement is in these words:—

> It is full time that the Church of God looked this fact in the face, that no religion which had been formulated into a system, or is possessed of sacred books, has even been arrested in its progress by our modern missions. Hinduism, Buddhism, and Islam, not only stand their ground, they are yearly making proselytes by tens of thousands. For one convert from any of these systems, they gain thousands from the inferior races which they are absorbing into their systems.

Do I write these things to bring us to despair? Ay, most assuredly. And the sooner the better. Despair of ourselves and of every earthly thing; but confidence, bounding confidence, triumphing confidence, in our living God. Pile millions upon millions, encompass all around the trusting child of God with swarming millions of heathen and mountains of difficulties, the more will he, hanging on God alone, sing and shout the shout of victory.

What does God wait for? Surely for the Church to wait only upon Himself. These millions, the more multiplied, then shall be the more "bread for us." God is ready to do his part. We have not brought the tithes in the store-house. He requires instant and implicit obedience. Bring in the tithes, and He will pour out till there is not room to receive.

Let us act as if we practically believed in nothing to quicken but the Holy Ghost. Let us cry to God for Him to choose his Barnabas and his Saul. God forbid that we should think that we can manufacture these two men. Then, at the bidding of the Holy Ghost, let them, on our heart's prayers, go forth, and let such blessed missionaries join with us in crying to God to raise up speedily self-denying Africans, Indians, Chinese, full of the Holy Ghost, who, instead of being suspected as at present, shall earn the respect of their fellow-countrymen by holy living and by preaching without pay, as the natives around Dr. Nevius are now so successfully doing in China.* So shall we have room to see the Lord working his wonders, as in 2 Chron. xx. 2, &c.: "There cometh a great multitude against thee. . . . And Jehoshaphat feared, and set himself to seek the Lord, and proclaimed a fast throughout all Judah. And Judah gathered themselves together, to ask help of the Lord. . . . O Lord God of our fathers, art not Thou God in heaven? and rulest not Thou over all kingdoms of the heathen? and in thine hand is there not power and might, so that none is able to withstand Thee? . . . Be not afraid nor dismayed by reason of this great multitude; for the battle is not yours, but God's. . . . Ye shall not need to fight in this battle: set yourselves, stand ye still, and see the salvation of the Lord with you. . . . And they [the heathen] smote one another [marginal reading], and they [the Israelites] were three days in gathering of the spoil, it was so much." Carey obeyed Christ's command with all his soul, and the poor cobbler and his two comrades, before they died, not only cost their mission nothing, but had contributed out of their own earnings, £40,000 to the missionary treasury.

It is true that not a few noble men and noble women have since then given their lives to the heathen. But what is the Church at home doing?

What would God have us to learn from the recent departure from our own shores of the aged Bishop Taylor, with his large band of missionary men, women, and children, to explore and spread into the interior, and there settle in many places amongst the savage tribes of Africa; and from his boldly telling his American fellow-countrymen that he will not rely on America for maintenance? He makes this venture after years of missionary experience in Africa, India, and South America.

What would God teach us by Mr. Tucker, after throwing up his lucrative position in the Indian Civil Service, disrobing himself, and sinking down to be alongside the low-class natives? Then, finding so many open Indian hearts, returning to England for the succour of like-minded missionaries, and a few days since returning to India with thirty-five British helpers in one ship, prepared to dress, and eat, and live as poor Indian beggars, that they may become all things to all men. If they be wrong, are we right?

Mr. Johnston writes: "If Christ's command is to be obeyed, Christian missions must enter upon a new era as to their methods, and much more as to the means of extension."

THE BRITISH ASSOCIATION.

BY REV. WILLIAM GUEST, F.G.S.

When, three years ago, I attended at Southport the meetings of this great scientific Association, I wrote to The Christian respecting the grateful surprise felt by many on account of the Christian tone and sentiment which, for the most part, prevailed. This has been increasingly the case during these meetings in Birmingham. To me the fact appears exceedingly significant. It is twenty-one years since the Association met in this large world-supplying workshop. Having been then present, I recall very painfully the emotions of many of us at that time, and the resultant wave of scepticism which was dreaded. In the Ethnological, Anthropological, and Geological Sections there were older and younger scientists who took for granted that the teachings of Revelation were exploded. Sneers at Christian beliefs were frequent and offensive. Darwinism, in all its mechanical and extreme demands, was rampant. Man's enormous antiquity was confidently proclaimed. His early appearance, and his climbing of trees as do irrational apes, were assumed. Flint hatchet-heads and implements were paraded in a room taken for the purpose. The utterance of a doubt to the late Dr. Hunt, who conducted a few of us through this room, seemed to be treated with contempt. Believers in revealed religion were stared at as convicted ignoramuses. The claim set up for science was that of infallibility, and a new era was supposed to have dawned, which had bowed God and his commandments out of the universe.

This arrogant confidence was a revolt from the modesty of illustrious workers in the fields of science at an earlier period. Whewell, Davy, Brewster, Buckland, Sedgwick, Herschel, and Faraday were firm believers in revealed religion, and many celebrated scientists in Birmingham at that time regretted the assumptions and dogmatism of a new generation. But it was a fashion to repudiate the Biblical revelation. Two things were strangely confounded—science and its method. Science it was affirmed was to be followed to whatever conclusions it led; which was true only on the supposition that the inquiry had been adequate and unbiassed. At that time, however, science was not certainty, but merely a working hypothesis.

All this has changed. No utterances have been more candid during these Birmingham meetings than admissions that men of science have had of late years to *un*learn; nothing more marked than the revision of formerly unproved assumptions, the correction of hasty observations, the exposure of the mistakes of too readily asserted similarities, and the acknowledgment that the confidence of a former period was an ignis fatuus. I do not say this has been the invariable tone. The old spirit still lingers. It is hard for some younger men to become the modest students of nature instead of its confident interpreters. When theories look adverse to the supernatural, the temptation comes to parade deductions which are based upon superficial generalisations, and not to follow the true vocation of science, which is one of testing and of patient examination.

* A Century of Protestant Missions, &c. By Rev. James Johnston, F.S.G. Nisbet. 6d.

† Mr. Eugene Stock, secretary of the City Missionary Society, makes a similar statement. See Missionary Band (Morgan & Scott), p. 67.

* Dr. Nevius regrets time lost and grievous harm done, and the work permanently hindered by natives being paid who would be far more useful as volunteer workers. See his article in China's Millions for September.

That, however, which has contributed to the changed character of the Birmingham meetings has been the position this year in the Association of pronounced believers in the Christian Scriptures. If anyone had foretold, when the Association met in the capital of the Midlands, in 1847, or in 1865, that in 1886 the President would be a decided Christian man, and that this would be the case with Chairmen of other important sections, the forecast would have been held by many to be one of utter improbability. But now men who make no secret of their belief in the Bible have presided over departments where theories were formerly heard that seemed menacing to the faith, and have done so with a truth-loving spirit and the highest ability as physicists. They, and many around them, have clearly striven hard to bring back that old scientific spirit which proceeded on lines of moderation and caution, which refused to pander to the sensational, as even men of eminence once did, and have yet held to those truths which no human learning could discover, and which God alone could reveal.

It was under the influence of this new order that the first meeting was held in the Town Hall, on September 1. Members and Associates filled the handsome edifice, and an evidence of the better time which had come was afforded in the fact that the chair was, at the beginning of the meeting, occupied by Professor G. G. Stokes, who is at once President of the Royal Society, and President also of the Victoria Institute, the latter having been formed to assert the harmony of science and the truths of revealed religion. Sir William Dawson's address has been fully reported. All that I need say is that, from the opening to the close, the President of the Association took a firm and unmistakable stand as a believer in the Bible. There was a fine tone of candid appreciation of the Evolutionary philosophy, but a clear divergence from its extreme conclusions. The point, however, that excited the deepest interest through the vast audience was the grand conclusion to which all led, and the emphatic assertion of creative design in the geological development of the North Atlantic Ocean (the subject of the address), and of design as clearly to be marked there, in the preparation for the human period, as in living beings. This direction of thought to Him, who was pointed to as holding the waters in the hollow of his hand, was obviously welcomed by distinguished scientists on the platform, and produced on some of us below, an adoring awe before Him who had from the beginning made the seas and built up the continents for his human children.

On the following morning the spacious Birmingham Council Chamber was completely filled by those who waited to hear the introductory address to the Geologists. Again change was apparent. Twenty-one years ago Geology was thought dangerous to faith, and in this Section at that time rash utterances often pained Christian men. This has all but ceased; and the difference is the more to be marked from the fact that in no branch of science has there been such vast progress as in this. Geological researches may of late years almost be said to have created a revolution in the science; but, remarkable to say, the greater the progress the less the tone of unbelief. It is pleasant to record that in Professors G. G. Bonney and E. Hull this Section and its Sub-section have had Presidents of pronounced religious views. The address of the former was devoted to a line of study which, according to Sir William Dawson, opens the way to a new development of geological study. By the application of the microscope to existing rocks, evidence is afforded of their genealogy, or their source from ancient rocks of an underlying period. Invaluable results, and equally valuable corrections, will come from microscopic geology, and Professor Bonney's researches make him a pioneer in this new and most important field of research.

In another Section a decided change has been obvious. At the last Birmingham meeting, the Section of Anthropology was permeated with boastful scepticism. Man's origin was put back enormously. No doubt as to the ape being his progenitor was listened to. No matter under what circumstances flint implements were found, they were assumed to be of human manufacture. Anthropology then was not so much a scientific study as a speculation, and the wildest theories were broached. This year, on the contrary, the President of the Section (Sir George Campbell) declared in his opening address that, as to the origin of man, knowledge is still limited, and progress slow; that after all these years the missing link between him and all other animals is not found; that it is scarcely known whether flint implements are the work of man or of some earlier intelligent creature; that, in short, we do not get on firm ground till we come to man as we now have him; which means that man stands unique in creation, which is what the Bible teaches. The significance of these admissions can hardly be overestimated, and they go far to sustain the language of Sir William Dawson, in a paper published this year, that the ordinarily received chronology of about four or five thousand years for the post-diluvian period, and two thousand, or a little more, for the antediluvian period, will exhaust all the time that Geology can allow for the possible existence of man. It is true, Geology has not explored the oldest seats of human civilisation; but the delta of the Nile, which Sir William has investigated, leads to the same conclusions as those which the northern hemisphere furnishes. Let us give thanks at this adjustment on one of the most vital questions between science and Bible history. I may add, in this connection, that, since the hopelessness of finding for man a natural origin is so far recognised, Anthropology seems likely henceforth to find its function in the practical science of improving man as he is.[*]

Agitations with respect to origins and materialistic speculations in this regard have in other years found their home in the section of the Association for Biology, but this year the President of this Section has been a well-known believer in Divine revelation, William Carruthers, F.R.S., the keeper of the Botanical Department in the Natural Museum, South Kensington.

The Sabbath brought a blessed pause in the work of the sections, and a large number of the members of the Association met on the afternoon of the day for devotional service. Canon Tristram presided. After the reading of the Scriptures by Sir James Simpson, President of the Section for Mechanical Science, Sir William Dawson urged scientific men to apply the same intelligence and earnestness to the study of the Scriptures as they do to nature: all religion was based on the words and work of our Saviour Christ: if we followed Him we should respect, as He did, the authority of the Old Testament, the objections to which were unhistorical and unscientific. Mr. Carruthers followed with some wise words to the effect that all our strength lay in personal union with the Lord Jesus Christ. Knowledge was of little value unless it brought us to Christ, and all teaching was of value, however disesteemed some might be, if it led men to Him Prayers, hymns, and such addresses, made this a delightful service.

In the foregoing sketch, I have confined myself mainly to those aspects of this great Association for the Advancement of Science which bear upon the truths of religion. After being at the two assemblies, of 1865 and of 1886, I cannot but feel justified in saying that, brilliant as the former was in many respects, there was then a tone of thought that placed scientific scepticism in apparent ascendency, but that this year, on the contrary, the ascendent sentiment has been the presence of Christian thought and conviction. Sure I am that it is only thus that Nature can be understood. It is the devil's lie that a man cannot be at once an advanced scientist and a believer in the Bible, though, strange to say, there are so-called Christians who countenance the lie. Love is the principle of the universe. He who is Love must have objects of regard. Only as men admit that the ever-blessed God works from love, will they have in their hand the key that opens the lock of the Temple of Nature. By this method of investigation will they arrive at that "single principle," or "summary law of nature" of which Lord Bacon wrote when he threw out hints of subordinate causes which will resolve themselves into one great process whereby God works his will in the universe. (See "Hallam's Introduction to the Literature of Europe," vol. iii. p. 303.)

Thus are men advancing that time when God through his works will be manifested, and be "all in all." The world at the first was built up for the appearance of man, On him nature had her eye from the beginning. So now, the interpretation of nature looks on to the full revelation which shall come with his appearance and his kingdom who is "the Saviour, Redeemer, and Mighty One of Jacob!" Blessed truth! Of all the sons of Jacob He is the One mighty to redeem, and all things serve Him.

MRS. K. YEOLAND has been holding mission services in Felstead and Little Waltham, in barns kindly lent for the purpose. Great numbers attended, and very many bless God for the simple truths delivered, and received to the salvation of their souls.

[*] Three or four days after the opening of this Section, in the absence of the President, the old tone of unwarranted confidence as to man's appearance on the globe was manifested. A flint-flake, about the size of a child's little finger, was exhibited as undoubted evidence, from its position, of pre-glacial man in North Wales. One gentleman told us he was as sure that the flake was made by human fingers as that the coat he wore was made by a tailor—i.e., he was as sure of what he had never seen, and which took place in nature ages ago, as what he now witnessed under his own eye! It is due to say that most of the true leaders of science would have nothing to do with these credulities. That the artificiality of the flint-flake was not challenged was owing to the fact that its advocates had all their own way: opponents did not even put in an appearance.

TRUE STATESMANSHIP.—2.

By S. Beck.

ABRAHAM LINCOLN

Was born in Hardin County, Kentucky, U.S.A., on February 12, 1809. His home was in the midst of great forests, and was made of rough logs and clay: his fare, corn bread, milk, and such luxuries as garden, fields, and wood afforded. Wolves, bears, and the wild deer were near neighbours, and squirrels and fat turkeys were to be had for the taking; while the maple freely gave its delicious sweet, and the wild plum, blackberry, raspberry, and fox-grape grew in profusion around. The well-worn Bible and the family circle were almost the only means of religious instruction afforded him. His mother died of rapid consumption while he was quite young, and of her he left this remarkable testimony: "All that I am, or hope to be, I owe to my sainted mother."

He never forgot what it was to be a boy, or lost his sympathy for the young, for he remembered his own school-days, when for several years his penmanship was cultivated by writing with coals upon the smooth ends of chopped logs, and his reading lessons were taken from the Bible and a copy of "Pilgrim's Progress," which together constituted the family library. In that greatest book of the law we see the foundation of that strict integrity which gave him the nickname of "honest Abe."

As the manager of a small village shop we find him walking five miles after his day's work to return six and a quarter cents, which he had inadvertently overcharged to a customer. As a young lawyer he resolutely refused to continue a case when he became convinced that his client was acting dishonestly. His partner carried it on without him, gained the cause, and received for the firm a fee of nine hundred dollars, not a fraction of which would Lincoln take, looking upon it as little better than stolen goods.

We must not follow many of the incidents of this remarkable life, as he rises from the store-keeper to the post-master, the surveyor and the lawyer, our object being, not to add to biographies already written, but to cull from them those points which affect our main purpose, viz., to show that men of power are those who, receiving from the great Creator large natural gifts, look to Him as their Dispenser, and seek to be guided by the wisdom which cometh from above. In these we see, not only the ability rightly to govern, but something of the tenderness of Him who is their Father, and without whose knowledge not a sparrow falls to the ground.

As illustrative of this we can hardly pass by the following incident. Abraham Lincoln was riding by a deep slough, in which he saw a pig engulphed, and showing by its exhaustive efforts that it would never succeed in extricating itself. He looked at it for a moment with a pitying eye, but the mud was deep and black, and his wardrobe for the journey was limited to the suit he had on. He therefore rode on for two miles, occasionally looking back and trying to overcome a sense of duty which rested on his conscience. He then turned suddenly round, and rode quickly back and dismounted. He soon had a bridge of rails built to within reach of the pig, seized him by the ears, and laid him on terra firma. Looking on him with a smile he remounted and rode away.

A fierce struggle was now going on all over the States, and, "forasmuch as a man is better than a sheep," he who felt so much compassion for one poor struggling animal felt his whole soul stirred within him as he beheld a nation engulphed in a slough of oppression, deeper and blacker than could ever be produced by any natural causes. He had been elected to Congress in 1846 by a large majority. The whole nation was on the boil on the subject of slavery.

For many a long year the fire had been kindling. The peaceable John Woolman had borne his quiet and persistent testimony by not wearing or eating anything of slave produce, and refusing to take without paying for it the hospitality of the slave owner. The fiery John Brown had denied himself and his family of all the luxuries of life that every cent he could spare might be given to enable the coloured people to shake off their fetters by their own prowess, and he had fallen a martyr to the cause. All shades of religious opinion were stirring up, and slavery, pro and con, was the great political question of the day. "Blindly the wicked work the righteous will of Heaven," and the crisis came by the arrogant demands of the South for the increase of slave territory or the dissolution of the Union.

Lincoln had been placed at the head of the Government. We quote his own words just before his election. Alluding to the fact that prominent ministers of the Gospel and some professing Christians intended to vote for the pro-slavery candidates, he said, as he drew from his bosom a pocket Testament, "I have carefully read the Bible and I do not so understand the book." With cheeks wet with tears and with a trembling voice, he continued, "I know there is a God, and that He hates slavery and injustice. I see the storm coming and I know that his hand is in it. If He has a place and a work for me, and I believe He has, I believe I am ready. I am nothing, but truth and justice are everything. I know that I am right, because I know that liberty is right, for Christ teaches it, and Christ is God. I have told them that a house divided against itself cannot stand, and Christ and reason say the same, and they find it so. Douglas does not care whether slavery is voted up or down, but God cares, and humanity cares, and I care, and with God's help I shall not fail. I may not see the end, but it will come and I shall be vindicated, and these men will find that they have not read their Bibles aright." Pausing a moment, and walking to and fro across the room in silence, he rejoined, "A revelation could not make it plainer to me than that slavery or the Government must be destroyed. The future would be something awful to me but for this rock on which I stand (holding up the New Testament). It seems to me that God has borne with this thing (slavery) until the very teachers of religion claim for it a Divine sanction and character, and now the cup of inquity is full and the vials will be poured out."

In alluding to his secret feeling to his friend, he said, "I think more on these subjects (the providence, protection and justice of God) than upon all others, and have done so for years."

On another occasion he was heard to remark, "I should be the most presumptuous blockhead upon this footstool if I for one day thought that I could discharge the duties which have come upon me since I came to this place, without the aid and enlightenment of One who is wiser and stronger than all others."

A clergyman once remarked to him that he hoped the Lord was on our side in this contest. The reply was a notable one. "I am not at all concerned about that," said he, "for I know that the Lord is always on the side of right, but it is my constant prayer and anxiety that I and this nation may be on the Lord's side." We would endorse the opinion of the writer from whom we quote by expressing the belief that this sentence contains the "Kernel and Essence of all true Statesmanship."

During the first year and a half of the war, the policy of the Government was to conciliate the pro-slavery element both North and South. In attempting to compromise matters they used the "wisdom of this world" and signally failed. After a fearful loss of life and an enormous drain on the country's resources, the issue still remained doubtful.

In the extremity, in closet prayer, Lincoln earnestly sought "the wisdom which cometh from above," and He who giveth to all men liberally did not withhold it. The proclamation of the Edict of Emancipation on the 1st of January, 1863, was the result. With the wisdom came the power, evinced from that date, by the steady suppression of the rebellion. That remarkable prayer had been answered, Lincoln had been accepted "on the Lord's side," and slavery was totally abolished in the States.

We tread softly as we come so soon to the theatre which, on April 14, 1865, was the place of his assassination. He died a martyr to the cause he had nearest to his heart, a political martyr, and in the cause of religion, martyrdom and power are nearly allied. Would that we had many more, willing, if need be, to be political martyrs.

What practical lessons do we learn from the united testimony of these two lives. We think:—

(1) That the wisdom which cometh from above is a necessity for all good government,

(2) That it is our highest interest to choose our representatives in Parliament or Congress from those who seek to be guided thereby, because "the secret of the Lord is with them that fear Him."

(3) That, as righteousness exalteth a nation, it is good for us, politically as well as socially, to desire in all that we do that the "government" may be "upon his shoulders whose name shall be called Wonderful, Counsellor, the Mighty God, the Everlasting Father, the Prince of Peace, for of the increase of his government and of his peace there shall be no end."

TALKING WITH JESUS.

In a large city in Scotland a faithful minister of Christ was one winter's day visiting among the wretched poor. He climbed up into a garret at the top of a very high house. He had been told that there was a very poor old woman there that nobody seemed to know about. He went on climbing till he found his way into that garret-room. As he entered the room he looked around: there was a bed, and a chair, and a table with a candle burning dimly on it; a very little fire on the hearth, and an old woman sitting by it, with a large Testament in her lap. The minister asked her what she was doing there. She said she was reading.

"Don't you feel lonely here?" he asked.

"Na, na," was her reply.

"What do you do here these long winter nights?"

"Oh," she said, "I just sit here wi' my licht and wi' my New Testament on my knees, talkin' wi' Jesus!"

For the Young.

A MOTHER'S KISS.

"Why didn't you strike her back, you silly thing?" Such were the words which caught my ear, and made me raise my eyes from my work, to look at a little group of my pupils who were playing near the house.

A little girl was running away as fast as she could, whilst the others gathered round little Amy, who was looking at her small fat hand with a sort of indecision, and at the same time striving to repress an evident desire to cry.

Amy was a sweet little girl, the only child of a widow lady who had recently come to the village, and who attracted the respect and sympathy of all who had anything to do with her.

I waited with interest to hear the little one's reply to the question of her irritated companion, "Why did you not strike her back?"

"Because—because mother would not have kissed my hands this evening, if I had struck anyone." And she sobbed aloud, softly rubbing one little hand, red from the blow received. It could be seen the blow had struck the heart as much as the hand.

"Will not kiss your hands to-night! What do you mean? What a funny idea!" said the children, in chorus.

"Mother always kisses them when they have not done anything naughty during the day. To give a blow would be naughty; the mother of that little girl who struck me won't kiss her hands this evening, will she?"

And Amy lifted her innocent eyes to her school-fellows' faces, while they caressed and comforted her.

I went out to speak to her. Stroking her head, I said, "Will you take me to your mother, my dear?"

"Oh, ma'am," cried all the other children, "if you only knew! Caroline struck Amy such a blow, just because she refused to go with her. Wasn't it bad?" Of course I admitted it was very bad, and then went with my little conductor to her mother. I related the garden scene to her, and begged her to enlighten me as to what the child had said.

The mother smiled, replying, "Perhaps it is childish on my part, but ever since she was a tiny baby I have liked to kiss her little hands, as well as her rosy lips. I used to put the little palm on my mouth and kiss it till she smiled. I have continued this habit: every night on undressing her, if I omit to kiss her hands, Amy knows that they were not clean from some naughtiness. If they had been raised in anger against her nurse or some little friend, mother could not kiss them. And this was a serious matter to my darling, I assure you. And the same with her lips; if, knowingly, a bad word escaped them, or if in the course of the day my dear child had told an untruth, I could not kiss her lips. I always kissed her forehead and cheeks, but she cared much more for my kisses on her lips and hands. Little by little the offences disappeared, and every evening she would say, 'Clean hands, mother! clean hands! Mother can kiss baby to-night!' And even now that she is five years old, I continue the practice, because I think it helps her to become good.

"I much desire that my little Amy should grow in truth and kindness, and that every word and act should be pure, and I rejoice if, by the kisses of her mother, God has given me a means of education pleasing to Him. And I mean to follow the same plan until my child is old enough to walk alone under God's eye."

So, thanks to the prospective reward, the blow had not that day been returned, and the rosy lips had abstained from hard words.

Dear mothers, are you thus leading your children in the paths of goodness?

WHAT THE FLOWERS SAID.

BY MARGARET EYTINGE.

Said the Morning Glory:—
"When you see the light,
Praise the Lord who kept you
Safely through the night."
Said the purple Pansy:—
"Learn this truth from me:
You must be contented
If you'd happy be."

Said the white-robed Lily:—
"You shall blessings know
If like me your thoughts are Pure as driven snow."
Said the tall and stately
Flower of the Sun:—
"Greater beauty than a True heart, there is none."

Said the Rose:—"The thorns
That life ever brings,
Are by love and kindness
Robbed of all their stings."
Said the pretty, fragrant
Violet:—"So live
That your presence always Sweet delight will give."

BIBLE STUDIES.—29.

SOME CHARACTERISTICS OF GOD'S PEOPLE.

Deut. xxxiii. 29.

1.—Happy. "Happy is that people whose God is the Lord" (Ps. cxliv. 15). "Whoso trusteth in the Lord, happy is he" (Prov. xvi. 20). "Happy is the man whom God correcteth" (Job v. 17; Heb. xii. 6). "If ye be reproached for the name of Christ, happy are ye" (1 Pet. iv. 14). "The fruit of the Spirit is . . . joy" (Gal. v. 22). "In thy presence is fulness of joy; at thy right hand there are pleasures for evermore" (Ps. xvi. 11).

2.—Who is like unto thee? "The Lord hath chosen Jacob unto Himself, and Israel for his peculiar treasure" (Ps. cxxxv. 4). "They shall be mine, saith the Lord of Hosts, in that day when I make up my jewels" (special treasure—margin) (Mal. iii. 17). "A peculiar (especial) people" (Tit. ii. 14). "Ye are . . . a peculiar people" (lit., of acquirement unto Himself) (1 Pet. ii. 9).

3.—Saved by the Lord.—"Truly in the Lord our God is the salvation of Israel" (Jer. iii. 23). "Look unto Me, and be ye saved, all the ends of the earth" (Is. xlv. 22). "By grace are ye saved through faith . . . it is the gift of God" (Eph. ii. 8). "My heart shall rejoice in thy salvation" (Ps. xiii. 5).

4.—Shielded. "I, saith the Lord, will be unto her a wall of fire round about" (Zech. ii. 5). "Thou art . . . my shield" (Ps. cxix. 114). "Most gladly, therefore, will I rather glory in my infirmities, that the power of Christ may rest upon me" (spread a tabernacle over me) (2 Cor. xii. 9). "Let all those that put their trust in Thee rejoice; let them ever shout for joy, because Thou defendest (coverest over) them" (Ps. v. 11).

5.—Fought for. "The Lord your God, which goeth before you, He shall fight for you" (Deut. i. 30). "The Lord is on my side; I will not fear: what can man do unto me?" (Ps. cxviii. 6). "As captain of the host of the Lord am I now come" (Josh. v. 14).

6.—Victorious. "Thou hast subdued under me those that rose up against me" (Psalm xviii. 39). "When a man's ways please the Lord, He maketh even his enemies to be at peace with him" (Prov. xvi. 7). "He will subdue our iniquities" (Micah vii. 19). "Sin shall not have dominion over you" (Rom. vi. 14). "Thanks be to God, which giveth us the victory through our Lord Jesus Christ" (1 Cor. xv. 57).

7.—Reigning. "They which receive abundance of grace, and of the gift of righteousness, shall reign in life by one, Jesus Christ" (Rom. v. 17). "If we suffer, we shall also reign with Him" (2 Tim. ii. 12). "He that overcometh shall inherit all things" (Rev. xxi. 7).

DR. GUINNESS IN SYDNEY.

The eight days' mission to young men, which Dr. H. Grattan Guinness [son of Mr. Grattan Guinness, of Harley House] has been conducting in the Sydney Y.M.C.A., has resulted in much good to the young people of that city. Nightly the large hall of the Association was crowded with deeply-interested gatherings of young men, who gave unwonted evidence of their appreciation of the Doctor's mission. At each service large numbers of them were found seeking Christ through the medium of the inquiry-room, thus affording striking testimony of the power of the word spoken. Nor was this all. Special noonday meetings for Bible-reading and prayer were organised, at all of which there was a large preponderance of young men.

Speaking of the mission as a whole, Sydney has seen nothing like it for many a day, and we very much doubt whether any occasion could be cited at which the power of the Holy Spirit was more strikingly exemplified in Sydney than during the past week. Daily did Dr. Guinness receive numerous letters from young men who had been "touched" at some previous stage of the mission. Some of these were heart-rending, some pathetic to a degree, but all seeking the same counsel in their distress, as to what they must do to inherit eternal life. In addition to the letters, many also took advantage of the Doctor's kindness to confer with him during the day time, either on spiritual or medical questions, so that altogether it must have been a busy week. His intensely earnest spirit, however, allows of no wearying, and love for the Master seems to wonderfully lighten his arduous labours. At the farewell meeting on Sunday evening, there was by far a larger attendance than on any previous evening, the hall being thronged to the doors. The address, based on the words, "Surely I come quickly," was given in the Doctor's most forcible style, and moved the audience in a marked manner. At the close eighty-one persons asked to be prayed for, and fully 200 found their way into the inquiry-room.

Dr. Guinness is quite a young man, and is fired with a deep and earnest desire to benefit his fellows. His power on the platform is surprising, and is largely due to the informal style of his delivery, the earnestness of his nature, the thorough grasp he has of young men's ways and language, and the ready application of suitable anecdotes to the more striking points in his address. His voice is at once attractive and forceful, and he never fails to carry his hearers with him. His tarry in Victoria and New South Wales has proved of great spiritual benefit to the masses of young men, and we doubt not this same result will now accompany his labours in Queensland. We wish him hearty success and God-speed in his efforts to evangelise the young men of Australia.—Australian Christian World, July 8.

EVANGELISATION OF THE WORLD.—The annual Christian Conference at the Conference Hall, Strangeways, Manchester, will be held this year on November 9 and 10. The invitation circular, which is signed by several leading ministers and business men, as well as the three hon. secs., states that the subject will be "The Evangelisation of the World." Last year's Conference "was a time of much blessing; increased interest and zeal in the Lord's work was awakened; many were drawn into closer communion with Him, and to more entire consecration to his service. It was the pioneer of several others having the same aim, in various parts of the kingdom, until a blessed wave of sympathy and interest in the subject of the Evangelisation of the heathen at home and abroad has been steadily advancing, and we pray may yet overspread the land." November 9 will be given to "Work at home;" November 10 to "Work Abroad." Those friends at a distance who purpose attending should communicate early with the Hon Secs., Conference Hall, Strangeways, Manchester.

(FROM OUR SPECIAL REPORTER.)

FOURTH DAY—SATURDAY, AUGUST 7.

SUNDAY-SCHOOL WORK.

One of the most successful men in Sunday-school work in New York is Rev. A. F. Schauffler, the pastor of a Mission Church in that city. This morning he gave the leading address, which was on the best ways of interesting the young in the study of the Scriptures. His words, backed up as they were by the force of much successful experience, made a strong impression on the audience. His great point was the necessity of thorough and systematic preparation. Do not let any think, he said, that by coming to a Conference such as this, and picking up a few lesson outlines, or Bible readings, they can go back to their churches and become successful teachers right away. Every genuine method of work is the result of long and patient and persevering study. Do not let the young worker be discouraged by early failure; success is sure to follow persistent application, and downright hard work in acquiring methods, and putting them into practice. First of all, in dealing with the Scripture narratives, the Sunday-school teacher must make them real to himself. He can do that by the religious use of the imagination—reading into the Bible accounts the leading characteristics of similar events which he has himself seen. From seeing the crowds thronging to a Gospel meeting held by Mr. Moody and Mr. Sankey, he may vividly imagine the scenes recorded in the Scriptures, when the people pressed around our Lord to hear his teaching and see his miracles. Realising the scene, it can then be pictured and made to stand out before the minds of the scholars. Some illustrations of this use of the imagination were given by Mr. Schauffler. He graphically described the healing of the man afflicted with the palsy, who was borne by his four friends to the roof of the house where Christ was, and let down into the Master's presence.

The great lesson taught was that, in order to fix a Bible narrative or its special application on the minds of the young, the details must be made to appear in living, moving outline before them. It is very important also to know something of the general history of the times when these Bible events took place, especially in the Old Testament, as that will often explain things that would otherwise seem strange. Then the teacher should watch the effect on his scholars to see what impressions are being made. If you see one of them look serious under the power of the truth, find the opportunity of talking to him by himself. You will be surprised often at the readiness with which they will converse with you about religious matters. Sometimes a stray word, if it is spoken in season, will lodge itself in the heart and blossom out into conversion. Notice the individual characteristics of the scholars, and adapt yourself to them. If you are troubled with unruly boys in the school, do all you can to disperse them through the classes, so as to break up their influence. Try and get hold of the ringleader, and influence him for good in all the ways you can. You will find him worth a good deal of trouble, for if his heart is gained he will be a power for good among the others. The demeanour of the teacher sometimes has a wonderful influence. Mr. Schauffler told of a young girl who attended a church in New York and sat in a pew behind her teacher. She watched the teacher, and was so impressed with her reverent bearing and close attention that she was led to listen for herself, and faith came to her by hearing the preached word.

Mr. Schauffler, who also conducts a large teachers' preparation class in New York every Saturday, was asked how he kept them together all the year round. He said, in brief, that he aimed at giving them something worth coming for. He did not admit any teachers to his school unless they were prepared to attend the teachers' meetings. Teachers cannot teach unless they study. The boys and girls converted in the school are trained up to become teachers in their turn, so that those who have an interest in the work are secured. They were what he called "fifty-two Sunday teachers;" many city teachers went off to the hills or the sea-shore during the summer, and half the schools in New York City go to pieces during that season.

Mr. Moody, in contributing to the discussion of the subject, spoke of Mr. Quintin Hogg's work among young men at the Polytechnic, Regent-street, and the effect of personal influence in showing them kindness. "Go for the sharp boys," said Mr. Moody; "you can afford to spend a good deal of time on them, even if they are unruly." Superintendents of Sunday-schools ought to be careful in dividing the classes, so as not to over-tax the teachers. Some can manage a small number, when the addition of one or two scholars would ruin the class. Increase the number of scholars as the teacher is able to cope with them.

Mr. Rainsford gave some of his Sunday-school and Bible-class experiences in Dundalk, Ireland, where he was once rector of a parish. When he went there, he found there were no teachers, so he had to teach the teachers first of all. It is a great matter, he said, to be sure that the teachers are teaching the truth, so as not to have one teaching one thing, and another something quite different. Every Saturday evening he met the teachers, and went through the lesson with them. Then at the close of the lessons on the Sunday he spoke a few words to the children as a body, finding out if they understood the lesson. He gave a premium at the end of the year to the class that would give the best account of the matters brought before them through the year; that excited great interest. Then on the Sundays he always asked one question connected with the lesson that had not been touched upon in the preparation classes. That used to go through the whole parish. The children brought the answers with them next Sunday, and during the week the parents were obliged to read the Bible in order to help the children, who would pester them so that sometimes the people would beseech him to let them know the answers to the questions, to be rid of the importunity of the scholars. Mr. Rainsford spoke also of efforts made to reach the ragged children belonging to the Roman Catholic population, and graphically told a story of the conversion and persecution of a Roman Catholic boy, that alternately convulsed the meeting with laughter and melted it to tears.

MR. MOODY ANSWERS QUESTIONS.

On Saturday afternoon Mr. Moody answered questions from all comers on practical church work. The substance of these replies was as follows:—

If a pastor is not in favour of evangelistic work, go out and start cottage meetings, or get to work among the children. There is no calendar of the seasons kept in heaven. God is as willing to work in July as in November. The Bible is the best question book you can get for Sunday-schools. Mr. Moody told here of his own extreme ignorance of the Scriptures in his youth. He felt that he was deeply wronged, and he urged that children should be taught to become acquainted with the Word of God. There are few Bibles in our churches; let not the Book be neglected in our homes as well. Many young men will not attend Bible-classes because they do not care to expose their ignorance of the Scriptures. A young man who possessed sceptical views once told him of some passage to be found in "the third chapter of Ichabod," and searched the Bible for some time in order to find it!

If you cannot get an evangelist to conduct meetings, get some neighbouring pastor to do so. Many will go and listen to a strange voice who will not attend church when the regular pastor is preaching. Every competent evangelist has far more invitations than he can attend to. Why should not the regular pastors engage in this kind of work now and then? There is no trouble in getting people to attend the weekly prayer-meeting if it is made sufficiently interesting. Have the room comfortable and attractive. Let the leader be fresh in matter and friendly in demeanour. Let the prayers be brief and to the point. If the minister keeps in a rut, invite him to tea, and have a serious talk about the matter. In that way you may be able to break up the monotony of the meetings. See how short, sharp, and urgent are the prayers recorded in the Bible.

Any man who prays fifteen minutes in the church will pray all the Spirit out of the people. Put life into the prayer meetings, and the living members of the church will go to them. Let the pastor arrange beforehand with some who are to take part in the meeting, so as to prevent any long and awkward pauses. A minister who preaches twice a week, and takes up all the time at the weekly prayer meeting, will kill any church. Labour with him, and get others to help you in the effort, if you do not succeed yourselves. We had a very interesting exercise at the Mount Hermon meetings lately, taking up the Gospel of Matthew chapter by chapter. We got all who had studied it beforehand to rise up and say a word or two about it. This would be a good plan to adopt in a church prayer meeting: go through selected books of the Bible. Have different kinds of meetings going on—the more the better. As Mr. Spurgeon says, One iron in the fire keeps another hot. Bring out all the talent in the churches you can. Have variety and life in the service of song at the prayer meeting. Gather half an hour before the time and learn new tunes. Above all, get out of ruts. If there are those in the church who are not on good terms with each other, invite them both to tea, and get them to make up their differences.

Who is the best city missionary—a man or woman? I say the woman, by all means. She can go during the day to the homes of the people, and talk with the wife and children. If we had hundreds of lady missionaries in our great cities, where we have now tens, we would soon break up Nihilism and Fenianism, and all these social difficulties. Let us pray God that He would send out into active service for Him hundreds of the young women who are now wasting their time in frivolous pursuits. It seems to me a very sad feature of the present day that so many of our educated young women are throwing away their powers, instead of using them for God.

As to reaching the people, there are difficulties everywhere, but they can be overcome. We have now two church waggons that go round the hills and collect the people for the Sunday service. If a man has got a heart of pity for the people around him, God will open up some way for them to be reached. Let the country farmers who have a waggon invite some neighbour who has not got any conveyance, to come with them to church. We must also have the cursed pew system rooted out in our churches. If we can't get pews free altogether, let us have them free at least on Sunday evenings. Let the people know that you want them to come, and that they will be welcomed. No man who can preach the Gospel at all need speak to empty pews. Don't be afraid of innovations. In the cemetery there is perfect order; but wherever there is life there will be diversity. Many who will not go to church will go to a cottage meeting. Ask the mothers to bring their babies with them. It takes an earthquake to move the Gospel-hardened sinners who have sat under the Gospel ministry for years; but these mothers, with all their responsibilities on them, will listen to the message gladly. Let the mothers also come to the regular church services, babies and all. If a baby cries, let the preacher raise his voice. If you lay yourself to reach the masses, you can find some way of doing it.

No meetings were held on Saturday evening, Mr. Moody wisely remarking that an evening's respite would bring everybody up fresh on the morning of the Day of Rest.

JOTTINGS BY THE WAY.

The vale of Northfield never looked more lovely, I should think, than it does now. There have been some copious and refreshing rains of late, and the verdure of field and forest is everywhere exuberant. After the morning mists have rolled away, the days are simply glorious; the sunsets are full of splendour, and, with a moon nearly at its full, the nights are almost as resplendent as the days. Mr. Moody is providing a rich spiritual feast; but he is by no means forgetting to cater for the lower needs and cravings of his visitors. Day by day he invites them to use the intervals in driving among the mountains that lie scattered in generous profusion around this favoured spot, in lawn tennis, in boating on Minnehaha Lake, in bathing in the broad placid river, and, most of all, in making pilgrimages to his loved Mount Hermon. Teams and conveyances are in constant attendance, and the evangelist ought by this time to be an experienced livery stable director. What with the drives, the high living, and the equally high thinking, the sojourners here are experiencing a perpetual round of pure delights. I need not say more about the feeding department than to endorse my appreciative remarks of last year.

The attendance has grown, and embraces friends from distant parts of this great continent. It has been a pleasure to me to renew many acquaintances formed last August with active workers whose names now and then appear in your pages, while many fresh faces are seen from day to day. I could wish that the representatives of the old country were much more numerous than they are. Three thousand miles (mainly on the treacherous ocean) is a long way to come, no doubt, to attend a Christian conference, but many who take their vacation on the European continent expend far more time and money than would be needful for an American trip, and it would be a great educational power for them to witness the go-aheadism and the freedom from conventionality that prevail here. Mr. Moody slyly insists that no American can have a complete education who has not "done" Mount Hermon; I would say that no European can "finish off" his education who has not seen something of the ways and methods of the new hemisphere.

It need scarcely be said that, with such a cohort of famous Gospel singers as I have before alluded to, we live and move in an atmosphere of sacred song. Some new melodies have been sung, not only by Mr. Sankey, but by Mr. and Mrs. McGranahan, and Mr. and Mrs. Towner. These have been most acceptable, but the old favourites still hold their own. One day Mr. Sankey sang, by request, "The Ninety and Nine," which carried me back to many a well-remembered season of spiritual impression and blessing in Great Britain. Among Mr. McGranahan's compositions, given during these days, none has been more thrilling and grand than the anthem in The Christian Choir, "I am the Resurrection." Mr. Towner has struck off several new songs, the most taking of which is one set for male voices, entitled "We're on the Way," to words by Mr. Sayford, the preaching evangelist, who accompanied him during the southern tour last winter.

THE PRESS.

The Christian, I find, has many warm friends among those attending the Convention. Mr. George C. Needham, who is here, looking as well and hearty as ever, claims to be its oldest reader on the American continent; he has read it from the very first issue of The Revival. An excellent and active Christian lady from Brooklyn is an enthusiastic subscriber, and has secured many others. It was with deep interest that I heard from the lips of Rev. Father O'Connor, of New York, an instance in his own experience of how The Christian is helpful to its readers. Some time ago he received a letter from a lady in Ireland asking him to visit and relieve the pressing wants of a former servant of hers, stranded and lonely in the great city of New York. The lady knew no one in the city; but, having seen Mr. O'Connor's name and address in this journal, she invoked his help, which was freely rendered. He found the man in one of the city dispensaries, not only ill in body, but despairing in mind. The good cheer that Mr. O'Connor carried to him, and the comforting words he spoke to the home-sick Irishman, revived him, and he was speedily out of hospital and "on his feet" again.

The American press is ably, though not very extensively, represented at the Conference. The sparkling daily reports of The Springfield Republican are most acceptable to the visitors, and are a credit to its brilliant young representative, Mr. Lyman. These American reporters have a happy knack of picking up items and presenting things in a picturesque style that British members of the profession can scarcely hope to emulate. The Springfield (evening) Union runs a daily race with its morning rival; but is beaten in point of quality, if not always in quantity. I wish our English provincial press would take a leaf out of the book of their transatlantic compeers, and report with as much fulness and appreciation the religious gatherings in their districts. Mr. Moody understands the power of the press; whenever the two dailies represented here insert a full report of any special sermon or address, he guarantees them a largely increased circulation, and the truth thus finds its way into many thousands of homes where, probably, the voice of the living preacher is never heard. Dr. West's address on "The First Resurrection," and Mr. Rainsford's Sunday morning sermon on "Union with Christ," have both been scattered broadcast in this way. Mr. T. J. Shanks, the experienced and genial acting editor of the New York Weekly Witness, is here also, and furnishes his journal with full notes of the proceedings. Rev. Wilbur Crafts capably represents the New York Independent, while Dr. Wayland, editor of the Philadelphia National Baptist, is correspondent for his own journal. My friend Mr. S. E. Bridgeman, of Northampton, supplies various influential weeklies with a lively outline sketch of the proceedings. Besides the more professional reporters here, many of the friends are taking notes from which to supply accounts to their local journals, and thus the good things of the Conference go round an ever widening circle.

SUNDAY'S MEETINGS.

The great attraction of Sunday morning was a sermon by Mr. Rainsford. In his previous addresses Mr. Rainsford had not attempted much solid exposition, confining himself largely to the lighter vein of illustrating topics by incidents from his extended ministerial repertoire, told with exquisite dramatic skill and effect. In this sermon, however, he evolved some very high and precious doctrine as to the life of the believer and its unassailable security. Mr. Moody appeared to have got a wonderful lift from the discourse, judging from the unction of his prayer at its close. One of the most observant and intelligent Christians at the Conference remarked to me that the sermon was one of the few he has heard when he wished the preacher had not stopped so soon. I venture to think Mr. Rainsford's genial presence, his rich unfolding of the treasures of God's Word, and his inimitable faculty of story-telling, will be long remembered with pleasure by the attenders at this Convocation.

MR. RAINSFORD'S SERMON

was founded on Col. iii. 3, 4. I must content myself, considering the pressure on your space, with giving some extracts from the latter portion of the discourse :—

When the Lord was about to lay Himself down upon the altar, what do we find Him saying, as He whispered into his Father's ear and his Father's heart his dying request? Ah! it was a request for union between Himself and his people, and union between themselves. Oh, shame upon us that we do not manifest that union more than we do! "Father, I will that all who believe in Me through the word of my disciples may be one with Me." He does not say as the branches are one with the vine, or as the husband is one with the wife, or as the members in the body are one—no: He gives us these illustrations to help our poor weak faith. But when He speaks to his Father, He speaks of a union that only Himself and his Father understood anything about. So He says, "That they all may be one, as Thou, Father, art in Me and I in Thee, that the world may believe that Thou hast loved them as Thou hast loved Me." Oh, do you believe it, poor soul?

Now, if it is a fact that the Lord Jesus Christ has had his prayer answered—I suppose no one will doubt it—and that all who believe upon Him are, according to his own heart and to the Father's heart, in union with Him, then, see the consequences that follow from this. I can never be alone. I have joys, but I have them not all to myself, for He rejoices with me. I have sorrows, but I cannot monopolise them; Jesus knows them and sympathises with me in them. I have temptations, but He is touched with the feeling of them; for He was in all points tempted like myself, yet without sin, that I might have a merciful High Priest, and might go to Him with confidence and present my petition to Him. In this life of loneliness He is with me wherever I go. Lying down on my bed He is beside me. Rising in the morning He is with me. Walking through the weary paths of life He is with me. We cannot be separated, otherwise this union is not true. I used to sin, but when I sinned I sinned against my own soul. We cannot do that now; we cannot sin without sinning against Jesus. That is enough to keep us from sin, is it not? Oh that his love were more shed abroad in our hearts, that we might find what a sacred thing this union with Him is!

No matter what your circumstances are, Jesus is with you. You may not realise it; would to God that you did! But whether you do or whether you do not, it is the truth of God that He is never separated from his people. But that is the half of it only. If it is the will of my heavenly Father that all who believe in Jesus are one with Him, as He is with the Father; nothing that concerns Him can be matter of concern to Himself alone. Only think of it. And if that be so, nothing that concerns me can be matter of concern to myself alone. He is interested in all that concerns me, and I am interested in all that concerns Him, or there is no union. Now, you will see the point of my text. The Lord died to put away sin by the sacrifice of Himself, but He that died unto sin once now liveth unto God. That death was not for Himself only, or at all. I have an interest in that death, and I died when He died. I was crucified when Christ was crucified. The bond that condemned my soul to death was nailed to his cross; it was blotted out, and never can be charged against me. He went down into the grave. Think of those hours while in the grave. Think of the silence in heaven. Think of the silence in hell—expecting what the issue would be. Was that sacrifice enough to indicate God's justice and to satisfy God's law? Yes. Death could not hold Him. He went up to his Father and our Father, to his God and our God. He sits now upon the throne, You remember what it says in Ephesians ii.: "He hath raised us up together, and hath made us to sit together in heavenly places in Christ Jesus." Have you got hold of that? You have died legally, and the law has no claim upon you. You could not add to it if you would. God does not want any further expiation for sin. Christ's resurrection is receipt in full for all the just claim of the law upon you. The Holy Ghost has come and given you a blank cheque upon God's fulness He writes his name to it, and you have only to put in what you want, and send it back by faith and prayer, and God will honour it. It is all in Jesus, and all for you. As it has pleased God that in Him should all fulness dwell, so He is pleased that of his fulness all we should receive, and grace for grace.

THE HIDDEN LIFE.

But what about your life? That is a very wonderful thing. "Your life is hid with Christ in God." Some people talk of the want of assurance of the security of the believer. Just think what this verse states: "Your life is hid with Christ in God." Well, then, if it is, I have not got it; and if I have not got it, I cannot lose it. Is not that plain? Some people think they will lose it. Oh, blessings on his holy name! it is hid in the safest place in the universe. It was too dearly purchased for God to leave it to us to keep. Why, if He did, the devil would soon get hold of it somehow. God gave Adam his life to keep, and how long did he keep it? I heard a story once of a poor fool. He was attending a Sunday-school that was being examined for a premium. This boy attended the school, but he never answered any questions. A neighbouring clergyman came to examine the school. He was greatly vexed at finding this boy there, and, indeed, he lost his temper over it—the more shame to him! At last he said, "My boy, have you got a soul?" "No," said the boy. "Well, it is a strange thing to place among intelligent children a fellow who says he has got no soul." The poor boy evidently thought he had made a mess of it, and did not exactly know how to clear the matter up. At length he said, "I had a soul once." "I never heard the like of that," said the clergyman. The poor boy stammered out, "I had a soul once, but it was a very troublesome thing to keep. I heard of one Jesus Christ who promised to take care of it, so I gave it to Him to look after, and now I have no soul." Suppose, for argument's sake, that the devil were let loose from the bottomless pit upon this world; he might take you and me and make a sad hash of us, if it pleased the Lord to allow him to do it. But he would be just as far off as ever from getting at our life. He would have to get up to where the Redeemer sits on the throne, ever living to make intercession for all who come to God by Him. No great fear of the believer's life, you may depend upon it. Our life is hid with Christ in God.

Shall I ever see it? Yes, that I shall. What says the Apostle? "When Christ who is our life shall appear." Ah, yes, the only begotten Son of God, the brightness of the Father's glory, and the express image of his person, worshipped by angels, the majesty of the universe, is the life of this poor, unworthy sinner. "When He shall appear." Oh, brethren, are you longing for that day? You remember as He went up on high from the slopes of Olivet with the convoy of angels, two of them came back and told the disciples not to be too troubled: "This same Jesus, whom ye have seen go up into heaven, shall in like manner come again, even as ye have seen Him go away." He is only waiting for the accomplishment of the number of his elect to take them to Himself, that where He is, there they shall be also. Are you watching for the dawn of that day? "Behold, I show you a mystery. We shall not all sleep, but we shall all be changed, in a moment, in the twinkling of an eye, at the last trump: for the trumpet shall sound and the dead shall be raised incorruptible, and we shall be changed. For this corruptible must put on incorruption (thank God for that word "must") and this mortal must put on immortality. . . . Then shall be fulfilled the saying that is written, death is swallowed up in victory." That terrible enemy, death, that like a great vortex has been swallowing up our loved ones, shall be surrounded by a wider gulf and shall itself be engulfed. Beholding no longer as in a glass darkly, but face to face, no veil between, no condemnation, and no separation, we shall be changed into his image from glory to glory. The Spirit of the Lord who has been our Teacher, our Comforter, and our Guide shall clasp us into a union that is inconceivable and inexpressible. For, verily Christ's prayer shall be manifestly fulfilled. He and all those who believe on Him shall be one, not only as branches with the vine, not only as wife and husband, as members of the body, but as God the Father is one with God the Son, to the glory of his grace, and to the praise of his glory.

Mr. Moody preached to a crowded congregation in the afternoon on "The New Birth." The false refuges and spurious substitutes in which men trust were mercilessly exposed, and the hearers shut up to a simple acceptance of the gift of salvation. Previous to this service, Major Whittle had held a speedily extemporised Sunday-school. While the people were gathering, the Mount Hermon male choir, which, though small, is a very efficient one, sang the Gospel, and Mr. Sankey gave another new song—not, however, his own composition—"The Handwriting on the Wall." After Mr. Moody's discourse, earnest remarks, following up his teaching on the new birth, were offered by Major Whittle, Mr. H. Moore, of Boston, and Dr. West. The latter answered some questions bearing on the freeness of the Gospel offer, somewhat in the manner of Mr. Moody's well-remembered dialogues with Mr. Rainsford at Wandsworth a couple of years ago.

Another large meeting was held in the evening, conducted by Mr. Moore. He is a merchant in the city of Boston, but an earnest evangelistic worker. He goes out regularly, with a few helpers, to the villages and small towns that flank that city, and I am informed, on the best authority, that there are few more successful soul-winners in the United States. Under his vigorous presidency this evening meeting had a varied programme, comprising song, prayer, personal testimonies, and multiplied Gospel appeal. Quite a number testified their desire for prayer. Services were also held during the day at the Congregational Church and at the hamlet of South Vernon, two miles distant, so that the sacred day was a very busy, and I trust a fruitful, one. The dwellers in and around Northfield attended the service in large numbers, much to the delight of Mr. Moody, who has their spiritual welfare much at heart. He earnestly asked them to attend some of the remaining Conference meetings, even though they should have to drop their ordinary pursuits for the time. They would have suffered nothing temporally at the end of the year, and the spiritual benefit received might be incalculable.

SIXTH DAY—MONDAY, AUGUST 9.

Mr. Moody, as everybody knows, detests programmes about as much as resolutions. This enables him to adapt himself to circumstances, and to utilise any speaking talent that may unexpectedly appear on the scene. From the hearer's point of view, the plan has one disadvantage; people who are anxious to hear a favourite speaker are sometimes disappointed in finding the platform occupied by others, while on the other hand they may be absent, when they would wish to have been present. It is impossible, however, to arrange so that everybody will be perfectly pleased, and Mr. Moody's method gives an element of variety and spontaneity that is preferable in many respects to a cut and dried programme.

A MORNING WITH PAUL.

At this first session of the second half of the Conference we spent a little while in company with the great Apostle of the Gentiles, through the medium of the seventh and eighth chapters of his Epistle to the Roman believers. Our guides were Dr. West and Mr. Rainsford. Dr. West expressed the opinion that no literature in any language can equal the Epistle to the Romans; it discusses sin and salvation. In a conversation with him that morning, Mr. Rainsford made the remark, which struck him very forcibly, that the law could neither justify a sinner, nor sanctify a saint. This remark indicated the two struggles spoken of in these chapters: first, the struggle of the sinner to be saved by the deeds of the law; and, next, the struggle of the believer to attain sanctification by his own efforts at well-doing. The Doctor's argument ran along the well-established lines, and there is no need to reproduce it in detail. Christ is the end of the law for justifying righteousness. He has cancelled our guilt by his death on the cross. It is only by an acceptance and appropriation of his finished work that we can be justified in the sight of God and enjoy peace with God. After briefly touching on the second truth that sanctification comes through the same channel as justification—by looking to Jesus and his perfect obedience—Dr. West gave some touching details of personal experience—how he had learned the lesson of conformity to the will of God by passing through the furnace of bereavement and affliction. From this vantage ground he had a right to urge on all believers the duty and privilege not only of submitting to and acquiescing in the appointments of God, but of concurring in them and even of giving thanks every time the chastening rod is applied.

Mr. Rainsford followed. Dr. West, he said, had left him "to sail the audience through the eighth chapter," but he would as soon think of sailing across the Atlantic in five minutes. It is evident, he said, that the Lord has here provided a remedy for all the difficulties referred to in the seventh. God presents to us an object in which He has condensed all his fulness. As we gaze at this object—God's only begotten Son—and see the grace that is in Him, everything else, even our faith, is overshadowed and forgotten. The wonderful story of Moses in the desert mount was graphically rehearsed, leading up to the point that, though the first reception of the ten tables did not have any visible effect on Moses, when he came down a second time, after the Lord had made all his goodness to pass before him, the great leader of the people was transfigured, and his face shone with the reflected glory of Jehovah, though he knew it not. This fact brings out into striking contrast the effect of the law and the Gospel. Faith is the power for sanctification and for justification. "The just shall live by his faith," and Christ is the object of our faith; in Him there is all fulness, and grace for grace. Through faith we lay hold of God's strength. That does not mean simply his muscular or physical power; it means the principle that actuates and moves his heart. Have you ever thought of this—that we have only to bring our need and poverty to Him, in order to array all his powers on our behalf? He cannot resist the plea that comes from our helplessness and need. We read of Jacob's wrestling with the angel, but it was really the angel who wrestled with Jacob. God had been striving with Jacob all his life, and he had been resisting God, but when Jacob came into a position of utter weakness and self-helplessness, then God blessed him, and caused him to have favour with Esau, his wronged and offended brother. So the fulness of God's grace for sanctification is for every poor soul that comes to an end of self, and hangs only on the almightiness of God. It is our privilege to be God's freemen. If the Son make you free, ye shall be free indeed, whatever be your circumstances. Then there is the promise that we shall be temples of the Holy Ghost. How many a sin would we avoid if we only believed, on the warrant of Him who never lies, that it is our privilege to be the dwelling-place and the abiding-place of the Holy Spirit of God. You may grieve Him, but He will never leave you, if He once takes possession of your heart.

Then look at the glorious teaching we find in this chapter as to our portion. Led by the Spirit, we are sons of God, and heirs of God and joint heirs with Christ. He inherits nothing from the Father that He does not share with us. The Spirit not only witnesses with our spirit that we are the children of God, but He maketh intercession within us. We often do not know how to pray; there is more real prayer in an unuttered groan of the Spirit within us, and it is more eloquent in the ears of God, than all the long-winded phrases in which we tell Him how great and almighty He is. Think, too, of the glorious prospect we have here of the redemption of the body—that body which has been a source of such trouble to us.

In closing, Mr. Rainsford pointed out that in the closing eight verses of the chapter we have eight things that we should say—"What shall we say, then?" &c. The conclusion of the whole matter is that nothing shall be able to separate us from the love of God which is in Christ Jesus.

WAYS OF DOING GOOD.

This was the subject of Monday afternoon's session, which Mr. Moody, in his announcement, called a novel one. His own introductory words were full of the spirit of the occasion. The great aim of this Convention is to strengthen workers that they may go away and do more and better work. A good way of inciting others to engage in work is to tell them of what is being done. The great revival in America in 1857, which swept over half a million of people into the kingdom of God, was spread by one church hearing of what another was doing. There are many persons in our churches who are sound asleep. If we can stir up some of those who have attended this Conference to undertake some kind of work for the Lord, it will not have been in vain. If we come here simply to hear the Word, and feed upon it, without turning it to account, we shall soon be afflicted with spiritual gout. The surest way for a person to grow in the Christian life is to be constantly at work. Mr. Moody referred to the remarkable outbreak of missionary zeal at the Mount Hermon Summer School, and asked why there should not be many going out from this Conference to foreign fields. The first disciples, however, were commanded to begin at Jerusalem, and then to go to Judea and Samaria before they scattered to the uttermost parts of the earth. So let us begin at home, in the family, and in the church. There are many who cannot do great things; but, if we do what we can, God will qualify us for something higher. Let us all keep at it 365 days in the year, and a good deal will be done. If we cannot speak to crowds, let us try and do good to the ones and twos. Don't wait for something to "turn up," but go and turn up something yourself. There are some men who never know what it is to grow cold in spirit; they are red hot all the time. There is a man in Pittsburg who gives away 500 dollars a day; he spends three hours every day in looking into cases of need, and relieving them. His family goes away in the summer, but he stays in town all the time that he may attend to this. When I was there I took my place in the file of suppliants; I wanted something for Mount Hermon. When I had the chance to talk to him I asked him if he never got discouraged in the work, and if some of the people he helped were not ungrateful? Said he, "I never look for gratitude; I just do it for the Master." Why, he didn't have any time to get cast down; he is too busy to have doubts. Many people would say they cannot give away 500 dollars a day. Let them give themselves, which is something far better. Money of itself is of small account in the sight of God.

Reports, remarks, and suggestions followed, more or less pointed. A pastor told how a wood-sawyer spoke about Christ to all who paid him for his wood; the pastor of his church had the names of fifty persons who thus became Christians. The speaker advocated visitation committees, and related an instance where a deacon who had never spoken for the Lord was led out into active personal work.

One told of a dying woman who urged a lady living near her to attend a Gospel meeting. She went, and the news she heard there of the death of her neighbour was the means of awakening her to soul concern.

In an agricultural town the minister invited five of his neighbouring ministers each to come and preach one sermon in a school-house at three o'clock p.m. on a week day. He had circulars printed announcing the fact, and circulated in all the families. This was done by zealous Christian women. The novelty of having a preaching service on a week-day afternoon in summer, five days in a week, drew together all the people, to see what it all meant. As one result, there were over thirty conversions in that sparsely settled district, and the pastors who preached carried back to their churches a coal from the fire that had been kindled in that little school-house on the hillside.

One man read from a bit of paper, carried in his Bible for years. It was entitled "A Stray Shot." In 1857 Mr. Spurgeon was to preach in a large building in London, erected for the purpose. He went down to arrange about his platform. While standing about, he repeated, in a loud voice, "Behold the Lamb of God, that taketh away the sins of the world." A workman, busy in the building, heard the Gospel message, and it was blessed to the salvation of his soul.

One man said there was a great lack of expressed sympathy in our churches. A minister preached a sermon one Sunday on "The Recognition of Friends in Heaven." A young woman met him as he went out of church, telling him she wished now he would preach another on "The Recognition of Friends on Earth," as she had been a member of that church for two years and a half, and not a person in the church had spoken to her.

One lady does much good placing tracts in railroad stations and other public places.

One widow living in a large city, having lost her only son, and wishing to do something for some one in memory of him, told the president of the Y.M.C.A. if any young man, a stranger in the city, came there to live, to invite him on a certain evening to take tea with her. She followed such with her kindness, and, if they were not Christians, tried to lead them to Christ. Let Christian ladies go and do likewise.

Dr. Dowkontt, of the New York Medical Mission, gave some thrilling incidents of the work under his charge. Many Roman Catholics, and also many of the criminal population, attend the four dispensaries, where they receive gratuitous medical relief and hear the words of this life. A drinking man came to be treated for a sprained arm. He was conversed with, became deeply impressed by the power of the truth, and has now been a deacon in a Presbyterian church for two years. A poor wandering girl, suffering from consumption, was brought in and restored to her sorrowing relatives. This New York Medical Mission has made rapid progress since it was commenced by Dr. Dowkontt a few years ago. There are now sixteen students in the institute preparing for medical mission work. Several who studied in it are now in the field, among them being Dr. W. Summers, who is one of Bishop Taylor's Central African band.

Mr. Rainsford gave some details of the good work now going on in the hall at Wandsworth, built by Dr. Watney, on the spot where Messrs. Moody and Sankey's Gospel hall stood. He spoke of his daughter's Bible-class, consisting of one hundred and fifty working men, begun four or five years ago, and which is now held in the hall. When any Gospel effort is to be made, these men take hold of the announcements and scatter them about, so that the thing becomes widely known. Mr. Rainsford also told of his own work in connection with Belgrave Chapel, making special mention of his week evening class for servants which have been greatly blessed. Some very striking incidents he related of the way in which he had been enabled to carry the Gospel message into the homes of the aristocracy who reside, in large numbers, in the neighbourhood of his church.

Major Whittle told of a man in Chicago who keeps himself in the background, but who does much good by publishing the Word of God, either as advertisements in the daily papers, or as leaflets from the Revised Version of the New Testament, which are distributed in the streets, and from house to house, by widows.

Mrs. Palmer described what is being done by the Women's Christian Temperance Union, and also by the Flower Mission.

Mr. Moody said he knew a man not far away who supports several evangelists who go about the villages preaching. He also told of a lady who attended the last Convention, and was greatly stirred up. As a token of gratitude, she gave a hundred dollars to support a poor boy at Mount Hermon for a year. She also employed a young lady to visit some of the railway depôts in New York, and watch for young girls coming in from the country, in order to save them, if possible, from the temptations of the great city. In his closing prayer, Mr. Moody pleaded that God would give all to have a passion for souls.

OUR SAILORS AT LIVERPOOL.

In the year 1856 a Society, called "The Missions to Seamen," was formed in London, under the presidency and patronage of the Bishops of the English Church. Its income during the first year of its existence was about £2000, but in 1884 it had increased to £23,000; and the Society had chaplains and agents in almost every seaport in the United Kingdom. In 1857 "The Mersey Mission to Seamen," a branch of this Society, was established. It began with boats, which proceeded to the ships lying in the Mersey. But this was a work of much difficulty and even peril, as the boats were very frail, and when the missionaries reached the ships they were often maltreated by the crews. Happily this state of things has now been altered.

In 1875 a mission hall was opened in Price-street, Park-lane, and soon after several other rooms were started in the same locality by the Society. In time the accommodation at Price-street was found to be inadequate, owing to the ever-increasing number that frequented the rooms, and it was decided to build an Institute for Seamen. Great difficulty was experienced by the Committee in procuring a suitable site, and it was not until the Corporation commenced their extensive improvements in Hanover-street and Paradise-street, that an eligible site was obtained. It cost £3690, and the contract for the building amounted to £4430. The Institute was formally opened on December 10, 1885, by Mr. Ralph Brocklebank.

There are also mission rooms at the north and south end of the City, Bootle, Birkenhead, Runcorn, Garston, and Ellesmere Port, which are in a flourishing condition. The services at Runcorn, Garston and Ellesmere Port are almost entirely attended by flatmen and canalboat-men whose children not only receive spiritual instruction, but are also taught to read and write. The work at Ellesmere Port grew to such an extent that the mission room was found to be totally inadequate to the requirement. This difficulty was met by the Shropshire Union Canal Company, which in June, 1884, presented the Society with an iron mission hall, capable of holding 230 persons.

The income of "The Mersey Mission to Seamen" does not exceed £1400 a year, and it supports a chaplain and five missionaries. The Rev. T. Patrick, M.A., is the chaplain, and he is ably assisted at the Institute by Mr. T. Williams, the missionary, who has for many years been an earnest worker in Liverpool.

There are services at the Seamens' Institute, Hanover-street, daily, Saturdays excepted. The Institute has a fine and commanding appearance. It contains seven or eight rooms, and the lower room in which the services are held is well lighted, lofty, and comfortable. A band of Christian workers (voluntary) visit the ships in dock on Sundays between three and four o'clock, and invite the sailors to attend the services.

Another important part of the work is the provision of profitable reading for the sailors in their quarters at sea. Quite recently, a sailor called at the Institute to express his gratitude for a parcel that had been put on board his ship, and, in asking for a second, placed £1 on the table in payment. During last year 2367 such parcels of books were distributed. There are at the present time eight mission rooms, working under the auspices of this Society; and the aggregate attendance at the services for 1885 was 69,972.

The Mersey Mission to Seamen is almost entirely dependent on voluntary subscriptions, and, owing to the wide area which it covers in its efforts to win souls for Christ, the expenses, naturally, are heavy, and help is needed for the efficient maintenance and extension of the Society's work. It has lost one of its most earnest and large-hearted supporters in the person of the late Honorary Secretary, Mr. Alexander Balfour, a man whose right hand knew not what his left was doing, and whose whole life was spent in endeavouring to alleviate the sufferings of the masses." Further information respecting the Mission may be obtained from the Chaplain, Rev. T. Patrick, M.A., Seamen's Institute, Hanover-street, Liverpool.

TASMANIA.—In a letter recently received from Mrs. Reed, of Launceston, she says:—"The Lord is giving us much joy in seeing his cause prosper, and many souls turning to Him. Our sister, Mrs. Baeyertz, a Christian Jewess, is labouring amongst us while we await the arrival of our new pastor, Mr. George Soltau.

GOSPEL WORK ON THE CONTINENT.

By Miss CATHERINE BOOTH.

May I tell your readers something of what the Lord is doing in the towns and villages I have lately visited? Early in July I was in the Department of the Doubs, my first stopping place being Montecheroux. Our work here began, and is carried on, in an old barn. Half of it is seated, then a great partition comes, and beyond hay is deposited, and the people stand.

It was at eight a.m. one Friday morning that I witnessed a scene never to be forgotten. Ten converted drunkards rose to testify. One was a tall man with a pale face. He spoke with trembling, saying for twenty-five years he had been a miserable drunkard, often beating his wife and children. On the arrival of the Army he gave his heart to God, and for two years he had been kept. Another said: "You all know me; I have been as low as my comrade. I sold my clothes for drink, once my boots from my feet, and was obliged to return from St. Hippolyte barefooted." Yet another said, with tears: "I was the worst of all. I sold six watches in one year for drink (being a watchmaker). One evening, on entering the house drunk, I took a knife to kill my wife and children. My father was a fearful drunkard, and committed suicide. I followed the same road. Once I tried to stop myself, but fell again, and for seven weeks I was never sober. God stopped me in one of these meetings, and now I am delivered."

Two young women are in charge here, and are greatly blessed. The barn, the birthplace of many souls, costs 48 francs a year (£1 18s. 6d.); then two little rooms, with bare necessities of life, for a little more money. The village and soldiers are very poor, and our officers find difficulty in paying their way. One of them comes from Jersey, and earned from £80 to £100 a year as a first-class milliner.

I next visited Beaucourt, where there is a large factory, employing 6000 hands, 2000 coming from the neighbouring villages. Many of these young men attend our meetings, but the little hall holds 200 only. It was formerly a house consisting of a cellar and eight rooms, four below and four above, and known as the worst house in the village. The proprietor got saved, and gave us the house and garden. She charges us nothing—a free gift. The dear little old woman is saved, and her sister also, and are so happy to think their house is used for salvation. As it was impossible to find a larger hall during my visit, we did the best we could. Still, it was pitiable to see the crowds outside, night after night, listening through the open windows to catch some words. We had glorious seasons that I can never forget. One young man, who smashed the windows of our hall, and gave us much trouble, has confessed, and sought forgiveness. Another, who smoked as many as twenty-five cigarettes a day, was found afterwards reading his Bible in the wood. Another young Romanist, of eighteen years of age, has been beaten, and even tied up, to prevent his coming to the meetings. Several of them, I hear, intend going off to do their military service a year or two earlier, so as to be free to offer themselves for our "Training Home." I never so regretted leaving a place, and look forward to returning with joy.

We are soon on our way to Bienne, where it will be remembered our hall was completely wrecked, leaving us to find some 3000 francs for the damages. Having no hall, for no one in the town could be found to shelter Salvationists, Mr. B——, a gentleman who met me at the station here, lends us his large dining-room, where one of the officers from Neuville holds meetings every Sunday, and souls are saved, he tells me, nearly every time. As we drive along through the glorious scenery in this garden land, he recounts to me how terrible has been the persecution, pointing out spots where the people have fled for refuge, being stoned, beaten, and chased without mercy. Three blessed meetings follow in this house. How refreshing it is to be able to encourage my comrades face to face. One young man here was locked up in an asylum for fifty-two days; his father sent him because he said he was saved. The doctor signed a false declaration. The young man went in uniform, and talked to the poor lunatics of salvation. When his father came and asked him what he would do if he let him out, he replied, "Apply at once Paris to be accepted for the work." He arrives this month to be trained for an officer. There are many more cases, but space forbids the recital.

From Bienne I pass to Neuchatel. Mr. Convert, from whose grounds and house I was taken to prison three years ago, again received me. A special meeting was called to consider what can be done to procure a hall, as now we are banished to a small room, forty minutes' walk out of the town, which has greatly hindered our work. All are agreed on the great good accomplished, and desirous that we should have a central place in the town. Many will give to the best of their ability. One of our poor soldiers had a vine; he sold it for 400f. (£16) and gave it as the first offering for our hall!

Another meeting is held at Val de Ruz, and I pass to Geneva, where I met our brave officers for an hour or two's encouragement, and we start for the south of France by night train. At five in the morning we arrive at Nîmes; after an hour or two's rest a long coach drive, and the village of St. Jean du Gard is in sight. Our hall here holds 300 people, the windows opening on a large garden on either side. It was very crowded, many listening through the windows. The hall, with two living rooms overhead, costs 300f. (£12) a year. It has become a centre of salvation to all around. The work at St. André took its root here, and some of the worst sinners have been saved in that little village hidden away in the mountains.

Once more we are en route for Ganges, where a wonderful work has broken out, and the whole town has been moved. The meetings were crowded—above all, the one held in the casino. It was beautiful to hear the songs of Zion rising from the redeemed of the Lord, where the devil's servants had sung and played. Infidels, scoffers, and all classes were present. At times there was an attempt to disturb, but it failed, and victory was on our side. Many tears were shed as the officers renewed their consecration. Some remarkable cases of conversion were found here.

Our time is up, and we are off again for the Vigan. The ground is very hard here. It is extremely painful to see how many respectably dressed young men laugh and mock at salvation. Yet we are glad they come to the meetings at all. In spite of the indifference, a real work has been done. I left the Vigan for Valle Rouge, where Pasteur de Watteville and his wife are labouring in an isolated spot, and doing a work for eternity. Here 1000 people packed into a large barn met me. The attention was admirable, in spite of the crush. Our hymns are much loved here. Our friends have only to go forward to victory.

Calvisson is the next place of call. The soldiers had been gathered from several villages round, and we have a very hearty, encouraging time. A word in passing about our Rescue Home. I saw E—— here; she is placed with Pasteur M——. Poor E—— has had a remarkable life, being turned on to the streets at nine years of age by her own mother. She travelled with a kind of circus, who made a good thing out of this child, and from town to town she passed, asking if the Salvation Army was there. At last she heard they were in Geneva, and escaped one day never to return. She is only seventeen now, though she looks more. I believe she will make a soul-winner. She loves much, because much has been forgiven. Will your readers help us to rescue hundreds like E——?

We pass on to Vauvert, one of the hardest corps we have. One gentleman, who has himself been revived through our people, told me there had been a revival in this town forty years ago under a living minister; but, since a liberal parson had occupied the pulpit, there had been a terrible falling off. Liberalism, he said, has invaded all this valley, and the consequence is the masses are plunged in indifference as to religion. Bull-fighting goes on Sunday after Sunday, at which savage, cruel scenes almost all the town assists, Protestants among the number! In spite of the bull-fight, fête, and intense heat, we had a good Sunday—from 8.30 a.m. till 11 p.m. The evening meeting was particularly memorable; tears flowed down many faces, and conviction was strong. Will you pray for the soldiers here? Victory is ours through the blood of the Lamb, and I have faith for this post, and for all our other hard posts.

In concluding, let me say that the devotion and self-sacrifice of my comrades have rejoiced my heart beyond measure, and borne precious fruit for eternity. Not only have souls been saved, but the worldly and lukewarm have been revived and quickened to action. The fact that we are not paid for our labour has helped us much among a people who have with reason become disgusted with a selfish and interested religion. This fact has astonished and given us the key to their hearts, perhaps more than any other.

We are sadly in need of help, specially for France. My heart longs, after what I have seen these last two months, to go forward where the people are calling for us, and where the need is so great. We are this month opening again our Training Homes in Paris, where we receive the most promising number of cadets, both men and women. Will you help us to feed and train them? Day by day we are gaining ground; Catholics and infidels flock to hear us. Although there is still much hard fighting, dark struggles with the enemy of souls, tears, persecution, "evil reports," and suffering to face and to go through, still I know we shall soon see a glorious army of fully consecrated brave soldiers, who will, by all their conduct proclaim "Jesus," and be missionaries to their own country. We want to train at least 100 men and women this winter, and send them forth. Please send your gifts to Mr. Percy Clibborn, 187, Quai Valmy, Paris, France.

A HOSPITAL FOR CYPRUS.—A gentleman who has settled at Kyrenia, on the north coast of Cyprus, has purchased the best building site in the town, and will present it for a hospital. There is now no hospital in the district, and there is no good one in the island. I am endeavouring to raise £1000 in England to build on the site offered. Will friends assist this project for aiding the sick and needy of Cyprus? The hospital will, of course, be open to Turk and Greek alike.

GEORGE MULLER'S LIFE-WORK.

For many years has the story of George Müller's life-work shed its fragrance, not only upon the Christian's path, but upon the world. The story of the foundation of the Orphan Houses on Ashley Down, Bristol, and of the wonderful way in which they have been sustained, has often been told. In that story, rehearsed in cottage and palace, men are reminded of an unseen, yet ever-present Almighty Power, who, as a loving Father watches over his children, caring for them in regard even to the smallest details of their life. And in that story, again, men are shown the power of prayer, and how lovingly the Father God answers the prayers of his children. It is of the very essence of Mr. Müller's writings, and of this as of all previous reports, that he strives "to show how, simply in answer to believing prayer, God is pleased to help us to meet our very heavy expenses year after year."

The total amount received by prayer and faith, in the fifty-two years since the establishment of the Scriptural Knowledge Institution by Mr. Müller, has been £1,036,507, and 101,236 persons have been taught in the sixty-eight schools entirely supported by the funds of the Institution, besides the tens of thousands benefited in the schools assisted by its funds, while 5298 pupils are now in the first-named schools, and no fewer than 210,270 Bibles, and an enormous number of Testaments, portions, books, pamphlets, and tracts in many languages have also been circulated by its instrumentality. This is a grand total—truly a mighty stream from the boundless ocean of God's truth that ever through the ages has been watering all countries, refreshing all peoples. At the commencement of the year, so states the report, there was but £186 14s. 2½d. in hand, not nearly enough for one single week. Then from America, and various places at home and abroad, came amounts large and small — at one time, £5, "from one who sends help as God is pleased to prosper him in his business;" at another, £5, from one who had promised to devote this sum to the Lord's work if He would graciously remove some pending difficulty; at another, £1, from a widow who for many years had sent 10s. for the orphans; at another, £1 11s. 6d., "being a penny a day for a year, and a trifle over for reports;" at another, £1 10s. 10d., "being the contents of a deposit account in the Savings Bank, the same having belonged successively to three little boys now in heaven;" at another, £1, "instead of insuring three stacks of hay and fifty sheep," and so on; so that through the months there was sufficient for all needs, and at the end of the year (May 26, 1886) in all £32,179 2s. 5d. had been received for the various objects of the Institution. These, besides the maintenance of the Orphan Homes, in which last year 2110 orphans were in training, comprehend the support, complete or partial, of many day and Sunday-schools in various parts of the country, the circulation of the Scriptures and of books and tracts, and the large contributions to missionary work.

Not the least interesting portion of the report is that which describes the operations under this latter head, with the accounts given by some of the one hundred and forty-four labourers in word and doctrine in various parts of the world, of their labours and the effect thereof. One rejoices to meet with much firmness in the Chinese converts, and over many baptisms; another, for the blessing which has attended him in striving against the opium curse, in seeking, that is, to cure those who have fallen victims to its malign influences; others tell of how the Gospel is making its way in India, of Brahmin youths brought over to a knowledge of the true God; and others of work in Madrid during the terrible visitation of cholera last year, and of how, no farther away than La Coruña the work is hindered and hated by the Papists. From many other parts of the great mission-field, which, indeed, is white unto harvest—hundreds and thousands of human souls are passing away into eternity every day—there are accounts more or less encouraging; but, as one reads, the prayer should go from the heart, that the Lord of the harvest would send forth more labourers into his harvest. Upon this branch of the work, £5368 17s. 1d. was last year expended.

Altogether, we have in this report a record of Christian work for which we are devoutly thankful, and the earnest prayer of every reader, we are sure, will be that this honoured servant of God and his beloved wife, who are now labouring in Australia, may yet long be spared, "that they may adorn the doctrine of God our Saviour in all things." The report may be obtained of Messrs. Nisbet & Co., Berners-street, London, W. (price 6d.); but communications for Mr. Müller should be addressed to the Orphan House, 3, Ashley Down, Bristol.

ORPHAN HOMES OF SCOTLAND.

TUESDAY last week was observed as Thanksgiving Day at the Orphan Homes of Scotland, Bridge of Weir, Renfrewshire. The visitors present were numerous, and included contingents from Glasgow, Paisley, Greenock, and other places in the West of Scotland. Eight new buildings have been erected to give the requisite increased accommodation for the great benevolent work of rescuing destitute and neglected children, in which Mr. Quarrier has engaged with so much devotion and success for many years. The Homes comprise twenty-five structures, all well built and admirably equipped for the purposes to which they are appropriated. Among the new buildings are spacious stores, said to be the finest of the kind in any public institution in Scotland. A conservatory, stables, wash-house, &c. A church, seated for 1000 boys and girls; a fully-equipped training-ship, that will lodge a crew of thirty, the gift of a lady; besides four additional cottages and other buildings. Before the commencement of the thanksgiving meeting the visitors were at liberty to inspect all the houses, and the opportunity afforded of acquiring in this way a knowledge of the Institution and its operations was fully taken advantage of.

At the thanksgiving meeting the hall which accommodates 500 persons, was crowded. Mr. J. Campbell White, of Overtoun, occupied the chair, and delivered an address in which he referred to the interesting work in which Mr. Quarrier set his heart, and congratulated him on the increasing success with which it was being carried on. They were met he said to return thanks to God for what had been accomplished in the past, and to pray that the work might in the future be even more fruitful. It was now about fifteen years since Mr. Quarrier began to interest himself in this noble Christian work. There were at present something like 600 children in the Homes there and in the Glasgow Home, and about £60 000 had been expended on property. There had passed through the Homes since they were instituted 2300 children who had been rescued and sent over the sea, and a like number had been sent to situations in this country. They had much cause for thanksgiving that so much good work had been done, for no nobler work could be undertaken.

The dedication services were then conducted by Dr. Andrew Bonar, Dr. Sloan, Rev. George Clazy, and Rev. Mr. Robarts.

Mr. QUARRIER, in addressing the meeting, said his heart was too full to speak all he felt. He thanked them for their kind sympathy. In all men's lives there were some days which were dearer than others, and that day was one of the dearest in his life. It was just over ten years since the estate on which the houses were built, consisting of forty acres, was purchased. After paying for the ground a little money was left, and they set about devising plans for the buildings. Friends came forward, one after another, and erected the cottages. The first consecration meeting was held eight years ago, when three cottages and the central building had been built. The cost of these buildings was something like £10,000. In the next two years property to the value of £10,000 was put up; in the two following years the same sum was expended. That day they were met to consecrate other £20,000 worth of property to the work.

Mr. Quarrier gave some interesting reminiscences of the rescuing of children. Referring to the maintenance of the Homes, he said that at the beginning of this year they had about a fortnight's provision for 500 or 600 children. He was down one week to about £6. All the time he had been connected with the Homes there had generally been just a week's or a fortnight's provisions on hand, but the funds required had always been obtained in time. Recently, when he was lower than at any time for five or six years, he got a letter intimating a legacy of £300, and that just brought the fortnight right again.

It had been said to be a very expensive work. He held that it was the cheapest work in the country. This work could be done for less than £12 per annum for each child, and the parties who made a noise about the expense spent £17 a head to do it, and did not do it half so well. He did not treat the children as paupers. He treated them as he would treat his own boy or girl, and he had done so all along. He did not sit in the parlour and let the children go to the kitchen. He could never move with the work he had got to do if he moved on the line of officialism. Officialism was good enough for institutions set up by law, but that Institution was conducted on lines of Christian benevolence. Besides caring for orphans they had been helping young men and young women, and preaching the Gospel to the poor, and there had been thousands of conversions all through the years the work had been carried on.

Mr. Quarrier defended the course taken in erecting a ship to train boys for seafaring life, on the ground that if our mariners were to be reformed, the best men must be sent into the service. The workers at the Homes were not salaried. They were persons who devoted themselve to the work from their love of it. He wanted other £20,000 before the next thanksgiving day, in order to complete a group of houses giving accommodation for 1000 children. He wished to house there 1000, and in addition 100 in the city, in order that he might be able to rescue two children each day all the year round. This was a national work, and he was hopeful that the means would be provided to enable him to accomplish what he proposed.

SOUTHSEA.—A new feature has been developed in the beach services. As it was not found possible to provide these, as formerly, by the Special Service Mission, they have been taken up and conducted by visitors and young ladies of the place, under the direction of Dr. and Mrs. Jackson. The children listen with deep attention while one youthful Christian after another, with gentle modesty, and yet fervent earnestness, makes her appeal. This work, which has sprung up spontaneously, has every appearance of being largely blessed.

EXE ISLAND MISSION.—In June, 1883, the promoters of this branch of Christian work appointed a colporteur to visit the city of Exeter and surrounding villages with a selection of pure literature. The work so far has been very encouraging, but more good could be accomplished had not the colporteur to walk such long distances, carrying a heavy stock of books; and to remove this difficulty, it is now proposed to provide him with a small Bible-carriage, to enable him to take longer journeys, and a heavier stock of books, without so much physical exertion. The work is entirely unsectarian, and of a pure missionary character. Friends willing to help in this work are invited to communicate with the Hon. Secretary, Mr. W. TOWNSEND, Exe Island Mission, Exeter, Devon.

THERE IS A LITTLE CHURCH in Bohemia, consisting of about thirty believers, among them two Jewish families, all of whom appear to be living souls, who are active in spreading light around them. They are widely scattered, with Popery, Ritualism, and Rationalism on every side. They are now in imminent danger of losing all public ordinances for themselves, as their worthy pastor, M. Vales, undertook the work on a guarantee of a very small stipend for two years, and this term ends with the present year. The people are too poor to maintain their pastor. Rev. Daniel Edward, the veteran missionary to the Jews in Jassy, Lemberg, and, since 1849, in Breslau, appeals for help to supply this great need. His address is 1, Cleasen-strasse, Breslau. It is earnestly hoped that the Lord may move the hearts of some of his people to keep alive this light "shining in a dark place" by offering £100, if it were only for one year. We help those suffering from famine, shall we not do as much to avert a famine of the Word? Mr. COLIN MACKENZIE, 12, Argyll-road, Kensington, W., will gladly answer inquiries or receive contributions.

Notes and Comments.

OUR next issue will contain a portrait and biographical sketch of Sir J. W. Dawson, President of the British Association.

Mr. and Mrs. Ira D. Sankey arrived from America last week, for a short season of rest in this country. Both are in excellent health. Mr. Sankey does not propose to engage in any public evangelistic work during his stay.

Some friends whom we esteem highly in love for their works' sake have thought our republication of Mr. Rees's warning against the delusions of the Agapemone was unwise, because it made known to many that of which otherwise they would have remained in happy ignorance. Ezekiel might have excused himself on the same principle from warning the righteous man. The watchman's orders are, when he seeth the sword come, to blow the trumpet and warn the people; then whosoever heareth the sound of the trumpet, and taketh warning, shall deliver his soul. But if he taketh not warning, if the sword come and take him away, his blood shall be upon his own head. If the watchman see the sword come, and blow not the trumpet, if the sword come and take any person away from among the people, his blood will God require at the watchman's hand; but if he blow the trumpet he hath delivered his soul.

That the warning we have given, and which we may have to repeat with a louder blast of the trumpet, was not unnecessary, is shown by the fact that we have received the following from a correspondent in London :—

> Friends whom I loved and valued are being led astray, and are propagating this false and iniquitous doctrine. In consequence, I have had to cease my connection with a rescue work which has for nearly three years enlisted my warmest sympathies. Those who conduct it have imbibed these errors, and are, I fear, teaching them in "The Home." It has been a real grief to me, and I cannot say how thankful I feel for your timely article, and the pamphlet by Mr. Rees, on the subject.

Other friends have sent to us communications of similar import, and we would earnestly ask our readers, especially in London, Brighton, and Reading, to be on their guard against the introduction of this specious but blasphemous delusion.

Mr. Deck, in the pamphlet alluded to in that of Mr. Rees, said :—

> The following are the propositions put forth by Mr. Prince, as articles of faith, to be received by the Lampeter brethren, on pain of being disunited from him :—
> First.—That he is the Holy Ghost personified.
> Second.—That the Holy Ghost suffered and died in him.
> Third.—That this suffering and death obtained for the Lampeter brethren a ministerial spirit—not the Holy Ghost—but, as Mr. Prince expressed it, "MY SPIRIT," or, as he otherwise called it, "a modification of the Holy Ghost."

The results, since 1845, when Mr. Deck wrote, have been as disastrous and as shocking as might have been expected.

"All the philosophers," even unbelief has been compelled to confess, "have had no perceptible influence on the morals of the street in which they lived; but Jesus Christ has new-created the world."

Several correspondents have written to us with respect to our recent note on the playing of military bands on Sunday, at Dublin; their remarks, however, mainly allude to the Sunday music at St. Stephen's-green, while we referred particularly to the playing in Phœnix Park, as involving greater Sunday labour in the running of tramcars, &c. We regret to learn that the objectionable practice is still in vogue, notwithstanding many protests from the religious portion of the community.

Last week we ventured on the assertion that the evil in the world is growing more evil still. A correspondent of The Pall Mall Gazette supplies a somewhat discouraging illustration of this. He says :—

> It is not competition, but unscrupulous competition which causes the depression of trade. Why, the rascals glory in their shame. Things must, indeed, have reached a pretty pass when people go about openly declaring that honest dealing is incompatible with profit. I happened to mention this matter the other day to a leading member of the London coal trade. He deplored, with me, the condition of things, and proceeded to detail instances of sharp practice which had come under his notice. He mentioned some who never weighed their coals, and consequently sent every sack out with less than its proper complement; others who mixed good with bad. He named trick after trick by which the unwary householder was cheated. Finally, in answer to my entreaties that he should expose the rogues, he declared his belief that the minority of honest men was too small to cope with them. It is the same with every trade.

It used to be a generally accepted proverb that "honesty is the best policy;" but it would seem to be worn out, like many other time-honoured sayings and customs. We hesitate, however, without actual and sufficient proof, to believe that "every trade" is honeycombed with this dishonest dealing.

The Presbyterian Alliance, says The Christian Leader, are requesting the Scottish churches to select delegates for a meeting to be held in October in Edinburgh for the purpose of considering the question of co-operation in the mission field.

A remarkable proof of the value attached by our judges and magistrates to the work of the St. Giles' Christian Mission was seen in recent proceedings at the Middlesex Sessions. On one day three young men on trial for various offences were committed by the presiding judge to the care of Mr. William Wheatley, the Secretary of the Mission, instead of having penalties imposed on them. Human justice never shines more brightly than when it mingles mercy with its operations; but it cannot always do so with safety to the public. In these cases the opportunity was given, the learned judge remarking that the St. Giles' Mission had often rendered great service to young criminals by saving them from the contamination of a jail.

We learn with most profound regret that Mr. George Hatton is still suffering from the nervous exhaustion which for more than twelve months past has necessitated his almost entire withdrawal from the work of the St. Giles' Mission. He is now sojourning at a watering place on the East Coast. We are sure that our readers will join with his congregation at Little Wild-street in their prayers for the restoration to health of their beloved and honoured pastor.

The aggregate income of the Missionary Societies in this country is a million and a quarter. The amount spent on amusements is £12,000,000; on tobacco, £13,000,000; on strong drink, £124,000,000.

27,000 native converts are now employed and paid as evangelists by their own countrymen; and there are 2500 ordained pastors of native congregations. The mission churches double their membership in about twelve years, while the churches at home scarcely double theirs in seventy or eighty.

A Roman Catholic writer, in one of the large Paris journals, records the active, holy life of Madame André in these words: "Her soul was always full of two great passions — faith and benevolence; faith, superb, triumphant, truly Christian; faith, soaring above all sects and all controversies; benevolence, luminous, radiant, of every hour, and extending to all, inexhaustible."

"Many will remember," says one who knew her well, the able Paris correspondent of Evangelical Christendom, "her inviting Reginald Radcliffe to Paris, and the intense joy with which she arranged for his meetings, in one of which her son Alfred, to-day sitting in the French Senate, was converted to God. All will remember the part she took in publishing the revival hymns, which are now in every hymnal in the French language. Every society—religious, missionary, or benevolent—received her joyful subscription. We have witnessed her opening the Protestant weeklies, turning straight to the page usually devoted to appeals for aid, and eagerly deciding the proportion she could delightedly give to each, before reading aught else: a detail well worthy of imitation."

Victor Hugo said :—"When France has learnt to read, do not leave without direction the intellect thus developed; it would be additional disorder. Remember that the most philosophic, the most popular, the most eternal, is Holy Scripture. Therefore, sow all the villages in France with Gospels. A Bible in every house, every cabin! Let every book and every field produce together a moral working. The head of the man of the people, that is the question. That head is full of useful germs. To bring it to maturity and to good account, employ what is most luminous and the best tempered in virtue."

The same Paris correspondent contrasts these sentiments of the popular poet with the printed speech of Hovelaque, speaking in the name of his colleagues, the Municipal Council of Paris, at the inauguration of a monument erected over the remains of the municipal police when victims of duty. "After celebrating with enthusiasm the definite ruin of 'monarchical and Christian ideas,' and the advent of a 'new order of things,' he declared that 'primitive man forged in his ignorance the dream of immortal souls, the dream of future lives, during which good deeds were recompensed and evil punished by some being more or less like man himself. These ideas are evolved, past. To-day we acknowledge that when the group of atoms which constitute the human frame are dispersed, the human being has ceased to exist. Immortality is but the remembrance that survivors and descendants have of men of devoted lives of self-denial!'"

The Christian.

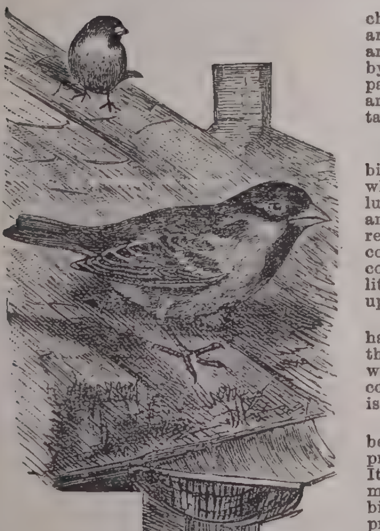
BIRDS OF THE BIBLE

Chats with the Children about Bible Birds.

By James Bowker, F.R.G.S.I.

With Coloured Frontispiece and 29 other Illustrations.

Beautifully Printed on Toned Paper in Red and Black.



"We delight in books of this character. Scripture and Nature are set side by side; and the young are made to see the one illustrated by the other. Fine type makes these pages pleasant to the eye of the old, and simple language adapts it to the taste of the young."
Sword and Trowel.

"Chats with the children about birds mentioned in the Bible, in which are introduced anecdotes illustrating their instincts and habits, and explaining and applying the references to them in Scripture: contains many pictures and a pretty coloured frontispiece. A beautiful little book, and very handsomely got up."—Christian Age.

"In 'Birds of the Bible' we have pleasant chats about some of the birds referred to in Holy Writ, with good illustrations and a coloured frontispiece. The volume is nicely got up."—Christian World.

"A very pretty little volume, beautifully illustrated, handsomely printed, and very tastefully bound. It contains much information and much useful teaching about Bible birds. It is just the book for a present to our young friends, to whom it will prove very attractive."
Living Waters.

"Mr. Bowker knows much about the birds; and he makes his feathered favourites teach many a sweet lesson. By all means let the children have this prettily written and prettily illustrated book."—British Messenger.

IMPORTANT NEW WORK for TEACHERS of the YOUNG.

220 Pages, Crown 8vo. Tinted covers, 2s.; Cloth boards, 2s. 6d.

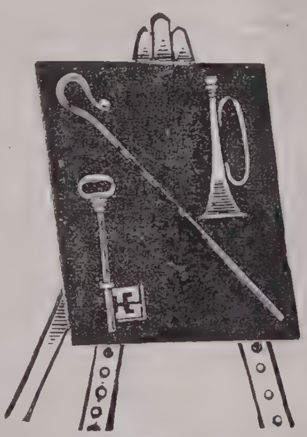
CHILDREN'S MEETINGS

AND HOW TO CONDUCT THEM.

BY LUCY J. RIDER AND NELLIE M. CARMAN.

CONTAINS

Sixty Outline Lessons for the Class,
Forty-three Diagrams for the Black-board,
Twenty-five attractive Children's Hymns.



"A thoroughly practical book, by teachers who have learned by experience the best methods. Teachers will find it most helpful, especially in blackboard word-work. The Addresses are teachings, which very many Children's Addresses are not."—The Teacher at Work.

"We do not remember meeting with any better book than this for help in Children's Meetings. It is first-rate. There are objects to be drawn on the black-board; but there are also capital lessons to go with them. Black-boards get very, very black; and the children are very bored, when it is all chalk and no sound sense. Many of these Addresses would make sermons of the first water—and what more can we say of Addresses?"

Rev. C. H. Spurgeon in
The Sword and Trowel.

"We have no hesitation in advising all who are engaged in the good work of teaching children and young people in Gospel principles, and the way of salvation, to possess themselves of a copy of this work. It will be found to be a very valuable and suggestive book, and helpful to the teacher of the Infant—as well as to the teacher of the Bible-class."—Baptist Messenger.

PARIS CITY MISSION.—Seven well-qualified Missionaries of this Society now visit the poor in Paris. The efforts of one are devoted to upwards of three hundred English families in Belleville, the Rue de Félicité, and other low parts of the city. He also visits the English-speaking men who frequent the public houses. Six devout Frenchmen make the Gospel known to thousands of their countrymen in their homes, and gather them into meetings for Scripture reading and prayer. The work is much blessed. Funds are urgently needed to pay the Missionaries for the present month. Information will be given and contributions most thankfully received by Mr. J. M. WEYLLAND, Secretary for England, 31, Carlton-hill, St. John's Wood.

LONDON: MORGAN & SCOTT, 12, PATERNOSTER BUILDINGS, E.C.

"The recollection of what similar doctrines did for France and Paris a hundred years ago, when men who held them got the pre-eminence, may well make men shudder to-day. These are the men who are abolishing the name of God and Providence from school-books. A discussion is carried on in some English papers about these daring infidels. It has fallen to our lot intimately to know many of them; some were originally Protestants, who had quarrelled with life in all its forms, and, through disappointments caused by their own conduct, had become bitter atheists. These men would have scrupled to crush a fly on the table, but they glibly talked of bettering the human race by bleeding—i.e., gunpowder and guillotine—and as glibly did their part of the bleeding during the Commune! Whatever causes their atheism, whether ignorance, disappointment, or vice, the results are equally fearful; 1793, 1848, 1871, fatally prove it."

Mr. C. H. Spurgeon, says a contemporary, has, up to the present time, admitted into membership ten thousand persons in connection with the work of the Metropolitan Tabernacle and its missions.

A paper in Good Words, on "The Housing of Poor Children in Glasgow," awakens many grave and unpleasant reflections. The question has suggested itself to the writer of the paper—Mr. William Mitchell, of the Glasgow School Board—whether, with all our boasted civilisation, we are not in some respects far behind the despised heathen. Contrast the wigwam of the Indian, or the hut of the Zulu, he says, with the filthy dens in our large cities that are called "homes;" have we not cause for shame and humiliation? Mr. Mitchell proves his case by the recital of some startling facts, from which it is only needful to choose this one: that out of 114,759 families in the city of Glasgow, 40,820 live in houses of a single room. Decency of life is of course at a discount, and disease, especially among the young, is rife.

Mr. Mitchell argues that while such conditions of home life are permitted to exist, all our improved methods of school education will be in vain, as far as the moral elevation of the people is concerned. Nobody attempts to gainsay this, but we seem to have grown so accustomed to the horrors of our city slums that our hands are folded either in indifference or despair. Is it possible, asks Mr. Mitchell, that a nation which faced Slave Emancipation at a cost of twenty millions sterling, and voted eleven millions in one night at the suggestion of a war panic, cannot cope with this problem of the housing of the masses? If so, we must be degenerate sons of heroic sires.

Of course the omnipresent drink curse is a potent factor in the case; and if we would only sweep away the infernal "traffic," much of the overcrowding, squalor, and wretchedness would vanish with it. But there is small evidence that we are yet prepared, as a nation, for such a blessed act of self-abnegation. Rather than curtail the fancied "freedom of the subject," we are ready to keep the nation's neck under the grinding and relentless yoke of appetite, strengthened by a thousand needless opportunities for exercise, and producing an evil progeny of misery and crime that far outnumber the combined results of famine, war, and pestilence.

It is comforting to turn from this dark picture to the very hopeful and inspiring article by Miss Ellice Hopkins in The Sunday Magazine, on "The Triumphs of the Moral Sense." Hear what she says:—

> I want, God enabling me, to get this truth into the young men and women of to-day who have the shaping of the future in their hands—that the one invincible thing is the moral sense within them; that when we
> "dare with God to be
> In the right with two or three,"
> we are on the winning side. It matters not what are the forces of evil against us; if we are right and they are wrong, they are bound in the end to go down before us.

On another page we reproduce from a Glasgow daily contemporary an account of Mr. Quarrier's thanksgiving meeting in connection with his Orphan Homes of Scotland. The rapid growth of Mr. Quarrier's work is phenomenal, even in this age of philanthropic activity, and indicates the hold which it has taken on the best sympathies of the Christian public. Our Scotch friend is a man of strong and simple faith, and according to his faith has been the manifest favour of God and man. We notice, from the report, that he is purposing further advances in his splendid mission of rescue and restoration. Scotland backs him nobly, but we trust the other parts of the British Empire will not fall behind in helping on such a good and blessed work.

It is stated that the efforts to bring about union between the Methodists and the Presbyterians in Canada are not unlikely to succeed. The proposition will be brought before the next National Conference and the next Assembly. We should rejoice to find that these brethren who agree to differ have found it possible to remove the partition walls, and to unite their forces under the Lord's banner.

We referred a few weeks ago to the ill-treatment of the Chinese upon the Western seaboard of America. It has since been reported that in Canton placards are put up from time to time with the names of those who have been ill-used or killed upon American soil. A feeling is being thereby created which is likely sooner or later to prove disastrous to English and American residents in China; indeed, the attacks on missionary premises in Si-Chuen, to which we referred last week, are plainly attributed by some correspondents to this cause. The American Government will do well to put an end to a state of things which is far from creditable, either to the Christianity or the humanity of their nation.

What a ghastly comment upon our national wealth is afforded in the fact that night after night hundreds of homeless outcasts of both sexes, some mere children, sleep on the pier steps, under and upon the seats, and on the waste land adjoining the Thames Embankment. Of some of them doubtless it might be said truthfully that their misfortunes are of their own creation. Many others, probably the majority, are little more than children, who have never known a home, and but rarely heard a kind word. But surely even the former ought not to be refused a place of shelter. The number of our social castaways seems to increase as our national wealth increases, and the fact points to something wrong in our social state.

So far as we are aware, only one of the numerous Socialistic papers has protested against the teaching of the disgraceful pamphlet to which we referred in THE CHRISTIAN of August 26. The fact says but little for the leaders in the Socialist movement. That most of them dissent from the views with regard to chastity and marriage so shamelessly proclaimed by the authors of the pamphlet, we have reason to know; surely mere policy ought not to keep them silent now that there is a risk of the foul and pestilent opinions of one or two being taken as those of the author of "The Earthly Paradise," and his followers.

The present year has been proclaimed a year of Jubilee by the Pope, and full and complete forgiveness of sins has been promised by him to all those Romanists who will visit certain chapels, offer a number of prayers for the Pope's "intentions," fast on certain days, give alms at the chapels, attend confession and mass. The conditions, light as they are, are somewhat onerous for Rome, but they are very far removed from those of the Gospel.

At a recent commemorative service held in the crypt of Canterbury Cathedral, the place of worship of the French Protestants since 1550, Rev. E. White, chairman of the Congregational Union, preached in the morning, and Canon Fremantle in the evening. The latter remarked that it was desirable to preserve this French church, "if only because it is one of the few places in England where a clergyman of the Church of England and a Nonconformist minister can preach at different times on the same Sabbath." We think it a pity there are not more such places. The Lord's cause suffers greviously through this slowness to recognise that there is but one Church of Christ.

The Church Times states that the Bishop of Carlisle has recently been holding an inquiry with regard to a rector in his diocese, who is said to leave the care of his parish of some 7000 people to one curate. The rector urged that the curate had never failed to visit anyone who sent for him, and that it was no part of the curate's duty to hold Bible classes. What the result of the inquiry may be we cannot anticipate, but our contemporary says that the case will go far to convert those who dislike the Pluralities' Act Amendment Act.

We referred to the Clergy List, and found that the rector's family have the gift of four livings in Cumberland, including the one in question, of the value of £966, £371, £403, and £87 respectively. All but the last are held by persons bearing the family name, while in the next county, Westmoreland, a living, not in the gift of the family, is held by another of the same name.

A CHILDREN'S LANTERN SERVICE was conducted on September 7, by Mr. E. Hughes, on the site of the new Jurston-street and Shaftesbury Memorial School, Charles-street, Westminster Bridge-road, S.E. It is hoped to repeat these services at intervals during the autumn evenings. The Sunday-school is now temporarily located in a building formerly occupied as a "Penny Gaff," in the New Cut. The week evening operations of the teachers are greatly cramped by reason of this building being only available for a few hours on Sundays. Subscriptions for the new building may be sent to Rev. Newman Hall, Christ Church, Westminster-road.

FOREIGN MISSIONARY NOTES.

LONDON MISSIONARY SOCIETY.

Rev. J. Macgowan, Amoy, concludes his interesting letter on the Hui-an Christians thus:—"My visit to the churches was now over. A most delightful one it had been. Many an hour of Christian fellowship I had held with men whose love for our Saviour had made them sacrifice much for Him. The hopes for this country ere long becoming Christian are very bright. There is a movement towards Christ. May He soon come to reign over willing hearts."

BRITISH AND FOREIGN BIBLE SOCIETY.

In an interval of two years the Committee expended £4046 7s. 11d. in grants to different societies for the employment of Bible-women in heathen lands. The maximum sums offered have been £12 per woman and £144 per society, and the aid thus afforded has met generally with a thankful reception. Twelve pounds is not, of course, always sufficient to defray the expenses of a Bible-woman, but it is adequate for that portion of her work which is strictly within the limits of the Bible Society's sphere. In some instances societies have not been able to avail themselves fully, if at all, of the help thus proffered, but the Committee has received sufficient encouragement from the reports sent in during the probational period to think the experiment a success, and therefore to decide to continue bestowing part of their funds on this important object. Thus far India has benefited most; but Burmah, Ceylon, Singapore, China, Syria, Palestine, and Egypt have also participated, though but in a slight measure.

CHURCH MISSIONARY SOCIETY.

The seventh annual Conference of missionaries in Japan (held at Osaka the first week in May) was the occasion of additional interest and gladness, through the presence of Dr. Bickersteth, the new bishop. Eleven missionaries were present. The Bishop writes:—"The unanimity and loyal support of all the brethren at the Conference was most cheering and uplifting, at a time when I was beginning to realise more day by day how great the work is which God has committed to us here. . . . All are of opinion that the next ten years are an opportunity which never can recur, or be recovered if lost. Your object should, I feel sure, be to reinforce existing stations. Everybody is overworked, so far as I have yet seen; and yet how can it be otherwise while our numbers are so small, and the work so rapidly increasing?" The general report urges the necessity for working more through the agency of the native Church, and not so much independently of it; also that the Zenana Missionary Society should take up women's work in Japan, as at present the Church Missionary Society is but feebly represented by lady agents there. Rev. A. B. Hutchinson, of Nagasaki, pleads for "increased evangelistic effort," saying, "a spirit of inquiry is spreading on every side; requests are frequent for preachers and for preaching; the number of listeners in the large towns is trebled; disturbance and violence have given way to quiet and orderly attention."

AMERICAN BAPTIST MISSION.

The annexation of Upper Burmah has not brought the peace of which some were sanguine. The people are descendants of dacoits (or armed robbers), and we hear from Mrs. Ingalls, of Thongzai, that they are developing much of the spirit of their forefathers. Lower as well as Upper Burmah is being incited to rebellion, and on Mrs. Ingalls' own chapel a card was posted stating that the dacoits must have 10,000 rupees, or she and her house would be burned. "Some of our friends advised us to get away, but we could not leave our people in that state, so we remained and God has not allowed anything to hurt us. The people do not dare to go out to their farms, and we fear there will be famine. A few went out the other day, but were surprised by four men, who said, as they pointed their guns at them, 'If you plough you shall not reap, and if you sow you shall not see it grow.'" This devoted missionary lady meditates taking a journey before the close of the year to Bhamo, some 200 miles beyond Mandalay. She says, I shall take three native preachers and some Bible-women with me, for no Burman missionary has been there yet, and I long for the people to hear the grand old story."

In The Friend of Missions is the following painful statement:—"Upper Burmah, since its annexation, has become a dreadful place for cheap drink and heavy crime."

PRESBYTERIAN MISSION.

The news from Morocco is most encouraging. Dr. Kerr says:—"I have been asked of late into many of the first houses in Rabat. The difficulties of language are, of course, an obstacle. The Spanish I find easy, but not so the Arabic." And again he writes:—"I can do little among the Jews till I know the language, and go down among them." The majority of his patients have been Moors, and, many cures having been effected, the Doctor's name is getting known, and he is much sought after. He concludes:—"I can see a blessed opportunity of carrying the Gospel in future into their houses, and leaving them copies of the Word of God. I often wish I could speak to them. Many of them would gladly listen to the Gospel. So I trust for dark Morocco."

CANADIAN PRESBYTERIAN MISSIONS.

All the missions on the reserves are in a satisfactory condition; in some cases eminently so. At Okanase, where Rev. George Flett has laboured ten years, the Indians have altered, from being Pagan and uncivilised, to "a Christian community, living in comparative comfort, and, in the regularity and interest of their Church attendance, giving a good example to their white neighbours." At Crooked Lakes a very successful school has been maintained at the missionary's (Rev. Hugh Mackay) own expense for two winters past. The children (about twenty in number) to a large extent receive food and clothing as well as instruction. In this station the infant Church last autumn suffered a great loss in the death of the Chief, who was identified with it as a member the last few weeks of his life. "He was not left long with us after his profession of faith in the Lord Jesus," writes Mr. Mackay; "but long enough to be instrumental in leading others to embrace the same Gospel which he so much loved."

JESSICA'S SECRET.

Jessica is the brightest tempered woman I know. "Why is it," I asked her the other day, "that one never finds you sulky, or cross, or complaining? What charm have you against the petty ills of life, the small vexations, crosses, disappointments, losses, that of course must lie along your path as well as mine?" I had spoken lightly, but the question brought to my friend's face a tender solemnity, and her words ran in a deeper channel than mine.

"To answer your question," she said softly, "I must take you into the sanctuary, where one's life is 'hid with Christ in God.' It is true that my trials come to me with the sting drawn; and it is because I have learned to look upon them as a means of grace. If it be a petty trouble, a disobedient servant, a careless accident, a sour loaf, a rainy day, I say to myself, 'Be thankful that you have some discomforts; lift up your eyes, and be reminded that this is not your true home, your eternal rest. Without these pin-pricks you would be all too likely to forget your pilgrimage state.'

"If it be a heavier cross—if I am called to meet coldness, indifference, neglect, from those I love, the heart aches, but I say to myself, 'Ah, Jessica, if these fulfilled your every wish, if your loved ones all satisfied your heart's desire, what room would be left for the Friend of friends? Lift up your heart and rejoice that his love is changeless, free, and knows no end.' And so, before the trial has a chance to spear me, I have laid hold of its weapon and turned it against some besetting sin of worldliness, pride, selfishness, vain glory."

This secret of a happy life was not told with glib ease; the hesitating speech, the flushed brow, the averted eyes, told plainly that my friend would willingly have kept the curtain down. But I thanked God for the generous frankness which made me a sharer in its blessings.—Congregationalist.

DR. GEORGE F. PENTECOST has been staying in Scotland for several weeks as the guest of Mr. J. Campbell White, of Overtoun. He has also spent some days with Lord and Lady Ailsa, at Culzean. During the time the Doctor addressed several meetings in Dumbarton and the Vale of Leven, and on one occasion gave a Bible-reading at the noon meeting in the Christian Institute, Glasgow, on "False Fire."

TEMPERANCE NOTES.

HOME.

The British Museum Library has 400 temperance publications.

If "failures" be a guide, the liquor trade is in a worse condition this year than last.

We are glad to report that at the Brewster Sessions, generally, there has been a strong indisposition to grant new licences.

It is estimated that 20,000 temperance friends were present at the recent temperance fête at the "Shipperies," Liverpool.

The erection of a "Shaftesbury" Temperance Tavern and Restaurant in the new Shaftesbury-avenue, High Holborn, is suggested as a counterpoise to the glut of public-houses there.

Intemperance amongst married women has been exciting attention in the Metropolitan Press. A Times correspondent describes a home with an intemperate mother as "a hell upon earth."

"Wanderer," in The Bond of Union, says, "it is a fact" that "a lay preacher owns seventeen publichouses which are open on Sunday nights, some of them in villages in which he preaches."

A coffee-tavern has been opened at the Smithfield Goods Station of the Great Western Railway. Lord Lyttleton presided, and said the directors were in full sympathy with any effort for the good of their employés.

The Commissioners of Lunacy, in Ireland, in their recent report, state that during the past year, much more than previously, acute attacks of insanity were due to poor food and continuous indulgence in spirituous liquors.

The London City Missionaries visited 1800 more public houses and coffee-houses last year than in the previous year. The work has borne good fruit; the majority of the landlords welcomed the visitors, and some have been induced to give up the business.

FOREIGN.

Mrs. Cleveland, wife of the American President, has written to a lady correspondent expressing her strong sympathy with temperance effort.

A fund is being raised in America for the support of the widow of Rev. Geo. C. Haddock, recently basely murdered, in the liquor interest, in Sioux City, Iowa.

The Indian Soldiers' Total Abstinence Association has issued its annual report. The committee state the work of the Association has improved the health and morals of the army, and has been a real benefit to the State.

Whitby (Ontario) Gaol, says the Montreal Witness, now flying a white flag from its turrets in token of its purity, there not being a single prisoner within its walls. This is a novel state of affairs, as that gaol used to do a brisk business.

Mr. Francis Murphy has been addressing meetings at Thousand Island Park, on the St. Lawrence. His son Edward, having met with an accident, dislocating his shoulder, and having his arm in a sling, only said a few words at the close.

At the British Association, last week, Mr. Joseph Thompson, F.R.G.S., read a paper on "The River Niger and South Congo Basin." He described the demoralising effects of civilisation and gin. For one native converted by the missionaries a thousand had been ruined by contact with Europeans.

SALISBURY CONFERENCE will be held in the Maundrel Hall from September 27 to October 1. The subjects of the Conference in the mornings will be—"The Believers' Privileges: Consecration, Communion, and Conformity;" while in the evenings, "The Church: its origin, its responsibilities, and its hopes," will be considered. Programmes and information as to accommodation may be obtained from Rev. E. N. Thwaites, Fisherton Rectory, Salisbury.

THE CONFESSIONAL.—A celibate priest in the confessional box, undermining the trustfulness and the sanctities of domestic life, is as deadly an enemy of the family as the revolutionary atheist in the senate, advocating the destruction of parental authority. We learn, on the authority of a very distinguished dignitary of the Establishment, not only that the confessional is widely advocated in his Church, but also that a number of clergymen have now actually gone so far as to insist upon confession as a necessary preliminary to the Holy Communion. We are often at a loss to account for the strange degeneracy of so many modern Englishmen.—Methodist Times.

THE ZENANA BIBLE AND MEDICAL MISSION has published a booklet containing a report of the All-day Convention which was held last June, with the object of bringing the needs of India's women before the Christian public, and especially members of Y.W.C.A.'s. Those who are interested in Zenana work should read these condensed addresses, and those who have not attended to this crying need should be stirred to activity when they know that in one province of that Empire there is but one lady missionary to 450,000 people, and this province is said to be better served than others. Copies may be obtained (2d. each) from the office of the Mission, 2, Adelphi-terrace, W.C.

WESLEYAN HOME MISSIONS.

A VERY important step has been taken by the recent Wesleyan Conference in sanctioning the establishment of the London West Central Mission. It is three years since the movement in favour of it began, and it was not finally carried without considerable opposition. The matter was first discussed at the Pastoral Session of the Conference, and, after a long debate, it was resolved to take practical steps for its accomplishment in the event of the Representative Conference sanctioning the proposal. A second debate took place at the Representative Conference, at the conclusion of which it was carried, by a large majority, that it was desirable to establish the Mission.

The leading place in both discussions was taken by Rev. J. E. Clapham, who has succeeded Rev. A. M'Aulay as Home Mission Secretary, and has already amply justified his appointment. He said they were face to face with a gigantic problem, and if they solved that problem in London they would solve it likewise for Manchester and Liverpool, Glasgow and New York, where the crowded conditions of modern social life among the poor had altered the circumstances in which men lived. The masses of the population to which he referred had no home life, and had to choose between the single stifling room and the street or public-house. There were hundreds of thousands of people who could hardly find the means of life in London, so poorly paid and precarious was their employment. Then there was vice—awful, unspeakable vice—vice which ruined respectable married women, destroyed the daughters of the people, and devoured even the children. As a Church, they had not touched this evil; but it was getting into their homes; it was corrupting civilisation; and it ought, if it could, to be put down. No church, with the exception of a branch or mission here or there, had got a real grip of the slum or the artisan population. Christianity had not got hold of the masses of London.

Rev. Hugh Price Hughes said that this was the most important work which Methodism had projected in his day. The West was the citadel of vice, and they should plant a fort in its midst. Rev. Mark Guy Pearse was set apart for one year to promote the interests of the London Mission. The bold step taken by our Methodist friends shows that they are alive to the need of getting beyond stereotyped lines of work, and are willing to make new departures called for by change of circumstances. The enterprise on which they have ventured will be followed by the best wishes of all Christians who take a lively interest in the welfare of the people.

The subject of Village Methodism also received considerable attention at the Conference. Rev. T. Champness gave an account of his labours in evangelising the rural districts. He either had or should soon have twenty-three men thus engaged. One of the men had never stopped in a house without winning a soul. Once he found himself in a house where only two persons lived, and as both were Church members he thought he should not succeed in getting a convert; but the next door neighbour, hearing him at prayer, was awakened and brought to Christ. Mr. Rivett was convinced that the claims of the villages were equally important with those of outcast London, for from the villages a constant stream of people was running to London and the Colonies. A leaven should be sent to the villages which would leaven the whole lump. The general feeling seemed to be that "the man in the smock frock" was going to rule England, and no time was to be lost in evangelising him. Dr. Rigg observed that when the day arrived that their ordinary method would not admit of spontaneous methods being introduced, it would be a bad day for them.—Evangelical Christendom.

MESSRS. FULLERTON AND SMITH.

THESE evangelists are being greatly owned of God in Hull. They are drawing large audiences to the circus, which is the largest building in the town. On Sundays the place is crowded with about 4000 people, and on week-nights there are 2000 on an average. They have been here about a fortnight now, and many have come forward to confess Christ. We anticipate the Mission will result in a great blessing to many churches. We have people from all denominations, who will probably take some of the holy fire back with them.

Among other interesting cases I would like to tell of one man who is a living testimony that God does answer prayer. His wife and many friends have been praying for him for twenty years, and now they have the joy of seeing their prayers answered. God had to bring him down low, in a temporal sense, before he could raise him high, in a spiritual sense. He has been a most prosperous man of business, but reverses came, and the family was strangely led to Hull. They have only been here a few weeks. The husband and father is converted. He had been under conviction for some time, and on the night of his conversion said that he had served the devil well, and now he intended to serve God better. His wife and children were at the service, and were overcome with joy and gladness. When they reached home one of the girls touchingly said, looking at the simple furniture, "Mamma, this is not what we have been used to, but it all seems like a palace to-night." All the family are now living under the smile of God.

The evangelists remain with us another week, and we earnestly entreat your readers to remember them in prayer.

FRANK RUSSELL, Baptist Minister.

EVANGELISATION OF THE SAVOY.

THE department of the Savoy, of which the population is about 500,000, is a magnificent country, especially in the environs of the Chamounix; but Popery, with its ignorance and superstitions, reigns there as sovereign lord. There are here and there some few Protestants, but the greater part are so devoid of spiritual life that they are often hindrances to the progress of the Gospel.

Commerce, carried on upon Christian principles, would be an inestimable help in this work of evangelisation, if the traders are fully consecrated to the Lord, and have the resources necessary to support it at hand. Earnest appeal is made to all sincere Christians who are thus disposed, to establish in some of the towns and villages of this country a work so important.

Two ladies have offered themselves for Thonon, on the shores of the Lake of Geneva, and it is desired to find other ladies or gentlemen, disposed to locate themselves in surrounding districts, of which Thonon would be the centre. B. GREEN.

MILDMAY MISSION TO THE JEWS.—Messrs. Baron and Barnett left Dover on Monday last, September 13, for Berlin, to commence the work of distributing 100,000 Hebrew New Testaments amongst the Jews. We earnestly desire prayer for abundant blessing on this work, and on every branch of the work at home. We have wonderful opportunities. J. WILKINSON.

CEYLON.—Rev. G. J. Trimmer, writing from Batticoloa, says that there are 450 girls in attendance at the day-schools, and 42 boarders in the girls' boarding-school, which is the only one in the Eastern Province. These boarders represent thirteen villages. The great need now is educated Christian women. The natives ask that women may be sent to teach them sewing, and promise to send the girls to school. The boarding-school is for the education of the daughters of the chief men, and it also serves as a training home for the female teachers. All who are working in the villages of the district were trained there. It is now proposed to enlarge the boarding-school to accommodate 100 pupils. This will involve an outlay of £1000. Contributions may be sent direct, or to Rev. J. Kilner, Wesleyan Mission House, Bishopsgate-street, Within, E.C., stating the object for which they are intended.

MISSION TO POLICEMEN.

MR. JAMES MARSHALL, of the Policemen's Christian Association, sends a report of a visit to some of the Yorkshire towns, of which we give a summary:—

Reached Sheffield about eleven (August 30), and was marched to the house of the Superintendent of the county police of West Riding, where we had a hearty welcome, in true Yorkshire style. At 1 p.m. the Superintendent took us to their meeting-room, where we had about forty men, all in full dress. Some ladies were also present, who take an interest in the Lord's work. At 2.30 we parted with these good folks, as drill was commencing. Now our guide takes us some three miles to another meeting in the smoky city.

A few real men of God here, thoroughly in earnest, and we felt quite at home at once. After a short word for the Master, we started for York city, where a policeman met us and escorted us within the walls. Went to hear a Mr. Douglas at the Friends' Meeting House. He is conducting Gospel services in American style, being a minister from that land. Now off to visit the dark places of this cathedral city of York. A good open-air meeting, and then to the hotel for the night.

Tuesday: Had a walk round the city walls. A good police meeting with wives and children in the Merchants' Hall, tea at 5, and speaking afterwards, until 8 p.m. Then off for the open air—a truly good meeting. Hundreds of old and young, both male and female, in this, the poorest part of the city. Some real, true-hearted helpers in the Lord's work gathered with us here. It was good to be here; God was with us in mighty power, of a truth. The Chief Constable of York had a private interview with us at our hotel before we left, and spoke of the work in high terms. Now off to Dewsbury, where a good number of police—Superintendent, Inspector, and men—meet to hear us at a large chapel, in full uniform. I trust a good work was done here. Returned to Leeds for the night, and spoke at St. James's Hall. Left for Huddersfield on Thursday morning, and had a good police meeting in Y.M.C.A. rooms; a meeting was also held among the country police. Police-constable Ball spoke at the same time, and returned to Huddersfield with me. Here we had a meeting in the Market-place from 8 till 9.30 p.m.; some four or five hundred men listened with rapt attention, in fact, the people are astonished, and ask, "Can these men be policemen?" This was asked of a police sergeant at whose house we slept. The Lord was with us of a truth; all glory to Him was given.

CHILDREN'S SCRIPTURE UNION.—The following are the portions for the ensuing week:—September 19, Joshua xx. 1—9; September 20, Joshua xxiii. 1—16; September 21, Joshua xxiv. 1—15; September 22, Joshua xxiv. 16—33; September 23, Psalm cxiv. 1—8; September 24, Psalm cxv. 1—18; September 25, 1 Thess. i. 1—10.

LANGLAND BAY, WEST SWANSEA.—Services were held here throughout August by Messrs. C. F. Jones and H. Braddock, of the Children's Service Mission, assisted by clergy and undergraduates. Great interest was shown by Christian friends. Services often numbered one hundred and eighty children and adults. Bible searching and Scripture clock competitions were held for the young people, and seventy joined the Scripture Union. It is believed that many have decided for the Lord Jesus, and, at the evening meetings especially, the power of the Lord was manifestly present.

GOSPEL ALL-NIGHT MISSION.—Last Tuesday week a midnight meeting for the purpose of rescuing poor fallen ones was held in the Mission Hall, Flood-street. A few devoted men and women came from different parts of London to help. About forty women assembled from Chelsea and Knightsbridge to partake of tea, and in the Gospel service afterwards they were pointed to the Saviour as the only way whereby they could be saved. Many of them wanted to give up their sinful life, but they would not go into Homes. We are thankful, however, to say that two were taken to Homes at the close of the meeting. The meetings can only be held when there are sufficient funds in hand, and when one friend or another will either lend, or cause to be lent, a hall for the purpose of the meetings. Further particulars can be obtained of Mr. Pye, 324, Fulham-road, South Kensington, S.W., who carries on the work and to whom contributions can be sent.

YOUNG MEN IN COUNCIL.

CONFERENCE AT STIRLING.

The annual gathering of Scotch Y.M.C.A. delegates was held this year, August 24—27, in the ancient and picturesque town of Stirling. Mr. Henry Drummond (father of Professor Drummond) presided at the reception meeting, and the Association was warmly welcomed.

The real work of the Conference began on the morning of the 25th, when "The Fellowship Meeting" was considered. The spiritual element in these meetings was deemed the most influential for good, in promoting Christian growth, and in leading waverers to soul-decision. Members were urged to speak naturally, and not to take up the time without having some substantial contribution to give. The subject of "Intellectual Culture" was next discussed; the need of good, well-chosen libraries, and of having a definite aim in reading, was touched on.

At a business meeting it was reported that the number of Associations had increased from 221 to 248, with an increase of 2000 in the membership. The total membership for Scotland is now 23,700. Mr. J. Henderson Smith, Travelling Secretary, had aided in organising a number of new branches. Reports of work were given from different parts of the country, but there does not appear to have been anything of special or outstanding interest in them.

In discussing the question of the relative responsibilities of the Y.M.C.A. and the Christian communities in which they are placed, it was urged that the Association should seek out those who are drifting about, should attract them by all possible methods, and should qualify them for spiritual work. The community, on the other hand, can remove many temptations from the path of young men; if it does not, society is bound to suffer. It was stated that 490 young men were seen to enter a betting place in Glasgow in a single forenoon. A stimulating address was given at one of the sessions on "Christlike Living."

During the Conference there was an enjoyable excursion to Callander. An evangelistic service was held on the Monday evening, when Rev. John Smith, of Edinburgh, spoke powerfully from the words: "The Master is come and calleth for thee."

BRITISH CONFERENCE AT BRISTOL.

The 1886 Conference at Bristol last week will be remembered, by those privileged to share in it, as one of much joy and brightness. Fervency of spirit and brotherly love were amongst its distinguishing features. The city has long borne the reputation of being above the average in widespread and high-toned spirituality. Certainly the delegates found in the homes of their numerous and hospitable entertainers a most congenial atmosphere. Amongst the citizens who took a prominent part in welcoming the Conference, over and above the ministers of all denominations, whose presence greatly enhanced the pleasure of the occasion, were Mr. Joseph Storrs Fry, Mr. J. Thirnbeck Grace (President and Chairman of the Bristol Association), Mr. W. H. and Mr. Samuel Budgett, Mr. Frederick and Mr. S. D. Wills, Mr. Benjamin Thomas and his brother from the neighbouring city of Bath, &c.

Several preliminary meetings were held on the Sunday and Monday, at which Mr. Henry Thorne gave addresses and Bible-readings. There was also a special gathering of general secretaries on Tuesday forenoon. The spirit of prayer which was manifest on this occasion was a token of coming blessing. As a sign of the growth of the work it was reported by Mr. W. M. Oatts, secretary to the Secretaries' Conference, that in 1882 there were 36 secretaries who were wholly devoted to the work; at the present time there are 69. At this preliminary Conference 44 were present, 11 for the first time. After a brief season, devoted to prayer and business arrangements, the company were privileged to visit the very extensive and interesting works of Messrs. Fry, Mr. J. S. Fry doing them the honour of personally guiding and explaining.

In the afternoon the honorary secretaries joined the Conference, when Mr. Kennedy, of Exeter Hall, introduced the subject of the Secretarial Appointment Board, an executive body recently appointed as an official medium of communication between committees requiring secretaries, and men duly qualified to act in that capacity; an interesting and instructive conversation ensued. At its close adjournment was made for tea in the gymnasium, where the secretaries met the delegates, who were by this time arriving in large numbers.

The Conference proper was opened by a reception meeting in the large and handsome hall, erected principally through the intervention of Mr. Moody on the occasion of his last visit, and by means of the generous support of the late Mr. Samuel Morley. After prayer by Dr. Culross, Principal of the Baptist College in Bristol, Mr. Joseph Storrs Fry, the President, spoke words of hearty welcome. They were in the city at this very time welcoming their colonial visitors as fellow-citizens of the British Empire, but in fellow-members of the Y.M.C.A. there was a double tie, as the outcome of a common faith in Christ, and of a common effort to extend the Redeemer's kingdom.

Mr. Benjamin Thomas first spoke words of welcome to the delegates from Ireland, of whom thirty-six were in attendance, the largest contingent ever sent by the sister kingdom. These brethren, throughout the Conference, received the assurance, both by word and applause, of the warm affection entertained for them and their country. A most cordial response wás given on behalf of the Irish delegates by Mr. Williams (Rathmines, Dublin), who said: "We don't feel it a misfortune to be Irishmen, when we come to England. We meet with great difficulties in our work at home, but coming to a convention like this does a fellow good," and so on. Rev. Dr. Nicolson warmly welcomed his fellow-countrymen to the city of his adoption, and in the course of his remarks paid a high tribute to the lasting influence of John Knox, to the effect of the Biblical instruction given in the schools in Scotland, and to the fundamental conviction inbred in the heart of every Scotchman, that God alone is the Lord of the conscience. Mr. Macphail, of Greenock, suitably responded.

Rev. James Fox, Rector of St. Werburgh's Church, in welcoming his English fellow-countrymen, rejoiced in the Y.M.C.A. platform; it was larger than that of any denomination, and embraced the whole Church of Christ. He spoke hearty, rallying words concerning the real centre of work. Young men want Christ; nothing reaches them like bringing Him into their midst.

Mr. George Williams, who was very heartily received, responded for the English delegates. He dwelt upon the great advantages of these Conferences as regarded their social side—"as iron sharpeneth iron, so the countenance of a man his friend"—and drew special attention to the leading features of the Y.M.C.A., the difficulties of the sphere, and the desire of the workers to do pioneer service for the Church of Christ.

During the evening a song of greeting, specially written for the occasion, was sung to music, also specially composed.

ON WEDNESDAY,

at 9.30 a.m., a large proportion of the delegates met for prayer, Mr. J. T. Grace presiding. A great many took part, in brief, fervent utterances. At 10 a.m. Mr. George Williams took the chair. Then the roll was called, each delegate rising and answering to his name; Mr. Jameson, local secretary, was appointed secretary to the Conference. These formalities being accomplished, Mr. J. Herbert Tritton proposed, in a brief but affectionate speech, the following resolution: "That this Conference of representatives of Y.M.C.A.'s of Great Britain and Ireland tenders its respectful sympathy to Mrs. Morley and the family of the late Mr. Samuel Morley in their heavy bereavement; places on record its sense of the great loss sustained by Christian work generally, and by the work of Y.M.C.A.'s in particular, through the decease of Mr. Morley; and desires at the same time to thank God for the testimony of his servant in public and private life, and for his unwearying labours in the service of God and man."

This was supported by Mr. Samuel Budgett and Mr. Joseph Storrs Fry, and was passed in silence, the whole of the meeting rising as a token of approval and assent. A deputation was then appointed to represent the Conference at the funeral, consisting of Mr. George Williams, Mr. J. Herbert Tritton, the Hon. A. F. Kinnaird, Mr. E. J. Kennedy, and Mr. Robert Burn.

Mr. W. H. Mills, one of the hon. national secretaries, then presented a very encouraging report of the progress of Association work in England, Wales, and Ireland. Statistics, embracing a large mass of information, had recently been collected, showing, amongst other signs of development, that in 1883 there were 216 Associations; in 1886, 327—increase, 111. In 1883 there was a total of members and associates, 29,214; in 1886, 38,806. The Association's own property in buildings, furniture, &c., £220,449. The reports of spiritual blessing received were also most encouraging. Mr. D. Gardiner, of Edinburgh, presented a similar report for Scotland, the last twelve months especially being rich in spiritual results.

Mr. Robert McCann reported for Ireland, that the work, in the face of great difficulties, was, by God's blessing, prospering and extending. Last year there were 48 Associations in Ireland; this year there are 57.

Mr. George Williams, in closing the session, spoke of the enormous value of the work of the travelling secretaries; that this was especially the department of the work that needed increased financial support.

At 11.30 a.m. Mr. J. Herbert Tritton, chairman of the Central Association, Exeter Hall, rose to read a paper on "The Importance of Distinctive Evangelical Principles in relation to the work of Y.M.C.A.'s." This paper we hope to publish in our next issue. It was very cordially received, and was ably supported by Mr. James Smith, of Dundee, and Mr. J. F. Fawckner, Newport. The former, in a brief, hearty speech, full of point, exhorted his fellow delegates to deal with the heart and conscience in their work amongst young men. Christ is God's answer to every cry of the human heart. He could testify that evangelical principles draw young men; there were 22 members in their cricket club, 40 in the gymnasium, and 600 in the Sunday Bible-class. The Gospel must, however, be presented in young men's style. Mr. Fawckner compared the accessories of Association work to the scaffolding used in rearing a building. When the latter was finished the former would disappear, its end having been served. He was the best architect who raised his building efficiently with the least outlay on scaffolding. In Newport, they had no accessories, but rejoiced in a Bible-class of 250.

The discussion that ensued was brisk and earnest. Amongst others taking part were Mr. W. H. Mills, who, in explanation of a criticism of Dr. Aldridge (Southampton), explained that the Association did not profess to be a theological seminary, but a Bible-reading community; Mr. E. J. Kennedy, who urged Associations to lay the responsibility of the spiritual welfare of the associates upon the members; Mr. R. McCann (travelling secretary for Ireland), who testified that as Christ and his Gospel were put in the front the Irish work succeeded. They don't put up the scaffolding for its own sake, but to run the building higher.

Mr. J. Orchard (Finsbury Park) said, that as the result of their experience, it was the more wealthy of the young men in the locality who used the gymnasium and the classes, but as yet they had not seen much spiritual results from their attendance at these accessories. They had, however, amongst the associates received abundant blessing and the greatest encouragement. Mr. Macphail (Greenock) insisted that Christianity was a life as well as doctrine. Mr. Henry Thorne, in the course of his remarks, said it is better to be narrowly true than broadly wrong.

Mr. George Williams in closing the discussion, emphasised the enormous importance of maintaining their membership a spiritual membership, while freely admitting associates to all the advantages of the Association. If they wanted trouble, admit the world into their membership, and they would have enough—comfort, success, and prosperity were insured by the opposite course.

WEDNESDAY AFTERNOON

was occupied by the consideration of "Christian Forbearance," Mr. George Macfarlane (Glasgow) presiding. The introductory paper was read by Mr. D. A. Black (General Secretary, Belfast) in the absence of the writer, Mr. James Inskip, a local solicitor. The gist of the paper was that we should exercise forbearance at our own cost and not at the cost of the Gospel of which we are stewards. Mr. Stooke (General Secretary, Bath) also read a brief paper. The general scope of the discussion was to show that no platform afforded a better sphere for the exercise of Christian forbearance than that of the Y.M.C.A., and that no Society bore a clearer testimony to the Churches concerning the happy possibility of united Christian work. Mr. Williams (Rathmines), Dublin, who, in common with his fellow countrymen, throughout the Conference, often enlivened the sessions, told an incident of a sailor who rendered a voyage intolerable by his continual grumbling. The captain, being obliged to re-ship him through slackness of hands, offered him £4 a month, but £4 10s. if he would undertake not to grumble. After briefly considering the point, he emphatically said, "I'll ship with my growl."

At 4. p.m., Mr. Hind Smith read an interesting paper on the aggressive aspects of the work of Y.W.C.A.'s as represented by the efforts of the district, national and international committees, and how to interest the members of Associations in them. The paper was supported by Mr. David Gardiner (Edinburgh) and Mr. Henry Whitwell (Birmingham).

On Wednesday evening a well-attended public meeting was held in the large Hall, Mr. J. H. Tritton presiding. Prayer was offered by Rev. H. Montgomery (Belfast). In his opening remarks the Chairman recognised the warm hospitality of the Bristol people, and spoke of the losses sustained by the Association in the removal of Lord Shaftesbury, Lord Cairns, Mr. Balfour, and Mr. Morley. He drew attention to the catholicity of the Association; its helpfulness to the Churches; to the absence of uniformity of method, at the same time a most hearty union of effort and service on a platform which was a meeting-ground for all Christians who held the headship of Christ.

Mr. Hodder moved and Mr. George Williams seconded the following resolution touching the death of Mr. Alexander Balfour: "That this Conference of Representatives of Y.M.C.A.'s of Great Britain and Ireland at their first meeting since the lamented death of Mr. Alexander Balfour, late president of the Liverpool Y.M.C.A., desires to express its deep sense of the loss sustained by the Y.M.C.A., and their appreciation of his high Christian character and whole-hearted devotion to the Lord's work, generously manifested in life, service and gifts, not only in his native city but also throughout the country and abroad. Testimonies and incidents in connection with the work of the Association in their own countries were given by Mr. Robert Henderson Smith, Mr. Robert McCann, Mr. W. Hind Smith, travelling secretaries respectively in Scotland, Ireland, and England.

ON THURSDAY MORNING

the delegates re-assembled at the devotional meeting at 9.30 a.m., under the presidency of Mr. Samuel Budgett. At 10 a.m. Mr. J. R. Fowler (Dublin) took the chair, and introduced the subject of "The Y.M.C.A. in Relation to Foreign Missions." Mr. Robert Burn (Aldersgate-street) read a paper on the above subject, urging that Foreign Mission work was the highest development of Y.M.C.A. work and training, and that young men's Foreign Missionary Societies, already formed in connection with several Associations, should be extended in connection with all Y.M.C.A.'s. By stimulating interest and providing needed help, the number of candidates for foreign service will be greatly increased and the pressing need in greater measure supplied.

The question was warmly urged by Mr. Joseph Hales (Liverpool) and Mr. W. M. Oatts (Glasgow), who each gave incidents in connection with their experience of a deeply interesting character, the latter stating that twenty-four missionaries had gone forth in connection with their society in the last two years.

The remainder of the time allotted to the subject was fully occupied. Messrs. Bailey (Merthyr), Reid (Sheffield), Kennedy (London), Bush (Cardiff), Rev. Lang (Stirling), Whitwell (Birmingham), Irwin Sharp (Sunderland), who said that at a recent meeting presided over by Mr. Reginald Radcliffe, of Liverpool, twenty-eight young men and two young women had signified their desire to go forth as missionaries when and wheresoever the Lord might give them the opportunity. Mr. George Williams urged that the Association should support the existing Missionary Societies by supplying the needed men, and testified to his belief that the Lord had raised up the 3000 Associations to train and supply men to evangelise the world.

At 11.30 "The work of the Association in Villages and Small Towns" was introduced by Mr. Moor (Sunderland), and ably supported by Mr. F. Hunt (Harmondsworth), who gave the results of a most successful experience in that village, and by Mr. James Auld (Greenock). An interesting discussion was carried on by the Hon. A. F. Kinnaird, Mr. W. H. Mills, Mr. Spraggon (Sunderland), Ormerod (Norwich), Humphreys (Cork), and Roberts (Ipswich). After dinner the Hon. A. F. Kinnaird presided at a session for the consideration of another technical subject, "Association Finance," which also elicited the warmest interest.

An invitation that the next Conference should be held in Dundee next year was heartily accepted. Mr. George Williams then assumed the chair, and proceeded to hold a "Question Drawer," a session devoted to answering questions propounded on written papers, at the discretion of the chairman, and replied to by whomsoever that functionary shall appoint. This proved decidedly the most interesting hour of the Conference, and general disappointment was expressed when it was suspended by the effluxion of time.

The closing meeting of the Conference was held at 7 o'clock in the large Hall, presided over by Mr. Samuel Day Wills. It was well attended, and deeply impressive. After Mr. Wills' opening remarks, an able address was delivered by Mr. Edward Priestman, President of the Bradford Association, on "The Influence of Young Men." This was followed by earnest appeals to Christianity, to whole-hearted consecration, and to undecided hearers to accept Christ, both by Rev. H Montgomery and Mr. E. J. Kennedy. Mr. Macfarlane, of Glasgow, and other speakers followed.

On Friday an excursion through the beautiful surroundings of Bristol, and a final social meal at midday, brought to a close a conference which will be remembered with pleasure and gratitude by all who were privileged to attend.

REQUESTS FOR PRAYER.—For blessing on the coming Conference at Wakefield, in connection with the Church Army.——For blessing on the city of Hull.——For blessing upon a mission from September 19 to October 15, at Barry, near Cardiff, by Mr. J. Brown, of the Evangelisation Society.——For Gospel meetings being held in Selkirk, N.B.——That the Lord would raise up as devoted a worker as the late Miss Aimer to help Miss Archibald at the Soldiers' Home, Gibraltar.——For a series of special services by Mr. Opie Rodway, commencing Sept. 19, at a Baptist Chapel, near Ringwood, Hants.——For missions at Gloucester and Cardiff, in September and October, to be conducted by Mr. W. Spencer Walton.——For much blessing on a series of Evangelistic meetings now being held by Rev. Gilbert Laurie, in Chalmers Church, Dundee.——For a young man who, early trained in Bible truths, now preaches atheism in the open air.

Mission and other Appeals.

Central Hall, Newcastle-on-Tyne.—Books for a small circulating library, in connection with the work here will be thankfully received by the Secretary, Mr. J. P. Squire, at the Hall.

Y.W.C.A., Norwich.—Will any friends who wish to contribute towards expenses connected with renovating and furnishing the New Rooms, 14, St. Giles'-street, kindly communicate with Miss F. Cubitt, Hon. Sec., Earlham Lodge, Norwich?

Irish Protestant School.—Rev. G. William Sall, Lorrha, Roscrea, desires help to build a schoolroom. At present all the children are compelled to attend a school under the patronage and influence of the Roman Catholic clergy. The result is that the work of the church is neutralised. Contributions and inquiries should be addressed to C. Butler Story, 17, Elm Park-gardens, Chelsea, S.W.; or the Rector as above.

Y.M.C.A., Old Ford.—Books of a religious, educational, and scientific character are needed for this. The Y.W.C.A. receive young men and young women from other East-end localities. We are anxious, therefore, to obtain what we cannot buy—viz., books suitable for their education and elevation. Such volumes may be sent (for Y.W.C.A.) to Miss Rowlands; and (Y.M.C.A.) to G. Scholl, Hon. Secretary, 237, Roman-road, Old Ford, E.

The Reinforcements for Burmah.—The Post Chaplain of Rangoon asks for healthful literature for the crews of the fleet in attendance on the troops in Burmah. A great flotilla will arrive at Rangoon in a few months, besides the ships already there, and all local supplies are exhausted. Disused prayer-books, hymn-books, and other books, periodicals, pictorial papers, &c., will be thankfully received, if sent, prepaid, to The Missions to Seamen, 11, Buckingham-street, Strand, W.C. William Dawson, Commander R.N.

East London Seaside Home for Poor and Deserving Children.—This Home was established in the early part of 1884, and during the season of that year 510 children were taken to Southend for a week; and in 1885, 2354 children received the same benefit, at a cost of about eight shillings and sixpence each, while applications were received from hundreds more, who would have been admitted had accommodation and funds allowed. The amount now in hand to commence the present season's work is £2 14s. 10d. Premises at Southend suitable for accommodating 400 or 500 children, with a sea view of fifteen miles, and standing in grounds of over three acres, have been purchased. There is still £1000 to be raised, and the Committee will be deeply grateful for donations towards clearing off this amount, so that hereafter all moneys subscribed to the Home may be devoted entirely to the benefit of the children, and so reduce the cost to five or six shillings per head. The Secretary is Mr. W. H. Bradshaw, Milton House, Plaistow, E.; the Treasurer, Mr. James Cox, 60, Holloway-road, N.

MISS ANSTEY, writing on August 11, mentions the case of a young native of Bangalore, named Krishna Tyengar, 18 years old, who is anxiously inquiring the way of life, and desired to stay at the Colar Mission. His parents have, for the present, taken him back to his home, and there is danger that he may relapse into Mohammedanism. Miss Anstey asks the prayers of our readers, that he may be kept stedfast to the faith of Jesus Christ.

NEW CROSS Y.M.C.A.—A band of young men has been formed who hold open-air services of about ten minutes each on Sunday evenings, in a number of streets near our meeting hall. Last Sunday fortnight a converted ex-convict was preaching, when four Danish sailors listened. So touched were they by the remembrance of the truth as heard in their native land that they attended our service, and the two elder ones found peace, while the other two were sorely convicted of sin.

J. V. Abbott.

DISTRESS IN LABRADOR.—The Halifax Herald states that information received from Newfoundland confirms the reports of the utter failure of the Labrador and shore fisheries. The Labrador catch is one third of the average, and not enough to cover the cost of transport and the supplies advanced to the fishermen. Sixty-five thousand people who are dependent on the Labrador fisheries, stretching over 30,000 miles of coasts, are in actual destitution, and looking to Government aid for salvation from starvation during the coming autumn and winter.

THE LATYMER-ROAD MISSION.—Mr. Aulay Macaulay and his friends have begun their winter work. The Boys' Evening Shelter is already open; the Girls' Shelter will re-commence next week. The Sunday-schools are full of children, but there is a scarcity of teachers, and friends living near Notting-hill will be very welcome. We are sorry to learn that the Committee are seriously hampered by lack of funds. There are two Convalescent Homes in connection with the Mission, one for girls at Yew Tree Farm, Lancing, and another for boys at Abbott's-hill, Ramsgate.

COMFORTED TO COMFORT.

Sermon preached at Melbourne Hall, Leicester, August 8, 1886,

By Rev. F. B. MEYER, B.A.

> "The God of all comfort, who comforteth us in all our affliction, that we may be able to comfort them that are in any affliction, through the comfort wherewith we ourselves are comforted of God."—2 Cor. i. 3, 4 (R.V.).

Child of God, think it not strange concerning the fiery trial which tries thee, as though some strange thing had happened. Rejoice, insomuch as it is a sure sign that thou art on the right track. In an unknown country, a man tells me that I shall presently pass over a stony bit of road on my way to my abiding-place, and when I come to it, each jolt tells me I am right. So when a child of God passes through affliction, he is not surprised, but satisfied. He knows that he is right for the gate of pearl, for it is through much tribulation that we enter the kingdom. Thine afflictions cannot be few.

Look up. There is thy Father, pure and holy. Thou art to be like Him. But ere thou canst be, thou wilt need the file of the lapidary, the heat of the crucible, the bruising of the flail—not to win thy heaven, but to destroy thine unheavenliness. The spirits gathered there, clad in lustrous white, tell thee that the brilliance of their reward has been in the measure of the vehemence of their sorrows. Be sure, then, that thy Father will put within thy reach a brighter crown, by putting thee within the reach of severe affliction.

Look down. Thinkest thou that the prince of hell was pleased, when thou didst forsake him for thy new Master, Christ? Verily not! At the moment of thy conversion thy name was put on the proscribed list, and all the powers of darkness pledged themselves to obstruct thy way. What wonder if affliction comes to thee, as it came to Job, by the permission of Heaven, from hell!

Look around. Thou art still in the world that crucified thy Lord, and would do the same again, if He were again to live amidst it. It cannot love thee. It will call thee Beelzebub. It will cast thee out of its synagogue. It will think it a religious act to kill thee. In the world thou shalt have afflictions, though in the midst of them thou mayest be of good cheer.

Look within. What hast thou there but an evil heart, ever chafing against the rule and will of God; froward, restless, wilful. And in the constant strife between thy will and God's will, what can there be but affliction. This human life is the college of affliction, whither even the King's son came that He might be a faithful High Priest.

For such as thou art, afflicted one, there is no literature so befitting as the Bible, and in the Bible no part more helpful than this epistle, Hope is the keynote of the epistle to the Thessalonians, joy of that to the Philippians, faith of that to the Romans, heavenly things of that to the Ephesians, affliction of this. It was written amid affliction so great, that the Apostle despaired of life. It is steeped in affliction, as a handkerchief with the flowing blood of a fresh wound. But in this passage, the Apostle has built for himself a little chamber of comfort, on the wall of affliction. Its stones are quarried from the pit of his own sorrow. In it he sits and sings, "Blessed be God;" and into it he bids thee come till thine afflictions be past, and thy sky is clear again. It is the chamber of comfort.

When in affliction, mind three things—Look out for comfort; store up comfort; pass on the comfort you get.

(1) Look out for Comfort. It will come certainly. Wherever the nettle grows there grows the dock leaf, and wherever there is a trial, there is, somewhere at hand, a sufficient store of comfort, though our eyes, like Hagar's, are often holden that we do not see it. But it is as sure as the faithfulness of God.

It will come proportionately. God holds a pair of scales. This on the right called AS, is for thine afflictions; this on the left, called SO, is for thy comforts. And the beam is always level. The more thy trial, the more thy comfort. As the sufferings of Christ abound in us, so our consolation also aboundeth through Christ.

It will come divinely. It is well, when meeting a friend at the terminus, to know by what route to expect him, lest he come in on one platform, while we are awaiting him on another. It is equally good to know in what quarter to look for comfort. Shall we look to the hills? No, for in vain is salvation looked for from the hills. Shall we look to man? No, for Job found the best men of his time to be miserable comforters. Shall we look to angels? No, God entrusts angels to fulfil many ministries for us, but never to comfort. This needs a gentler touch than theirs. God dare not entrust it to Gabriel. He comforteth those that are cast down. He healeth the broken in heart, and bindeth up their wounds.

It will come mediately. Our consolation aboundeth through Christ. When a bridegroom makes a present to his wife, he puts it in the rarest casket, and sends it by her choicest friend. And when our God comforts us, He adds to the exquisite beauty of his comfort by sending it through the Son of his love.

It will come directly through the Holy Ghost, that other Comforter, whom the Saviour gives, and who gives us Him, and in giving us Him gives us all.

It will come variously, sometimes by the coming of a beloved Titus, a bouquet, a letter, a message, or a card; sometimes by a promise, laying an ice-cold cloth on our fevered brows; sometimes by God simply coming near. In sore sorrow, he comforts best who says least, and who simply draws near, and takes the sufferer's hand, and is silent in his sympathising love. It is so that God comforts. Thou drewest near in the day of mine affliction, Thou saidst, It is I, be not afraid.

II. Store up Comfort.—The world is full of comfortless hearts. Orphan children crying in the night. Our God pities them, and would comfort them through thee. But ere thou art sufficient for this lofty ministry, thou must be trained. And that He may train thee perfectly, He puts thee through the very same afflictions which are wringing human hearts with aching sorrow. He makes thus for Himself an opportunity of comforting thee, and of so teaching thee the Divine art of comfort. Watch narrowly how He does it. Keep a diary if thou wilt, and note down all the procedure of his skill. Ponder in thine heart the length of each splint, the folds of each bandage, the ministration of each opiate or cordial or drug. This will bring a twofold blessing. It will turn thy thoughts from thy miseries to thine out-numbering mercies; and it will take from thee that sense of useless and aimless existence, which is often the sufferer's weariest cross.

Dost thou wonder why thou dost suffer some special form of sorrow? Wait, till ten years are passed. I warrant thee, that in that time thou wilt find some, perhaps ten, afflicted as thou art. When thou tellest them how thou hast suffered, and how thou hast been comforted, whilst thou unfoldest thy tale, and seekest to repeat on them the magic spells that have charmed away thy griefs; in their glistening eyes and comforted looks, thou wilt learn why thou hast been afflicted, and thou wilt bless God that thou wert able to comfort others with the comfort wherewith thou thyself hadst been comforted of God. Once more, then, remember to store up an accurate remembrance of the way in which God comforts thee.

III. Pass on the Comfort you Receive.—At a railway station, a benevolent man found a schoolboy crying; because he had not quite enough to pay his fare; and he remembered, suddenly, how, years before, he had been in the same plight, but had been helped by an unknown friend, and had been enjoined that some day he should pass that kindness on. Now he saw that the long-expected moment had come. He took the weeping boy aside, told him his story, paid his fare, and asked him, in his turn, to pass the kindness on. And as the train moved from the station, the lad cried cheerily: "I will pass it on, sir," so that act of thoughtful love is being passed on through our world, nor will it stay till its ripples have belted the globe and met again.

"Go thou and do likewise." Is thy heart comforted? Then be on the alert to comfort those who are in any trouble. Thou canst not miss them; they are not scarce. Thine own sad past will make thee quick to detect them, where others might miss them. If thou findest them not, seek them; the wounded hart goes alone to die. Sorrow shuns society. Thou shouldest constantly seek from the Man of Sorrows Himself, directions as to where the sorrowing bide. He knows their haunts, from which they have cried to Him. And when thou comest where they are, do for them as the Good Samaritan did for thee, when He bound up thy wounds, pouring in oil and wine. Comfort them with the comfort wherewith thou thyself hast been comforted by God.

THE CHURCH ARMY.—This work has begun in Sydney with great encouragement. Four officers have been invited by different clergymen to work among the hop-pickers in Kent.

NORWOOD JUNCTION.—For some weeks past Gospel services have been conducted in a tent in Portland-road, under the superintendence of Mr. J. Brown, of the London City Mission. Much blessing has resulted. One evening Mr. R. Weaver, of Battersea, spoke to a crowded audience, and the power of God was manifestly present.

THE COLOURED BAPTISTS of America held their First National Convention at St. Louis, commencing on August 26. Rev. W. J. Simmons, D.D., was elected president, and Rev. James R. Young, vice-president. Several delegates representing the various missionary societies were introduced, and the evangelisation of Africa was one of the leading topics under discussion.

MONTHLY TRACT SOCIETY.—The free distribution of tracts at the Exhibitions in London, Liverpool, Folkestone, and Edinburgh is going on apace, and our distributors report: "The people eagerly accept the tracts." To carry on the work with vigour we want to print a million tracts at once. Will your readers help us to do this?

J. R. Mackenzie, Secretary.
3, New Bridge-street, London, E.C.

TEMPERANCE PIONEERS.—Admiral Sullivan, referring to our notice of the late Admiral Sir W. King-Hall, points out the fact that the late Admiral Otter was engaged in temperance work amongst the sailors in 1854, and that in 1856 he formed a temperance society for his crew and the fishermen on the West Coast of Scotland, where he was engaged on survey. He thus anticipated Admiral Hall by some years in this branch of service.

NORTH BERWICK.—The Children's Special Service Mission have held meetings here during August on the Links at Point Garry, a lovely spot at the west end of the town, every Sabbath afternoon. The services were conducted by Mr. Wm. Robertson, of the Carrubbers' Close Mission, and Mr. James Brown, C.A., Edinburgh. The attendance has averaged from 800 to 1000. The services are to be continued during September by Mr. Arrowsmith, and others. Wm. Davidson.

TRAM-CAR EMPLOYES.—Referring to a statement by Sir John Bennett, that "Mrs. Reaney has an interest of £20,000 in one of the Tramway Companies," Mrs. Reaney says that in February last, at the half-yearly meeting of the North Metropolitan Tramway Company, she held proxies not for £20,000, but £140,000. She adds: From sixteen to seventeen hours a day—the actual time of absence from home of our tram-car employés—only leaves between seven and eight hours out of twenty-four, for everything. Only those who are familiar with the home-life side of our tram-car employés can rightly estimate the cruel wrong done to these men—and through them to others dependent upon them—as individuals. No rest, no right and legitimate intercourse with their families, no Sundays—surely no half per cent. of dividend could be more cruelly wrung out from a body of—for the most part—honest and right-thinking men! Yield the half per cent., and—according to the quotations given by the chairman of the North Metropolitan Tramway Company—everything rights itself; the hours per day are such as any man with "a conscience towards God and a conscience towards all men" could undertake without injury to himself, while the definite Sunday "off duty" would help to fit him the better for the life here as well as for that which follows.

GAINING A BROTHER.

Recently the New York Independent had the following sentence:—"The best way to settle a quarrel is for the innocent one to take the initiative and forgive the guilty one. A quarrel is seldom healed in any other way. Try it."

A late number of the same paper has a letter from a New England pastor, in which, having described a trouble in his church originating in "a personal quarrel between leading members of the church," and the conviction to which he himself at last came, that "unless a reconciliation was effected speedily the church would go down," he speaks of having his attention arrested by the passage above quoted in The Independent. He then says :—

"It seemed to suit the case exactly, and, as in this case both parties were thoroughly convinced of their own innocence, I determined to read the note to both of them. This I did; and the result was that both took the initiative. Everybody forgave everybody else, and at a large church meeting a few days ago, where both parties were present, resolutions of peace were unanimously adopted; and now everything is lovely. On the following Sabbath all the old members were in their places and the church was crowded full. The people here do not as yet know how it happened; but if they did I am sure they would thank the one who wrote that note."

The editor of The Independent, says another American contemporary, is very happy over an incident which illustrates how very good "a word in season" may be, and in the consciousness of having thus, without any knowledge of the circumstances, contributed to save the life of a Christian church, imperilled by dissension among its members.

MR. COOK'S GOSPEL SHIPS.

The Annie has recently visited Calais, and our congregations have been mixed—soldiers, sailors, and civilians, who filled the vessel each night from 8 till 10. The people were truly sorry when the vessel sailed for Dunkerque, where she arrived safely on August 31. Here the meetings were crowded night after night, the people listening most attentively to the Word of God.

The Mystery, now on the coast of Brittany, with the evangelists of Mr. McAll's Mission and the missionary crew, has done good service during the present year. This Gospel ship on the western coast of France is blessed in her mission beyond all expectation. Wherever she goes she receives a warm and most cordial reception. At La Rochelle the resident Christians were anxious about the boat, and feared it would be altogether a failure; but, on the contrary, crowds boarded the vessel to listen to the Gospel message. After remaining some days at this port, the vessel sailed for Lorient, and, as in other ports, the success has been truly marvellous.

Our English work, by means of the steam launch and mission boat, is making good progress, both in the harbour and outside in the roadsteads, among the lightship men, at the forts in the sea, the ships and vessels.

The time of year has returned when 10,000 little bags, eight inches by seven, are needed to supply our soldiers and sailors who will leave the port shortly, as reliefs for India and elsewhere. To these we have given bags well filled with Gospel books and tracts, and a new Testament when needed, for their reading on their passage out, and when settled in their new home for a time.

The Annie, purchased several years ago, is to be condemned entirely for sea service, but will yet be used in some port, probably Folkestone, as a stationary or Gospel ship and Home for Seamen. The new vessel which is to succeed her is estimated to cost £1250, and will be made by a well-known firm at Troon, N.B. It is to be built under Lloyd's survey, Class A 1, for twelve years; 75 ft. long and 21 feet beam, and will seat over 200 persons to hear the Gospel. The promises and amounts received for this purpose make a total of £360. The vessel is needed by February next. It is to be named the Herald of Mercy.

FOREIGN & CONTINENTAL NOTES.

PRAYER FOR MISSIONS.

The American Board of Foreign Missions has selected the first Sabbath of November as a day of special prayer throughout the Protestant world in behalf of missions.

AN AMERICAN CRÈCHE.

The wife of Senator Leland Stanford, of California, has bought for a quarter of a million of dollars her father's homestead at Albany, N.Y., and will maintain it as a day-nursery for the children of working women.

CHINA.

One of the native preachers of Canton is wholly paralysed in his legs, arms, and hands, except the partial use of one thumb and forefinger. Nevertheless, he is carried to chapel, and preaches either sitting or lying on his back, and many have thus received the saving truth of the Gospel from his lips.—The Friend of Missions.

BISHOP HANNINGTON'S SUCCESSOR.

It is but a short time since Bishop Hannington's murder, on his way to Uganda; but already a successor has been found in Rev. H. P. Parker. He has served for six years as Secretary to the Church Missionary Society at Calcutta, and more recently, after resigning that office, has been carrying on a most interesting evangelistic work among the Gonds of Central India.

SLAVERY IN CUBA.

A few months ago a great step towards the abolition of slavery was taken in Brazil, and although complete liberty was not granted at one blow, the limitations and restrictions retained for a time were comparatively insignificant. In Cuba the same policy has been followed, but now, long before the allotted time has expired, it has been decided to sweep away the last barriers that still stand between those who once were slaves and freedom. By this Act of the Legislature 26,000 slaves, now in a position of dependence upon their former masters, will be completely emancipated.

SLAVERY ON THE AFRICAN COAST.

Mrs. Ludwig writes from Mission Hill, Duke Town, Old Calabar :—We live among what they are pleased to call domestic slavery, but it looks just as black and bitter as any other slavery. I think the only difference is they dare not ship the slaves. Old people often come to us, their masters having discarded them, either on account of sickness or because they cannot work. Others come to us for protection from cruelty, which we give; but it means feeding them. Then we take children into our house. We cannot take many, and have had to refuse numbers. We could easily accommodate double the number we do; but we have not the money to purchase food for them.

SABBATH REST ON THE CONTINENT.

At Berlin 1000 carpenters and joiners have petitioned the Reichstag to pass a law to secure rest from labour on Sunday. This would not only ensure rest for the petitioners, but would give employment to a larger number of workmen. At Dresden a large glass manufactory recently dismissed about 1000 men for refusing to work on Sunday. The managers required them to work at least half the day. In the Canton of St. Gall, the Council has decided that henceforth all places for the sale of intoxicating drink shall be closed on Sunday mornings, and in several towns of Canton Vaud the druggists, hair-dressers, and barbers have agreed to close their shops at noon on Sunday.—Bulletin Dominical.

PRUSSIA.

There is a deep religious movement in the province of Prussia; all religious meetings are crowded there, but, unfortunately, the numerous lay preachers and the clergy are at open war with each other. The movement is also in danger of getting too narrow. The signs of true conversion are found in exterior things; for instance, non-smoking. Yet it would be a very great loss if the fruits of a truly spiritual movement were to be lost. Already, last summer, Baron Oertzen, from Hamburg, spent six weeks there to use his influence to bring about an understanding between the clergy and these men. This year he and Count Pückler, from Berlin, went again. A large conference was held. Several leading pastors of the province had been willing to come; also most of the "brethren" were there. It will, we trust, at least have created the conviction that both sides wish to do the Lord's work in sincerity; and if this is believed on both sides, a great step in advance is made.—Evangelical Christendom.

WURTEMBERG.

The Roman Catholic Church in this little kingdom has as many State-paid priests as the Protestant Church has pastors, although the Romanists number only half the Protestants.—Témoin de la Vérité.

A GOOD IDEA.

In a Connecticut Sunday-school a novel method of raising a missionary fund is proving most successful. Each scholar is invited to place in the box, on his or her birthday, the number of pennies corresponding to the age on that day.

INDIA.

Some villagers in Southern India lately said to a missionary: "You ask us to give up the customs of our fathers; but if you are in earnest why are your visits so few and far between? and why are you so few?"—The Friend of Missions.

CANNES.

M. David Espenett, for some years pastor of the church in the Quartier du Riou, and his wife both died on August 4. For twenty-five years he was an earnest, evangelical worker. For the last few years he devoted himself entirely to the Sick Refuge which he founded, and where it will be difficult to replace him.—Journal Réligieux.

A REMARKABLE FACT.

The Converted Catholic says that there is not a reading-room connected with a Y.M.C.A. in America that is not attended by a large number of Roman Catholics. The secretary in New York says 150 regularly frequent the rooms in that city; half of the young men who attend the Bowery Branch can be safely set down as Romanists.

SWATOW, CHINA.

The Swatow Medical Mission Hospital is the largest of the kind in China. No fewer than 3867 in-patients have been treated during the year, while of out-patients there have been 1770. Over eighty patients declared their faith and desired baptism, but it is not the rule to grant this at the close of a term in hospital; applicants are asked to return to their villages and show by life and conduct that they are in earnest, after which they are received at the nearest station to their homes. During the year about fifteen were thus admitted.

THE AMERICAN INDIANS.

Rev. William Barrow says, in The Andover Review, as to the rapid decrease of the American Indians: "The civilisation which cannot make citizens out of Indians, or the religion which cannot make Christians out of the aborigines, must become modest in its pretensions. If American Christianity and American civilisation can do their best only by easing and gracing the extinction of the East Indian, and Turk, and Chinese, and Hawaiian, preparatory to the supremacy of an English-speaking people over their ancestral domains, the theory of Christian missions exposes itself to grave criticism."

CENTRAL AFRICAN MISSION.

News has been received of the death of a third clergyman within three months connected with this mission. Rev. C. S. B. Riddell was only buried on Whitsun Eve, and among those present at the funeral was Rev. Cecil Sherard Pollard, whose death at Mozambique has been announced by telegram. Rev. W. P. Johnson is seriously ill. A Nyassa lad, torn from his home by slaves, rescued by a British man-of-war, trained in the Mission schools, writes by the last mail: "Ring a bell in England, ring a bell! Wake up the great men of the universities, and tell them to send us white teachers, for there are many here who have never seen a white man or heard of God. Ring a bell, sir, for teachers to come and bring light to this land of darkness. Tell them not to lose a moment."

"Love thy God, and love Him only,
And thine heart shall ne'er be lonely.
In that One Great Spirit meet
All things mighty, grave, and sweet.
Vainly strives the soul to mingle
With a spirit of its kind,
Vainly heart to heart is twined,
For the deepest still is single.
An impalpable resistance
Keeps like natures at a distance.
Creature, love that Holy One,
Lest thou dwell for aye alone."

Letters to the Editor.

THE GROWTH OF POPERY.

SIR,—The Protestants of England should be constantly informed of the growing, and now open, sympathy with Popery among those in authority.

On the 7th inst. new colours were presented to the Royal Irish Regiment, at Devonport, in the presence of 10,000 people.

The Daily News of the 8th inst. states that "for the first time since the Reformation the colours were blessed by a priest of the Church of Rome." I would urge all Christians, and especially Nonconformists, to read Lord Robert Montagu's book, "Recent Events," and pray that the eyes of our country may be opened to see the stealthy and rapid marches among us of this enemy of all religious and political liberty, resolved "to bend or break the will" of England. FRIENDS' SCHOOLS AT BIRMINGHAM.

SIR,—I do not think "H. F." can have personally had much to do with the Birmingham Adult Schools, or he would not have complained of the little influence that they have had in the country. Bradford has followed the example of Birmingham, and has schools containing many hundreds of men, all conducted on the same plan. Middlesboro', Manchester, and Bristol also have large schools for men and women which originated from the Birmingham idea. But the plan of adult schools has by no means been confined to our own Society. The Church of England has copied the system in Birmingham and now has a larger number on its books, I believe, than the Friends. The same denomination at Stockport also has very large adult schools; and numberless little offshoots have taken place from Severn-street and the other schools in Birmingham. To give one instance: two working-men belonging to William White's class at Severn-street moved away to an iron foundry at Darlaston some distance from Birmingham. The first thing they did on the Sunday morning after they arrived was to borrow an old donkey barrow and wheel it on to the Common, where hundreds of men met to play pitch and toss and run races. Using this barrow as a platform, they soon got a considerable audience around them, and in a very simple way told them of what a means of blessing the Birmingham Friends' Schools had been to them (one of them was in a state of delirium tremens when searched out by William White, then or soon afterwards Mayor of Birmingham), and offered to take down the names of any of those present who would like to form such a class, and then and there got eighty names and addresses. Then, in their simple-minded fashion, on the way home they got behind a hedge, and, kneeling down, showed the Lord the list, and asked Him who had guided them so far, to give them light as to the place where they should meet these eighty men. The same day they providentially fell in with a clergyman, who had a large empty schoolroom, and was only too delighted to offer it to them, offering also to pay all expenses of fire and lighting. In eighteen months that school numbered 200.

First things are put first, and though no doubt many come at the outset for the reading and writing which is taught, being quite unfitted to learn in the ordinary week-day night school after their heavy day's work, yet numbers of these get greatly blessed at the Bible-readings, which are always held after the writing lessons.

In my brother's writing class at Birmingham, his youngest pupil was eighteen and his eldest seventy. The democratic character of the classes is worthy of note. Many of them pay their own expenses, and will allow of no subscriptions from outside. The teachers are in no sense "priests" or "masters" of the class, but keep on the same level with the men. The consequence is that a large number of men are attracted who will have nothing to do with ordinary missions or churches, through prejudice against priestcraft, and what seems to them like trade in religion.

Friends are not in the habit of trumpeting their successes about, hence the general, but erroneous, idea that little or nothing is being done by them. They do not try to proselytise, simply wishing to bring men to Christ and not Quakerism, hence other religious denominations often get the benefit of these schools, and the classes themselves are often really little independent churches of themselves.

[We have received several other letters on this subject for which we have not space in our present issue.]

THE MANHOOD OF CHRIST.

SIR,—In your issue of July 1, page 20, Mr. Gibson reverently speaks of the Lord Jesus as the "Believer who heads the list." To my mind the thought is most beautiful and helpful, but I have a friend who is much pained at it, and thinks it derogatory to the Lord Jesus to speak of Him as a believer, as it takes away from his Divinity. I pointed out to him that it only applies to Jesus in his human nature, and the very fact that Jesus prayed to his Father, i.e., as man He prayed to God, unquestionably brought Him into the condition of a believer, and in no way clashes with the Divine nature of Christ. My friend disputes this, and states it is simple Unitarianism, and not a single text of Scripture can be brought forward to support such a statement. He refuses to see that Heb. ii. 13, as applied by the Apostle, applies to the Son of Man as man, and before He could trust in God He must believe in God. Will some brother confirm Mr. Gibson's view, or point out where Mr. Gibson is in error.—Yours, W. F. B.

REV. PETER LEYS.

MY DEAR SIR,—I am thankful to you for bringing before the readers of THE CHRISTIAN the remarkable case of Mr. Leys, showing so fully the increasing power of the Jesuits in our land. I quite agree with you that this fresh instance of their subtlety and activity "speaks in a voice of thunder to sleeping Protestants, and bids them wake to guard jealously the privileges bought for them with the blood of their ancestors;" but my difficulty is, how is this to be done? In the city in which I reside, and in every town I visit I see how marvellously the Roman Catholics are spreading like a swarm of locusts over our land; but what are we to do? How can we as Protestant Christians in any way hinder or lessen this growing evil?

If any practicable suggestion can be made through your columns, I and many others will be truly thankful.—Yours very faithfully,

Bath. G. E. THOMAS.

SIR,—Allow me, on behalf of many friends of Rev. Mr. Leys, to thank you for the able, lucid, and sympathetic notice in last week's CHRISTIAN. If you will allow me, I would simply desire, as the uncle of the children, to emphasise that paragraph in which you say, "The end for which Mr. Leys suffered will not be secured till the safety of the children is put beyond doubt." Mr. Leys has told me he would remain in prison to die rather than have his grandchildren continue outlawed, in daily fear of being kidnapped and immured, probably for life, in a Jesuit den. Since this terrible sorrow has befallen us, many cases have been brought before us of this being done. And I would seek to impress on the Christian public that there is at present, and, unless there is power to take action to end it, there will go on for years, a persecution hardly exceeded by much I have read in the history of the "dark days."

These children have had to fly from their home; their education and future prospects are broken up; they are outlawed from Scotland, that "land of the free," in daily fear of being waylaid, and hurried off to a place where neither cries nor tears avail, but where they must, on pain of a constant misery—which, we believe, with their sensitive natures, would end in death—abjure all they hold dear, and curse as miserable heretics all those they love. And all this is not only permitted, but enforced by the law of the land! They are outlawed, not for crime, or murder, or treason, but because they have besought their friends to enable them to follow the dictates of an enlightened and purified conscience.

It is little that we are warned that our steps are dogged, our actions watched, and it is little that there hangs over the devoted grandfather's head a possible further imprisonment—that he is only free by the grace of the Jesuits; but that boys who have intelligence beyond their years, and faith that would beautify any life, however mature, should be dealt with as goods and chattels, the property of one who has invested nothing in them—neither love, nor care, nor money—but who thus acts simply that he may have absolution after the forms of that fell religion—surely this is matter for serious reflection by all true-hearted men, and for the serious attention of those whose duty it is to see that law reflects justice.—Yours truly, R. G. MUNSIE.

Glasgow.

LOCAL BYE-LAWS.

SIR,—One of your correspondents complained lately of the prohibition of all singing of hymns in the streets of a town in which he was engaged. It has been decided recently (Johnson v. Mayor of Croydon) that a bye-law forbidding any musical instrument to be played on Sunday in the streets of a borough is invalid. The same rule would no doubt apply in the case of singing hymns.

Your obedient servant, S. C. B.

The Book World.

THE LIFE AND TEACHINGS OF THE LORD JESUS CHRIST. 2s. 6d. Oxford University Press. We have here a chronological compilation, from the four Evangelists and the first chapter of Acts, of all the narratives of our Lord's life and ministry. This method, of course, destroys the distinctive characteristics of the Gospel narrations, but has the advantage of presenting the earthly life of the Saviour in a complete and consecutive form. Footnotes on each page indicate from which Gospel the passages are taken, and there is a most excellent index of subjects. Several blank pages are attached for MS. notes.

RECENT EVENTS AND A CLUE TO THEIR SOLUTION. By the Right Hon. Lord ROBERT MONTAGU. Second Edition. Hodder & Stoughton. 12s. This book is in its second edition. Its chief interest lies in showing how deeply and persistently the Jesuits and other enemies of the State have plotted against England, and how they are concentrating their power in and against our country. While it brings many proofs of this fact, it is hard to believe, as Lord Robert Montagu would have us do, that Mr. Gladstone, Lord Beaconsfield, and other well-known leaders, have been knowingly agents of the Jesuits. Their political schemes may have facilitated the intrigues of these conspirators, but more conclusive evidence would be necessary to prove Mr. Gladstone and the others attacked to be merely dishonest caballists. We confess, however, that it is difficult to reconcile Mr. Gladstone's outspoken pamphlets on Vaticanism with his subsequent action. One would have thought that the writer of those assaults on Rome would ever after have consistently and earnestly opposed her arrogant claims. Lord Montagu's book deserves to be carefully studied in these Romanizing days.

"HOW TO PRAY THE LORD'S PRAYER" is the title of a tract containing amplifications of each clause of this prayer, designed to aid the mind to grasp its wonderful fulness. It is published (1s. 6d. per 100) at Penman's Tract Depôt, 33, Furnival-street, Holborn, E.C.

A WONDERFUL CONVERSION. Under this title, George King, formerly a pugilist, publishes a short sketch of his life, in the hope that it may be the means of leading others to abandon a sinful life. Copies may be obtained (1d. each, or 7s. per 100) from the author at 7, Strode-villas, South Norwood, Surrey.

OUR DUTY AS TEACHERS. By R. ASHINGTON BULLEN B.A. 3d. 33, Vincent-square, Westminster, S.W. This pamphlet, addressed to teachers, contains the substance of a paper on the subject of social purity read at Carlisle. In an appendix, a plan and rules for working branches of the Social Purity Alliance are given.

ITALIANS AT MARSEILLES.—The evangelisation of the Italian colony in Marseilles was begun in 1879 by Mr. V. Pierallini, under the direction of the Geneva Evangelical Society. He found so much to do, and was so interested with the work, that he soon needed help, and for more than two years I worked with him. But he died in March, 1885, entreating me to take charge of the little church he had gathered. Just at that time, for want of money, the Geneva Society withdrew its help, and I was rather puzzled to know what I should do, whether to give up evangelisation or walk by faith, waiting upon God and ministering to the little flock. I adopted the second plan, and have lived for a whole year on the means God has granted me through generous friends, and some modest earnings in book-binding. These gifts have been a precious indication to me of the will of God. We numbered twenty-seven members, but by removal, death, or exclusion, we were reduced to ten. This year seven new members have been added after conversion, and three returned from Italy, thus raising our number to twenty. The people, although poor workmen, have managed to pay the rent of the hall and other expenses. For lack of money we were obliged to give up our hall in Boulevard National, which was well placed and well attended. To reach our people a hall must be in their midst, and it would be a great thing for us if we could open a hall for them, as they are so poor and withal so numerous in Marseilles—about 60,000. Any gifts would be thankfully received by me; or at Pasteur Monod's, Rue Grignan 94, Marseilles.

Notes on Daily Readings.

SUNDAY, SEPT. 19.—I CHRON. I.

As some of the opening chapters of this book are not suitable for general and practical exposition, we are giving our readers, in substance or in form, portions of the instructive Introduction to the Books of Chronicles found in the "Speaker's Commentary."

INTRODUCTION TO CHRONICLES, BOOKS I. AND II.—These two books, like those of Kings, "were undivided in the Hebrew copies so late as the time of Jerome." The Septuagint translators are said to have divided them. Jerome adopted this division.

Author.—"A very general concensus of the Jewish writers ascribes the composition of Chronicles to Ezra. Among moderns, those who assign Chronicles a later date admit generally that it proceeds from the same author as the Book of Ezra. The same spirit breathes through both books, and numerous little expressions, identical, or nearly so, in the two works, indicate almost certainly the same hand."

Object.—"Ezra's leading object seems to have been to show the divisions of families, possessions, &c., before the captivity, with a view to the exact restoration of the same order after the return from Babylon."—Jamieson. He does not profess to introduce us to any new period of history. "He traverses ground that has already been trodden by others." The Septuagint translators held that Chronicles were written simply as a supplement to Samuel and Kings; so they called them paraleipomena—"things left over." This was no doubt one of the writer's objects. That it was not the main purpose seems clear from the fact that "a very considerable part of Chronicles is a mere repetition of Samuel and Kings—repetition, sometimes, of whole chapters with only a few verbal differences (compare 1 Chron. x. 1—12 and 1 Sam. xxxi.; 1 Chron. xvii. and 2 Sam. vii; 1 Chron. xviii. and 2 Sam. viii.; 1 Chron. xix. and 2 Sam. x.; 1 Chron. xxi. and 2 Sam. xxiv.; 2 Chron v. 2—vii. 10 and 1 Kings viii.; 2 Chron. xxii. 10—xxiv. 1 and 2 Kings xi.). This is not the character of a history whose chief purpose was to supplement, e.g., the Gospel of St. John.

MONDAY, SEPT. 20.—I CHRON. II.

Object (continued).—The general character, arrangement, and tenor of the work show that Ezra wrote with an immediate practical object. The people had lately returned from captivity—had rebuilt the Temple, but had "not yet gathered up the threads of the old national life." They required to be reminded of their position among the nations of the earth. . . . This is done, curtly and drily, but sufficiently, by means of genealogies, which have always a peculiar attraction for Orientals. They have, then, to be more especially reminded of their own past as a settled people, with a religion that has a fixed home in the centre of the nation's life. The writer is strongly convinced that the whole future prosperity of his countrymen is bound up with the preservation of the Temple service. Accordingly, the Books of Chronicles are ecclesiastical, while those of Samuel and Kings are more political. With great care, the writer points out that in almost every instance temporal rewards and punishments followed in exact accordance with the attitude of the king towards the national religion. "This condensed view of the entire previous history, written in the idiom of the day, with frequent allusions to recent events, with a constant reiteration of the moral intended to be taught, was calculated to affect the newly-returned and still unsettled people far more deeply than the old narratives, written without reference to the existing state of things, in language less familiar, and with less pointedly didactic force. It bridged over the gulf that separated the nation after, from the nation before, the captivity." The date has been fixed with very considerable probability at B.C. 450—435.

TUESDAY, SEPT. 21.—I CHRON. III.

The Writer's Authorities.—"His most frequent reference is to a general history—the 'Book of the Kings of Israel and Judah,' called in one place the 'Book of the Kings of Israel' (2 Chron. xvi. 11, xxv. 26, xxvii. 7, xxviii. 26, xxxv. 27, xxxvi. 8). This appears to have been a compilation from the two histories constantly mentioned in Kings—the 'Book of the Chronicles of the Kings of Israel,' and the 'Book of the Chronicles of the Kings of Judah,' which it had been found convenient to unite into one. It is clearly not the 'Book of Kings' of the sacred canon, since it contained the deeds of the monarchs, 'first and last,' 'all their wars and all their ways;' and since it is quoted for facts and utterances not contained in our present 'Book of Kings.'" "The other works cited were partial histories, the works of prophets who dealt with particular portions of the national annals. He mentions twelve or thirteen as extant in his day (1 Chron. xxvii. 24, xxix. 29, 2 Chron. ix. 29, xii. 15, xiii. 22, xx. 34, xxiv. 27, xxvi. 22, xxxii. 32, xxxiii. 19)." A third source, one drawn upon very largely, was our present Books of Samuel and the Kings.

Characteristics.—"As compared with the parallel histories of Samuel and Kings, the history of Chronicles is marked by three principal features: (1) A greater tendency to dwell on the details of the Temple worship, the various functions of the Priests and Levites, &c. In the writer's mind the religious establishment is of primary, the State of secondary, importance. (2) A marked genealogical bias, and desire to put on record the names of persons engaged in any of the events narrated. (3) The third characteristic, which may be called the key-note of Chronicles—the more constant, open, and direct ascription of all the events of the history to the Divine agency, and the inevitable connection between righteousness and prosperity, sin and sorrow—is struck almost as soon as any narrative is entered upon. It recurs like the refrain of a song even in the dry, genealogical introduction (see iv. 10, v. 18—20, v. 25, 26, ix. 1). Henceforth the entire narrative does but repeat and deepen this one impression."

WEDNESDAY, SEPT. 22.—I CHRON. IV.

"The style of Chronicles is less gloomy than Kings, being addressed to the restored nation. The liberated nation found in Chronicles a review of its past calculated to help it forward on its new path of progress."

9, 10.—Jabez = sorrowful. Of the nature of the sorrow referred to we know nothing—only the fact that it was great enough to kill the natural joy and hope of motherhood, draping the future with hues so gloomy that "sorrowful" was the most fitting name she could think of for her little one. Contrast her view of the future with its actual history—the deep foreboding with the genuine godliness, the high character and large success, which would yet make her boy's sad name glorious. Here is good cheer for the despondent. The God of Israel.—He took hold of God as covenanted to his people in Israel, their father. So for us the best prayer-platform is covenant relationship to God in Jesus Christ. Oh that Thou wouldest bless me indeed, &c.—The object of this prayer seems to have been temporal success; but in spirit it was most childlike and spiritual. It is likely that he was about to attempt to recover from the Canaanites some portion of the family property which was theirs by allotment, though not by actual possession, and that he felt very deeply the need of God's effectual blessing, his hand with him, through every part of the enterprise. If this be the true explanation, we have here a delightful encouragement to seek temporal blessings from God. And God granted him that which he requested.—To us this prayer is full of spiritual suggestion; every clause is capable of a spiritual application. Let us adopt this prayer, giving it thus its higher direction, and at once the words, "God granted him," &c., are full of promise. If this request was granted to Jabez when the object was worldly prosperity, how much more, when using the same words we seek for those nobler blessings which God loves best to bestow, will our prayer be heard!

THURSDAY, SEPT. 23.—I CHRON. V.

This chapter occupies itself with the tribes of Reuben, Gad, and the half tribe of Manasseh who settled in the country eastward of Jordan. "These tribes were first placed, and first displaced."—Henry and Scott. Three points of this chapter invite meditation: (1) Birthright forfeited by sin (1); (2) victory through prayer (18—22); and (3) national ruin through national sin (25, 26).

9.—He inhabited.—"The antecedent to 'he' is rather 'Reuben' than Bela or Joel. Eastward the Reubenites inhabited as far as the desert which extended from the Euphrates to their borders. This is the great Syrian desert, a continuation of the Arabian towards the north, a vast wedge interposed between the valley of the Euphrates and the fertile strip of coast along the Mediterranean."—Sp. Com.

10.—The Hagarites.—Descendants of Hagar—"one of the most powerful tribes of the Syrian desert."

18—22.—Jetur and Nephish.—"Are mentioned among the descendants of Ishmael, both in 1 Chron. i. 31, and Gen. xxv. 15." The words, "from the river," &c., in the well-known prophecy that described the extent of the promised land, marks out the district between Jordan and the Euphrates as a part of the land to be possessed. This fact seems to explain the words the war was of God (22); for by this war prophecy was fulfilled, though imperfectly. It may be, too, that the knowledge of this prophecy encouraged the Israelites both to begin the war, and to seek and expect God's blessing in it. This was the son of the freeman casting out the son of the bondman. "The Israelites cried to God, and put their trust in Him. They acted as Israelites indeed."—Henry and Scott. They leaned not on their powerful army, but on their commission to possess the land, and also on God Himself. We, too, have a great land to possess, and a great God to help us to possess it. We need only the courage to go up in his name and make it ours.

FRIDAY, SEPT. 24.—I CHRON. VI.

"Though Joseph and Judah shared between them the forfeited honours of the birthright, yet Levi was dignified with an honour more valuable than either the precedency or the double portion, viz., the priesthood. Of that tribe we have an account in this chapter. The priests and Levites were more concerned than any other Israelite to be able to prove their pedigree, because all the honours and privileges of their office depended on their descent."—Henry and Scott. When, on their return from the captivity, some families failed to show their priestly descent, they were at once degraded, and forbidden to eat of holy things (Ezra ii. 62, 63). "The line of Eleazar, the successor of Aaron, is here drawn down to the time of the captivity. It begins with Eleazar, who came out of the house of bondage in Egypt; and ends with the Jehozadak who went into the house of bondage in Babylon. Thus for their sins they were left as they were found, which might also intimate that the Levitical priesthood made nothing perfect: that was to be done by the bringing in of the better hope."—Idem.

54—81.—"This account is much the same as that we have in Josh. xxi. We need not be critical in comparing them. It is common for places to have several names. Sarum and Salisbury, Salop and Shropshire, are more unlike than Hilen (58) and Holon (Josh. xxi. 15); Ashan (59) and Ain (Josh. xxi. 16); Alemeth (60) and Almon (Josh. xxi. 18). Also time changes names."—Henry.

SATURDAY, SEPT. 25.—I CHRON. VII.

"In this chapter we have some account of the genealogies of Issachar (1—5), Benjamin (6—12), Naphtali (13), Manasseh (14—19), Ephraim (20—29), Asher (30—40). Here is no account either of Zebulon or Dan." For this omission we can give no reason; "only it is the disgrace of the tribe of Dan that idolatry began in that colony of Danites which fixed in Laish and called it Dan; and there one of the golden calves was set up by Jeroboam. Dan is omitted Rev. vii. Here is an account of the incursion of the Philistines (21), to make depredations on the cattle of the children of Israel. Ephraim, of whom it had been declared that it should be a numerous and prosperous tribe, was thus first diminished. The dispensations of Providence sometimes appear to run counter to the promises of God. Their performance thus may be the more seen and admired."—Henry and Scott.

SOUTHSEA COMMON.—For three months a Gospel tent has been on Southsea Common. Mr. Charles Cook, of Hyde Park Hall, has been there for a week holding afternoon Bible-readings, and preaching in the evening. Many cases of conversion have occurred among the soldiers. On Sunday week one man rushed from the tent, and, falling on his knees on the Common, before all the people, cried aloud for mercy.

DOVER SOLDIERS' HOME.—This Institution, started nearly eight years ago by General Hoste, R.A., and a few friends, has been ever since of great value to the troops quartered in this place. It is under the supervision of a lady who devotes herself unsparingly to the work. The lease expiring shortly, the present site is to be taken as a telegraph station. It is desired to establish a new "Home," worked on similar lines, but considerably larger, and more suitable to the present garrison of three infantry regiments and four batteries of artillery. The need for the maintenance of such a Home is obviously very great. The work is of the deepest nature, and aims, above all, at the conversion of souls, whilst not neglecting the temporal comfort of all comers. Particulars may be obtained by referring to the Lady Superintendent, 22, Castle-street; General Heath, 21, Victoria-park; or Colonel Sladen, Ripple-court, Walmer.

THAMES CHURCH MISSION.

INSTITUTED 1844.

President—The RIGHT HON. the LORD MAYOR.
Chairman—CAPT. the HON. F. MAUDE, R.N.
Secretary—REV. H. BLOOMER.

Object—To win Souls for Christ.

Twenty-three Agents are constantly at work in the Port of London. The results of their previous efforts, made in simple faith, show that they have been greatly blessed by God.

FUNDS ARE URGENTLY NEEDED.

Numbers of THE CHRISTIAN, Magazines, Tracts, &c., are most necessary, and will greatly assist the Chaplains and Missionaries.

The Secretary will be pleased to give an account of the Work either at School Room, Lecture Hall, or Drawing Room Meetings.

Offices, 31, New Bridge-street, Ludgate Circus, E.C.

THE CRY OF THE CHILDREN.

President—Right Hon. EARL OF ABERDEEN.

Over FIFTY THOUSAND of our poorest City Children regularly attend the 180 RAGGED SCHOOL MISSIONS affiliated with the

RAGGED SCHOOL UNION.

THE operations include Sunday and Bible Schools, Day and Infant Free Schools, Week-night Schools for Rough Lads and Girls, Industrial Classes, Gospel Mission Services, Mothers' Meetings, Ragged Churches, Bands of Hope, Temperance Meetings, and Crèches. Country Houses provided for the weakly or convalescent. Emigration is also promoted, and numerous other agencies for the benefit of the poor children and their parents. Additional funds are urgently needed, and will be thankfully acknowledged by

JOHN KIRK, Secretary.

Offices—Exeter Hall, Strand, W.C.

In Crown 8vo., Cloth. Price 6s. post free.

THE EXPECTED RAPTURE OF THE CHURCH,

Or, The Analogy of Prophecy and Established Fact.

By G. WARRAND HOUGHTON.

"We commend the book to the thoughtful attention of our readers as an honest and impartial attempt to elucidate the teaching of Scripture on one of the most important doctrines of revelation."—The Christian.

MORELLA

AT LAST! Advocates of Temperance have here what has been so long desired, a

Strictly Non-Alcoholic Unfermented Wine,

BOTH STILL AND SPARKLING,

from the pure juice of the famous Kentish Morella Cherry, preserved by a newly-discovered process without alcohol. Its delicious flavour charms the palate, whilst by its wholesome, fruity character and body it refreshes and sustains as no other Temperance drink can do.

Supplied direct, and sold by Grocers and others; the Still, in claret bottles, at 1s. 3d. per bottle. The Sparkling, in champagne bottles, at 1s. 5d. Half bottles, 10d. Urge your Grocer to keep it.

Small sample of the Still by post 7d. in stamps, and half bottle of the Sparkling for 1s. 6d. See analysis.

THOMAS GRANT & SONS, Maidstone,

and Depot—46, GRESHAM STREET, LONDON, E.C.

Provincial orders and correspondence to Maidstone.

Makers of the Delicious Morella Marmalade.

TO GROCERS, CONFECTIONERS, &c.—Every facility given for supplying THROUGH THE TRADE the eager demand which has arisen. Apply at once for particulars to Maidstone or Gresham-street.

THE INSPIRATION OF THE BIBLE.

A LECTURE BY

H. L. HASTINGS, Editor of the ANTI-INFIDEL LIBRARY.

Published by SAMUEL BAGSTER & SONS, Limited, 15, Paternoster Row, LONDON, E.C., as a neat pamphlet, on fine tinted paper, at One Penny. By post, 1½d. Suitable for gifts, or enclosure in Letters. Translated into nine different languages. Fourth Hundred Thousand.

D. L. MOODY.—Very important.—I wish we could get every young man and every young woman to hear that lecture, INSPIRATION.—I, myself, would walk ten miles to hear it again.

LORD SHAFTESBURY.—Admirable. I shall do my best to distribute it widely.

CANON WILBERFORCE.—One of the most pungent and useful ever published. ("Trinity of Evil," p. 22).

THE LORD BISHOP OF LIVERPOOL.—I am familiar with the works of H. L. Hastings, and I like them.

REV. ANDREW BONAR, D.D.—H. L. Hastings, of Boston, America, has done good service to the cause of Christ for many years. His writings have been much blessed, being full of evangelical truth set forth with glowing earnestness.

Announcement by the Author of "Inspiration."

SOME time in October MESSRS. HAUGHTON & Co., 10, PATERNOSTER ROW, LONDON, E.C., will begin the publication of my paper (long established in America),

The Christian Safeguard, as an Eight-page Penny Monthly, the four inside pages being printed with a distinct head, so as to separate completely from the outside, if desired, for the convenience of distributors.

The Armory,

THE SAFEGUARD will be devoted to the advancement of Gospel Temperance, and Social Reforms. A large original Temperance Engraving in every number.

THE ARMORY will present short, pithy, pointed articles on Christian Evidences, Biblical Studies, and the Refutation of Infidel Objections.

The First Number will contain the Lecture "Inspiration" complete.

SPECIAL OFFERS.

I.—Any Church, Y.M.C.A., Mission, or individual, that will, before October 10, 1886, pledge to send to Messrs. Haughton & Co., 10, Paternoster Row, London, E.C., on the first day of each month, £1 10s. for five months, for extending the circulation of THE CHRISTIAN SAFEGUARD, will receive in return one thousand copies per month, and will further be entitled to call for a Lecture on Christian Evidences, Temperance, or a Gospel Service, by H. L. Hastings, free, during the winter of 1886-7.

I expect to be in London in December, and begin immediately a series of lectures upon Christian Evidences, Infidelity, Temperance, and of Gospel Services in Great Britain and Ireland.

⁂ The remittances must come in promptly on the first day of each month, without troubling Messrs. Haughton & Co. to send bills.

The pledge must be accompanied by the first remittance of £1 10s.

This offer is open to the Christian public in Great Britain until ten lectures have been called for.

II.—Anyone who, before October 10, 1886, will send £1 10s. to Messrs. Haughton & Co. for THE CHRISTIAN SAFEGUARD, will receive one thousand copies of No. 1 for distribution.

The regular terms will be—One copy, 1d.; One year, post free, 1s. 6d. Quantities for free distribution—Five hundred copies, £1 1s.; one thousand, £1 15s.; five thousand, £6 10s.; ten thousand, £10 10s.

H. L. HASTINGS.
Glasgow, August 6, 1886.

THE CHRISTIAN SAFEGUARD is well worthy of the countenance and support of the Christian Community in this country as well as in America. Its trumpet always gives a certain sound.

ANDREW A. BONAR,
Minister, Finieston F. C., Glasgow.

Mission to Deep-Sea Fishermen.

Six Mission Vessels are cruising amongst the North Sea trawling fleets. 12,000 smacksmen are engaged all the year round in providing our tables with fish. These men, who for us toil through furious blasts and sleety storm—who hazard their lives and fall victims, hundreds of them, to the pitiless waves, that markets at home may be well supplied—may rightly claim some small share in the privileges we so richly enjoy and so highly prize.

THIS THEY CAN ONLY HAVE THROUGH THE PRESENCE OF THE MISSION VESSELS,

Carrying to the fishermen the message of Divine mercy and pardoning love, bringing the pleasure of books to while away the weary hours, affording relief in case of sickness and injury, and cheering and brightening dull and monotonous lives by their presence and ministry.

"The Mission smacks are doing in the North Sea a grand work, worthy of the support of a great maritime nation like England, and I believe that the results of their effort, great as they are in the present, will, if only supported liberally by the public, be of untold value in the future."—Sir Edward Birkbeck, Bart., M.P.

"The Mission to Deep Sea Fishermen is worthy the most liberal support of the public. It has done, is doing, and is likely to do, we believe, a grand work among our fishermen at sea."—The Yarmouth Independent.

"I look upon the Mission Vessel as a blessing to the trade of the Port."—The Mayor of Great Grimsby.

"It is indeed an advantage for our fishermen at sea by means of these vessels to enjoy the same privileges as we ourselves do on shore.—The Mayor of Great Yarmouth.

FUNDS are URGENTLY NEEDED to enable the Mission to place a Vessel with EVERY FLEET.

E. J. MATHER, Director.

181, QUEEN VICTORIA STREET (Next door to Blackfriars Bridge).

N.B.—The Offices were removed to this address in December last; attention to the change will save much trouble time, and expense to the Mission.

SCRIPTURE TEXTS.

Published by MORGAN & SCOTT, 12, Paternoster-buildings; and may be had of any Bookseller.

From the late AGNES ELIZABETH JONES, Lady Superintendent of Nurses at the Liverpool Workhouse.

"The Lady Superintendent of Nurses begs to acknowledge the receipt of the Parcels of Texts as ordered. She more and more feels their value. The patients lying in their beds can read the words—the print is so distinct.

"As she is going to undertake the charge of several hundred more patients, she wishes to give other Wards the advantage of these Texts on the wall."

In very large type, printed in blue ink, size 31 in. by 20 in., 70 different Texts, 3d. each.
Mounted on canvas, varnished, and with eyelet holes, 9d. each.
Mounted on rollers and varnished, 1s. 6d. each.

LIST OF THE TEXTS.

1. "Choose you this day whom ye will serve."
2. "The wages of sin is death."
2.* "The gift of God is eternal life, through Jesus Christ our Lord."
3. "Repent ye, therefore, and be converted, that your sins may be blotted out."
4. "Repent and turn to God, and do works meet for repentance."
5. "The soul that sinneth, it shall die."
6. "In whom we have redemption through His blood, the forgiveness of sins."
7. "All have sinned, and come short of the glory of God."
8. "Except a man be born again, he cannot see the kingdom of God."
9. "The Lord is nigh unto all them that call upon Him, to all that call upon Him in truth."
10. "Behold the Lamb of God, who taketh away the sin of the world."
11. "The Son of Man is come to seek and to save that which was lost."
12. "The Lord is good to all; and His tender mercies are over all His works."
13. "The fear of the Lord is the beginning of knowledge; but fools despise wisdom and instruction."
14. "Blessed are they whose iniquities are forgiven, and whose sins are covered."
15. "When we were yet without strength, in due time Christ died for the ungodly."
16. "Ye are all the children of God by faith in Christ Jesus."
17. "Whosoever will, let him take the water of life freely."
18. "Now in Christ Jesus ye, who sometime were far off, are made nigh by the blood of Christ."
19. "Seek ye the Lord while He may be found; call ye upon Him while He is near."
20. "Christ also hath once suffered for sins, the Just for the unjust, that He might bring us to God."
21. "Herein is love: not that we loved God, but that He loved us, and sent His Son to be the propitiation for our sins."
22. "God commendeth His love toward us, in that while we were yet sinners, Christ died for us."
23. "As by one man's disobedience many were made sinners, so, by the obedience of One, shall many be made righteous."
24. "Worthy is the Lamb that was slain, to receive power, and riches, and wisdom, and strength, and honour, and glory, and blessing."
26. "The just shall live by faith."
31. "As many as received Him, to them gave He power to become the sons of God."
32. "The blood of Jesus Christ His Son cleanseth us from all sin."
33. "Through this Man is preached unto you the forgiveness of sins."
34. "Thou wast slain, and hast redeemed us to God by Thy blood out of every kindred, and tongue, and people, and nation."
35. "God sent not His Son into the world to condemn the world; but that the world through Him might be saved."
36. "He that believeth on the Son hath everlasting life."
37. "He that believeth not the Son shall not see life; but the wrath of God abideth on him."
38. "Though your sins be as scarlet, they shall be as white as snow; though they be red like crimson, they shall be as wool."
39. "God so loved the world, that He gave His only-begotten Son, that whosoever believeth on Him should not perish, but have everlasting life."
40. "I am the way, the truth, and the life: no man cometh unto the Father, but by Me."
42. "Let us run with patience the race that is set before us, looking unto Jesus."
43. "This is a faithful saying, and worthy of all acceptation, that Christ Jesus came into the world to save sinners."
44. "Come unto Me, all ye that labour and are heavy laden, and I will give you rest."
45. "Suffer little children to come unto Me, and forbid them not."
46. "He shall gather the lambs with His arm, and carry them in His bosom."
47. "Children, obey your parents in all things: for this is well-pleasing unto the Lord."
48. "I love them that love Me, and those that seek Me early shall find Me."
51. "Remember now thy Creator in the days of thy youth."
52. "Rest in the Lord, and wait patiently for Him."
53. "Casting all your care upon Him; for He careth for you."
54. "The Eternal God is thy refuge, and underneath are the everlasting arms."
55. "He hath said, I will never leave thee nor forsake thee."
56. "I have learned in whatsoever state I am, therewith to be content."
57. "As thy days so shall thy strength be."
58. "In all their afflictions He was afflicted.
59. "Whom the Lord loveth He chasteneth."
60. "Believe on the Lord Jesus Christ, and thou shalt be saved."
61. "Whosoever shall confess that Jesus is the Son of God, God dwelleth in him, and he in God."
62. "He is despised and rejected of men; a Man of Sorrows, and acquainted with grief."
63. "He was wounded for our transgressions, He was bruised for our iniquities."
64. "The chastisement of our peace was upon Him; and with His stripes we are healed."
65. "All we like sheep have gone astray; we have turned every one to his own way."
66. "The Lord hath laid on Him the iniquities of us all."
67. "Look unto Me, and be ye saved, all the ends of the earth."
68. "Ho, every one that thirsteth, come ye to the waters."
69. "If any man thirst, let him come unto Me, and drink."
70. "If thou shalt confess with thy mouth the Lord Jesus, and shalt believe in thine heart that God hath raised Him from the dead, thou shalt be saved."
71. "It is the blood that maketh atonement for the soul."

The eight following are in Extra Large Type.

25. "Jesus only."
27. "Now."
28. "God is love."
29. "Behold, He cometh."
30. "Have faith in God."

MR. G. T. CONGREVE'S NEW WORK ON CONSUMPTION,
CHRONIC BRONCHITIS, COUGHS, ASTHMA, AND ALL OTHER CHEST DISEASES.

SIXPENCE (Post Free), or Large Edition (cloth), 1s. 3d. from the Author, Coombe Lodge, Peckham, S.E., and Elliot Stock, 62, Paternoster-row, E.C.

The Eighteenth Series of Weekly Cases is now publishing, from May to August.

NOTICE TO THE READERS OF "THE CHRISTIAN," WHO MAY BE PERSONALLY OR RELATIVELY INTERESTED IN THIS MATTER.

Mr. Congreve will give ONE RECENT CASE, NOT PUBLISHED in this journal BEFORE, EVERY WEEK.

CASE FOR THIS WEEK.

CASE of Miss M. BELL, SELKIRK.

First correspondence three years ago. Illness traced back to pleurisy twelve years before. Physician declared there to be tendency to phthisis.

On the 8th of July I received the following letter:—Dear Sir,—I take the liberty of writing to thank you, which I ought to have done before. Three years ago I was under your treatment, and received two bottles of your valuable medicine, which completely cured me.—M. Bell, 3, Market-place, Selkirk."

LETTER from Mr. SAWYER, WALLINGFORD.

Writing recently on behalf of a young lady, this patient says:—"She is induced to try your treatment, through the wonderful benefit I have received from your medicine. She is poor, and I hope you will accede to her request and reduce your charge. With many thanks, yours, &c., T. S."

I need scarcely say that, being convinced of the need, I willingly (as in all cases well recommended), endeavoured to meet the necessities of the case.

NOTE. — Days of Consultation. — TUESDAY, THURSDAY, and SATURDAY Mornings ONLY, at Coombe Lodge, Peckham. Patients from any long distance should choose either of the two former days. Everyone is expected to have seen the book first.

SIR WILLIAM DAWSON, F.R.S., F.G.S.,

President of the British Association.

IN the interests of science, as well as of revealed religion, it is in the highest degree desirable that the British Association should comprise men who are an example to younger scientists of conservative caution in the pursuit of truth. It is not many years since Europe and America were scandalised by an address, at Belfast, from the presidential chair, which was the culmination of the sensational materialism that had been aiming to control and guide scientific opinion. Since then there has happily been a reaction, which has been followed by invaluable results, and towards which the President of the meetings just held at Birmingham has nobly contributed.

Sir William Dawson's name ranks among those of the foremost men of science in this century, as a life-long student of nature who is yet a patient learner, an accurate observer without assumption, and a Christian without ostentation or timidity. No one doubts his scientific eminence. Although his researches have been specially devoted to the physical geography of the North American Continent, his personal observations have ranged over wide areas in the two hemispheres. They have been occupied with many of the minute and most abstruse problems in Geology, as well as with those grander aspects of nature which gave such a remarkable character to his Birmingham address. His conclusions are so obviously the result of the most painstaking field-work, and thoroughly careful study, as to be rarely controverted, and they carry with them the agreement of not a few of the very foremost scientists of the age.

Mr. Dawson received his early academic training in the college of Pictou, then one of the best institutions of higher education in Nova Scotia. Here, while prosecuting his studies as a schoolboy and student, he began to make collections in the natural history of his native province. Having finished his course at Pictou, he entered the University of Edinburgh. After a winter's study he returned to Nova Scotia, and devoted himself with ardour to geological research. He was the companion of Sir Charles Lyell during his tour in Canada, in 1842, and followed up these researches by studies of the carboniferous rocks of Nova Scotia. In the autumn of 1846 he returned to the University of Edinburgh.

(From Photograph by Mr. John Collier, Birmingham.)

We should gather, from what we have heard from his own lips, that it was in Edinburgh he learnt those habits of careful and laborious investigation which have imparted such accuracy to his scientific conclusions. There he studied stratigraphy, palæo-botany, the minute structure of fossil forms of animal life, and practical chemistry. There also he devoted himself to literary pursuits, and not only obtained an ordinary classical education, but a knowledge of Hebrew that doubtless has contributed to that strength of his conviction as to the value of the Old Testament Scriptures which has frequently appeared in his public addresses. It is the superficial reader who undervalues the revelations of the Old Testament; the true student will maintain that attitude of loyalty to its wondrous records which has ever been a distinguishing trait in the character of the eminent man whose career we are sketching. "The Bible," we have heard him say, "has been my strength from day to day;" and if we inquired far enough we should find that soundness of understanding and strong good sense come from reading of the Scriptures as from no other source. In another sense than was probably meant by the Psalmist it is true, "A good understanding have they that do his commandments."

In 1847 Mr. Dawson was united in marriage to an Edinburgh lady, the youngest daughter of Mr. George Mercer. This lady, it is said, has, by her high Christian character, her accomplishments, and social qualities, graced and dignified the public and private life of her husband. Lady Dawson is devoted to downright Christian work, especially in self-forgetting efforts for young women; and her influence, with that of her husband, in plans of usefulness, makes them a great blessing in Montreal, where they now reside.

In 1850, when thirty years of age, Mr. Dawson was appointed superintendent of education for Nova Scotia. This office he held for three years, and rendered valuable service to that province at a time of special interest in the history of its schools and educational institutions. He also took an active part in the establishment of a Normal School in Nova Scotia, and in the regulation of the affairs of the University of New Brunswick.

In 1855 he was called to the position which he still holds—that of Principal and Professor of Natural History in McGill College and University: an Institution which, situated in Montreal, the commercial capital of Canada, draws its students from all parts of the Dominion. The University, under his influence and management, has prospered beyond the most sanguine expectation of its promoters. The raising of the College to its present position would have been work enough in itself for these years, but in addition to this Dr. Dawson has had under his care the Protestant Normal School. From his position there, he has exerted a powerful influence in the moulding and controlling of the school system of the country.

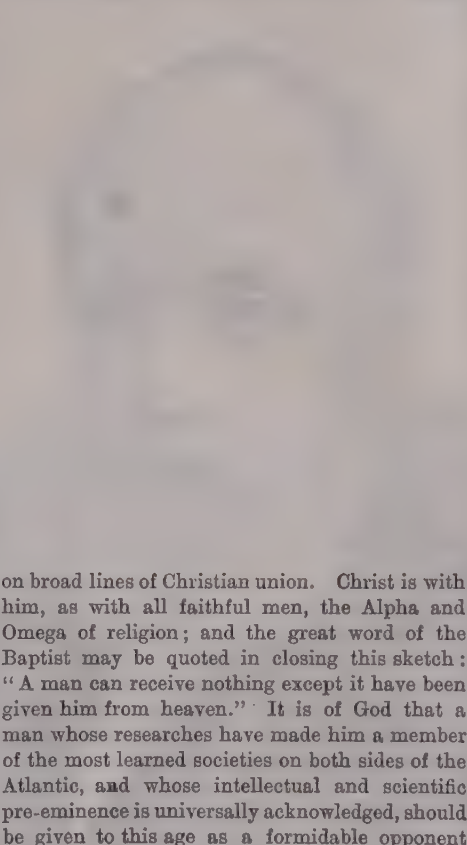
In the midst of these important and engrossing educational labours, Dr. Dawson carried on his scientific investigations. When ten years of age he began his collections of fossil plants. It was when he was twenty-three that he communicated a paper on the rocks of Eastern Nova Scotia to the Geological Society of London. From that time his contributions to various journals have been numerous and important. In 1856, though then trammelled by the arduous duties incumbent upon the Principal of a University, he still continued his geological work in his native province, and prepared a description of its Silurian and Devonian rocks. In 1859 his "Archaia," or studies of creation in Genesis, appeared—a work showing not only a thorough knowledge of natural history, but also considerable familiarity with the Hebrew language and with Biblical literature. His contributions in later years to the stores of geological knowledge and research have been ample and weighty, but they need not be particularised in detail in these columns.

Dr. Dawson has always been a staunch opponent of the theory of total land glaciation. "The Story of the Earth and Man," issued in 1873 (Hodder & Stoughton), was a republication of papers published in The Leisure Hour. It gives a popular view of the whole of the Geological ages, presented in a series of word-pictures, and with discussions of the theories as to the origin of mountains, the introduction and succession of life, the glacial period, and other controverted topics. A course of six lectures, delivered in New York in the winter of 1874-75, has been largely circulated both in America and England, under the title "Revelation and Science;" and in 1875 there also appeared in London and New York a popular illustrated résumé of the facts relating to ancient fossils, entitled "Life's Dawn on Earth"—which, however, is now out of print. Another important work is "Fossil Men and their Modern Representatives." At the Detroit meeting of the American Association, Professor Dawson delivered an address in which he vigorously combated the doctrines of Evolution as held by its more extreme supporters.

In 1882 Dr. Dawson received one of the highest honours of the London Geological Society—the Lyell medal—and was elected the first President of the Royal Society of Canada, which he had organised at the desire of the Marquis of Lorne, then Governor-General. It may be added that the Canadian Royal Society has had, so far, a prosperous career. In the same year he was elected President of the American Association for the Advancement of Science, and closed his presidential address with words of wise counsel against unauthorised confidence and hasty generalisations in the study of Geology.

Perhaps the highest mark of human honour shown him has been the place he has occupied as President of the British Association. He has moved among the Sections and the different meetings of the Association with a deference and friendliness which have won for him a general and almost affectionate regard. It has been clear to observers that eminent scientists in his own line have either been in full accord with him, or, if they hesitated, have listened to his papers and observations with very marked respect. Even men of a different school, and with little of his cautious temper, while they have confessed that some of their speculations found little favour with him, have acknowledged that it has been with very attractive grace he has indicated to them that their evidence was scientifically incomplete and unsatisfactory.

Sir William Dawson is a Presbyterian, but he told the present writer that from this fact it must not be understood that he was unduly attached to any form of ecclesiastical government. In Montreal he conducts Bible-classes for students, Sunday-school teachers, and others, on broad lines of Christian union. Christ is with him, as with all faithful men, the Alpha and Omega of religion; and the great word of the Baptist may be quoted in closing this sketch: "A man can receive nothing except it have been given him from heaven." It is of God that a man whose researches have made him a member of the most learned societies on both sides of the Atlantic, and whose intellectual and scientific pre-eminence is universally acknowledged, should be given to this age as a formidable opponent of materialistic speculations, and a witness to the harmony of revealed religion with the most careful and advanced deductions of modern science.



THE CARTER HOME FOR DESTITUTE BOYS.—There are at present sixty-one boys in this Home. The report speaks of good progress made, of a larger number of boys helped during the past year than usual, and of the spiritual work amongst them being crowned with more than ordinary success, greatly owing to the labour of Mr. Payson Hammond. The school report is very satisfactory, and work in the several departments of shoemaking, chair-caning, &c., goes merrily forward, the boys' earnings amounting to no less than £494 13s. 2d, It is felt that it would be a great boon if a large hall were built in close proximity to the Home, not only for Sunday meetings, but to start evening classes for street lads. Eleven boys were sent to Canada during the past year, and of these good accounts have been received. The Homes, which are being so successfully worked, are situate at 52 and 65, High-street, Clapham.

GOD'S LOVE AND MINE.

By William Hale, M.D.

God's love is like a lighthouse tower,
My love is like the sea;
By day, by night, that faithful tower
Looks patient down on me.

By day the stately shaft looms high,
By night its strong lights burn
To warn, to comfort, and to tell
The way that I should turn.

God's love is like a lighthouse tower,
My love is like the sea;
He, strong, unshaken as the rock—
I, chafing restlessly.

God's love and my love—O how sweet
That such should be my joy!
God's love and mine are one to-day;
No longer doubts annoy.

By day or night the gazer on
My bitter, brackish sea,
For ever tends it with his grace,
Tho' smooth or rough it be.

So singing at its base it rolls
And leaps toward that tower
That all my life illuminates,
And brightens every hour.

God's love is like a lighthouse tower,
My love is like the sea;
I, peevish, changeful, moaning much,
Stedfast, eternal He.

MR. MOODY AT THE SEA-SHORE.

Among the most delightful resorts on the Jersey coast, and about twenty-five miles from New York, is Seabright, with its four or five hotels and many pleasant cottages spread along the narrow beach. Seabright is also a large fishing village, and during the summer time a hundred boats may be seen pursuing the blue fish or ravenous bonita. Prominent in caring for the religious welfare of the village is Mrs. Henry M. Alexander, of New York, who takes under her charge the interests of the Presbyterian Church, and has also inaugurated the Fisherman's Reading-room, the beach meetings, and other beneficent agencies. At her invitation Mr. Moody lately devoted three days to Seabright, which were well and usefully spent.

A great meeting was held on the beach just before sundown, and was attended by an immense audience, the hotels furnishing their quota of guests. The scene was an inspiring one. One side of the picture was filled up by the great Atlantic Ocean, now serenely calm and lovely, and glistening in the setting rays of the summer sun. Not a ripple broke the silvery surface, and only as the waters touched the white sands was there a faint murmuring dash of foam. In front of the speaker's stand was a vast audience, shaded from the sun by the hotel, the piazzas of which were filled with listeners. As the familiar well-known hymns were sung by the hundreds present, a cornet leading them, many there felt that the scene as well as the words sung and spoken were not easily to be effaced from the memory.

Mr. Moody was in the enjoyment of splendid health, and his three great meetings in one day were conducted without a sign of hoarseness or fatigue. The telling anecdotes, the vivid illustrations, the graphic descriptions, and the earnest appeals, given without effort or excitement, were all effectively used. In the evening meeting, held in a large hall, Mr. Moody gathered in the fruits, and some fifty of the fishermen manifested their interest by remaining at the close for conference and prayer, in addition to many others who professed their desire to give their hearts to the Saviour.—Christian Hour.

THE LATE MR. SAMUEL MORLEY.

HIS TEMPERANCE WORK.

When the special character of Mr. Samuel Morley's life, and the universality of its benevolence, are remembered, it will be seen that much would be inevitably omitted from the general chronicles of the daily press. But that so little mention should have been made of his work in the temperance cause is the more remarkable, because it has been for the last thirty years a conspicuous part of his labours, and because the question itself has assumed overshadowing dimensions during that period.

When still very young, Mr. Morley realised that drunkenness was an unmitigated curse, and he began early to urge temperance principles upon the working men of Lancashire. He could not, however, long preach abstinence without being challenged, and he told me the story of it in this way, in answer to my question, "Were you always an abstainer?" "No, I used to take a glass of wine as a matter of course with my dinner. But once, about twenty-five years ago (this conversation was in 1883), I was talking abstinence to a large meeting of working men, when one of them called out to me, 'Do you go without yourself?' This rather shut me up for an instant, but when I looked around at those poor fellows whom I had been asking to give up what they regarded—no matter how erroneously—as their one luxury, I had my answer ready tolerably quick. 'No,' I said, 'but I will go without it from this hour.' And I've kept my word, and I've worked very hard and enjoyed good health too."

Until some ten years ago, he had relied on moral suasion as the only means for freeing the world of the drink curse. Being a law unto himself, he found it difficult to believe in the necessity of abridging the liberties of others. In 1878, when he publicly expressed his conviction that moral suasion was insufficient to cope with this evil, he used these words, so characteristic of his supreme respect for the individuality and opinions of others:—

> I have come reluctantly to the opinion that we must have legislation. I do not see a chance of getting any substantial relief without some form of legislative action, and I am in this mind, that while the subject is large, and requires to be dealt with on a broad basis, I am prepared to accept any form of legislation that would give me a substantial part of the remedy I want. I do not desire to oppress those who differ from me, and I am unconscious of ever having uttered an intemperate word upon the temperance question; yet I would fall short of my duty if I did not raise a warning voice against this great and growing evil.

In 1882 he adopted the Blue Ribbon, and this badge—always since worn on that noble breast—has been a most eloquent, solemn, and constant appeal to the legislators of this country to render unnecessary such outward protests against the shames and wrongs inflicted upon it by liquor legislation. It was owing chiefly to his unceasing efforts that the law was passed, in 1883, forbidding the payment of wages in the public-house.

His experiences and observations in his connection with the Royal Commission for Housing the Poor at last made him a thorough Prohibitionist. Always wishing to believe the best, he yet began to doubt the sincerity and earnestness of the great political parties on the temperance question, and his voice was not uncertain on this point; though the modesty which led him to modify the expression of his views sometimes misled those who did not know how self-depreciating he was. On April 10, this year, at the public meeting at the Lambeth Baths—one of the almost innumerable institutions to whose support he has so liberally contributed—and the last public meeting in which he took part, he asserted with solemn emphasis that he thought the drink traffic the first and greatest evil that had to be overcome, and that to work for its removal should be the supreme aim of all. I had had many conversations with him on this subject, in which I saw from time to time how the idea of the necessity of Prohibition grew upon him; but I was agreeably surprised in May, just before sailing for the United States, to find how thoroughly he believed that a new party, having Prohibition for its basis and aim, whose existence should be wholly bound up in the success of Prohibition, was the only adequate means for the abolition of the traffic. Indeed, he was so roused upon it that he began at once to speak practically of the formation of such a party. "Whom would you suggest as leader for the new party?" he asked; and when I suggested himself he replied, "Ah, yes, if only I were younger. There are a great many things I would do differently if I had them to do over again; but my doctor says my heart is out of gear, and that I must rigidly abstain from work."

Mr. Morley was deeply interested in children; his own simplicity of character enabled him to understand them, and, knowing how surely the future of the race is bound up with the welfare of the children, his constant thought was, "How shall the children be saved?" Hence his abundant and active sympathy with all work which tended to strengthen the ideal of the sanctity of the home, of the family altar, of pure, simple, self-respecting, and self-restraining habits for the young; with all Sunday-school work, with schemes which secured healthful education and change for the overworked children of the poor. He was President of the United Kingdom Band of Hope Union, and his purse and energies were liberally spent for its success. He was an ardent advocate of the introduction of temperance teaching in all public schools, and one of his latest acts was an effort to protect children by means of an earnest personal appeal to the people of this country. Dated at his home, 34, Grosvenor-street, in April last, after he had been warned by his physician to desist from all labour, and seek absolute rest, it reads thus:—

> Attention has recently been called to the large number of children who are constantly sent by their parents and friends to public-houses to fetch beer and spirits, and who are thus exposed to great temptation, and are frequently the witnesses of scenes of a most degraded character, which must have a bad influence upon them.
> Were parents fully to realise the danger to which they are exposing their children, it is believed that many would avoid the practice, and thus preserve their little ones from familiarity with sights and sounds which are certain to weaken the effects of all religious and moral training.
> As one deeply interested in the welfare of the young, and intimately associated with several of the societies established for promoting it, I earnestly appeal to parents and friends of children to do all in their power, both by precept and example, to discourage this dangerous custom, and thus to remove one at least of the many pitfalls in the path of the youth of our beloved country. Samuel Morley.

Of this appeal he had one million copies printed and distributed from house to house throughout the land. Significant of the generosities of his whole life, and sure of being promoted by his purse as well as his advocacy, this one petition is a nobler memorial than any monument of other men's building could be, and it would indeed be one most fitting tribute to his memory if, in recognition of his long waiting and patient labours for the enactment of promised temperance measures, Parliament would now see this dying prayer embodied in righteous law.

ST. HELEN'S.—A number of gentlemen are now endeavouring to establish a Y.M.C.A. at St. Helen's, Lancashire.

Y.M.C.A., AUCKLAND, N.Z.—The last annual report gives a description of the fine large building which is being built for this Association, and which it is estimated will cost £7500. The foundation stone was laid in January, and it is expected the building will be ready for occupation at Christmas. The number of members is 161, and of subscribers 367. The work is evidently carried on in an earnest evangelical spirit, and in a way calculated to win young men, and to help them to avoid the temptations by which they are surrounded, especially when first they land without friends in such a town as Auckland. Evangelistic services are held three times a week, and a valuable course of lectures was given by the President last winter. We are indeed glad that such associations of and for young men flourish in so many towns of Greater Britain.

BIBLE STUDIES.—30.

THREE PLACES FOR GOD'S PEOPLE.

(Deut. xxxiii. 3.)

To love here means to have in the bosom. Thus we have in this verse three attitudes of God's people —(i.) in his bosom; (ii.) in his land; (iii.) at his feet.

I.—In his bosom. (1) Place of love. "Now there was leaning on Jesus' bosom one of his disciples, whom Jesus loved." "As one whom his mother comforteth, so will I comfort you" (John xiii. 23; Isa. lxvi. 13). "Aaron shall bear the names of the children of Israel . . . upon his heart . . . for a memorial before the Lord continually." "Thou shalt not be forgotten of me" (Exod. xxviii. 29; Isa. xliv. 21, and xlix. 15).

(2) Place of communion. "He then lying on Jesus' breast saith unto Him, Lord, who is it?" (John xiii. 25). "The secret of the Lord is with them that fear Him; and He will show them his covenant" (Ps. xxv. 14).

Wrapt in deep adoring silence,
  Jesus, Lord, I dare not move,
Lest I lose the smallest saying
  Meant to catch the ear of love.

(3) Place of rest. "He shall gather the lambs with his arm, and carry them in his bosom" (Isa. xl. 11). "His left hand is under my head, and his right hand doth embrace me" (Cant. ii. 6). "Underneath are the everlasting arms" (Deut. xxxiii. 27).

II.—In his hand. (1) Place of security. "My sheep . . . shall never perish, neither shall any man pluck them out of my hand. . . . No man is able to pluck them out of my Father's hand" (John x. 28, 29). (2) Place of shelter. "I have put my words in thy mouth, and I have covered thee in the shadow of mine hand" (Isa. li. 16). (God's servants desire this place, that the instruments may be hidden, and only the Hand that uses them seen). (3) Place of moulding. "Behold, as the clay is in the potter's hand, so are ye in mine hand, O house of Israel" (Jer. xviii. 6). (4) Place of honour. "Thou shalt also be a crown of glory in the hand of the Lord, and a royal diadem in the hand of thy God" (Isa. lxii. 3).

III.—At his feet. (1) Place of learning. "Mary . . . sat at Jesus' feet, and heard his word" (Luke x. 39). "Learn of Me" (Matt. xi. 29). "The meek will He guide in judgment, and the meek will He teach his way" (Ps. xxv. 9). (2) Place of humility, therefore of blessing. "When I saw Him, I fell at his feet as dead. And He laid his right hand upon me, saying unto me, Fear not" (Rev. i. 17). "Blessed are the poor in spirit: for theirs is the kingdom of heaven" (Matt. v. 3). "I am not worthy that Thou shouldest enter . . . neither thought I myself worthy to come unto Thee. . . . They that were sent . . . found the servant whole" (Luke vii. 6—10).

SOUL-WINNING AND PRAYER UNION.

The members of this Union, which is now in its seventh year, are banded together to pray for a special outpouring of the Holy Spirit, and on the 10th of each month some special Scripture promise is pleaded. These promises are printed on a card, which is sent to the members, and thus they unite in prayer for a definite object. The texts will be published in these columns in future, so that our readers may unite with the members in their supplications. The membership in July numbered 2807, scattered throughout the world, some being missionaries in foreign lands. A paper called The Soulwinner, containing requests for prayer or thanksgiving, is sent to the members who wish it about the 5th or 6th of the month. Some of the members are maintaining a native evangelist in China, and thus show their faith by their works. Special prayer is made for various branches of Christian effort — missionaries, children, Gospel temperance, evangelistic and rescue work. Interesting letters are received from time to time as to the benefit the Union has been to individuals. Further information and cards may be obtained from Mr. J. C. Smith, Newport-on-Tay, N.B.

DOCK LABOURERS.—Mr. C. Coleman, of the Dock Labourers' Mission, 26, Chamber-street, E., writes:—The number of labourers increases, and that means an increase of sin and poverty. I recently visited in this neighbourhood, and found several rooms with two families in each.

GRACE that BRINGETH SALVATION:

ITS SEVENFOLD ELEMENTARY LESSONS.

Titus ii. 11—14.

By Mr. J. VAN SOMMER.

PART I.

In the previous verses, the Apostle Paul had given directions for various classes of persons, to aid them in living the life of godliness. Older men, older women, young men, young women, and servants are to be appropriately admonished as to the things which become sound doctrine. He then proceeds:—

"For the grace of God that bringeth salvation to all men, hath appeared. Teaching us (a) that denying ungodliness and worldly lusts, (b) we should live soberly, righteously, and godly in this present world, (c) looking for that blessed hope and the glorious appearing of the great God and our Saviour Jesus Christ, (d) who gave Himself for us, (e) that He might redeem us from all iniquity, (f) and purify unto Himself a peculiar people, (g) zealous of good works."

Let us first consider verse 11, and then the seven lessons indicated in verses 12, 13, and 14.

For the grace of God. A reason is given for that which had just been stated; and the grace of God that bringeth salvation is declared to have reference not merely to a work for us, but in us, in our own inward spirit, and to our outward conduct—to the entire man and his entire condition.

For the grace of God—the free favour of God. The essential idea in the word grace is joy. Something is done in the spirit of love; and the act performed occasions joy to him who originated it and carried it out, and to those who are benefited by it, and to those who witness it. Take an illustration from common life. There is a spot at Eastbourne sometimes spoken of as Agony Point. It juts out a little into the sea, and at spring tides with a breeze the waves sweep along that part of the parade; and if you went round it a few minutes too late, you would be caught and sprinkled not a little, perhaps drenched. A few years ago it was a dangerous spot, and accidents occurred there; but a kind friend, then living at Streatham, put an iron railing round the edge of it. Now, suppose that a child had been washed over, and that someone had plunged in, and had succeeded in rescuing it. What joy the child would have; what joy the parents or nurse would have; what joy the beholders would have; what quiet, deep joy the one who had risked his life would have. Or take an illustration from the Scriptures. When, instead of a widow's two sons being taken by a creditor, enough money to clear off the debt was provided through a miraculous increase of oil, what joy to the widowed mother, what joy to the sons, and to the prophet, and what joy to the Father of the fatherless, and the Judge of the widow.

The grace of God. It is encouraging to returning, repentant sinners to know that God has his own joy in showing favour to us, in receiving back his wanderers (Luke xv.). It is our Father's good pleasure to give us the kingdom, and He is able to set us before the presence of his glory without blemish, in exceeding joy; but this is a work of time.

That bringeth salvation. Yes, the sense is bringing, affording, yielding, bringing forth. Still the word itself does not occur, and perhaps the introduction of any word limits the idea. For the grace of God does not only bring, it consists in salvation in its entirety. As it is expressed in Ps. lxvii.: "That thy way may be known upon earth, thy saving health among all nations." The grace of God is displayed in the providing, and the bringing, and in the blessing brought, and in the different stages, and principles, and objects, and modes. Responsive worship is due for every part of it.

That bringeth salvation. What a sweet touching song flowed from the lips of Zacharias when the light of the coming Sun of Righteousness was known to be approaching through his child appearing as the morning star. Now there was coming the horn of salvation, the deliverer from enemies, the remission of sins, service without fear, holiness and righteousness for ever; the darkness was passing, the shadow of death was vanishing, the light of life would guide the feet into the way of peace, and death shall soon be no more; neither shall there be mourning, nor crying, nor pain, any more. The first things will pass away.

And it bringeth salvation to all men. God does not wish that any should perish, but that all should come to repentance. The Gospel is to be preached to the whole creation. Make disciples of all the nations. Herein is God's love displayed; and if some shrink back into perdition while others have faith to the saving of the soul; if some neglect or reject the great salvation, thereby judging themselves unworthy of everlasting life, the responsibility is on their side.

The grace of God that bringeth salvation to all men has now appeared. In older days there were promises and types; and the latter set forth the salvation in measure, still only partially and in shadows. Some, no doubt, through the type discerned the thing typified. But grace and truth, the substance of the shadows, came by Jesus Christ — through Himself, his obedience, his sacrifice, his atoning death—through his revealing the Father—through Jesus in every point of view; and it is now perfected in Him as the risen Saviour, as it is written in Acts xxvi. that Jesus Christ must suffer, and that He first, by the resurrection of the dead, should proclaim light both to the people of Israel and to mankind generally. The promises made unto the fathers, God hath fulfilled the same in that he raised up Jesus, as also it is written in Ps. ii., "Thou art my son, this day have I begotten thee." The Gospel now to be seen in perpetual meridian splendour is not simply a glorious Gospel, which it is, but it is the Gospel of the glory of Christ (2 Cor. iv. 4, R.V.).

Teaching. This grace is of an inward teaching character. The word translated teaching signifies not only instruction, but it includes all that is necessary for the bringing up of a child: instruction, education, training, discipline, would be included; and more in this matter, because the subject is a sinful being, and has to be saved, and to receive a child's mind and heart, to become like and fit for the presence of the Lord. Thorough teaching is inwrought that the result may be outwardly expressed. A true teacher shows how to master the lesson—to do as well as to know.

Thus the grace of God that bringeth salvation to all men has appeared; and there are contained in the message seven elementary lessons, all of which are needful to be learnt; and grace teaches them in the light of salvation—viz., what to deny, and how to live; what to hope for; what the foundation is; and the twofold way in which the Lord's saving power is now being applied; and what the fruit should be.

BAPTISMAL REGENERATION.

A leading Roman Catholic monthly periodical states in a recent number that the doctrine of "exclusive salvation" has been much misunderstood and grievously misrepresented, and therefore devotes a number of pages to an attempt to expound the subject. That the paper is without a certain kind of ability we should not like to urge, but there is one grave defect, doubtless intentional, in an article which lays so much stress upon "the Church," that of an omission to define what the Church of Christ really is. We know from previous experience of Roman Catholic theological disquisitions, what the writer intends to convey when he refers to "Christ's true Church," but we should prefer to have a clear and distinct definition of what, according to his opinion, the Church of Christ, as demonstrated in the New Testament consists in.

Afraid to startle those who may be nibbling at Romanism by asserting the old-fashioned and impudent claim of the Romish Apostasy to hold the only keys of salvation, the writer, after disposing of the heathen in accordance with St. Paul's teachings, goes on to say that there are yearly many thousands born into the Church "who grow up in it, share its privileges, and die in it, without having ever realised its claims or professed allegiance to it;" and he illustrates the statement by the analogous case of the "subjects of the British Empire," who "are under the protection of the British law, owe their prosperity to British influence, and would experience in case of need the full advantages of citizenship, and who are ignorant of the very name of Britain."

> "After a somewhat similar fashion," says he, "men may be unconscious members of Christ's Church. They are received into it at birth, through the baptismal rite which Christ Himself ordained faith is implanted in their souls, and since 'God's gifts and calling are without repentance,' He will not of Himself deprive them of the blessing. Other supernatural virtues, too, are infused with faith, the foundations of a life of holiness are laid, and God's grace is ever waiting on and soliciting those who strive earnestly to serve Him. Hence it is that hope takes comfort even when we look out upon the multitudes given up to heresy and schism, if only the Sacrament of Baptism is held in reverence amongst them. Vast numbers die in childhood and pass at once to heaven. Many others, we may hope, will reach there also, for the accident of birth and education, and the circumstances of later life, may wrap them round with ignorance which is practically invincible. They do not sin against the light of faith which they received in baptism, and so the good gift is left to them. They are never without grace sufficient for the observance of God's law, and so may retain his friendship through life, or win it back by love and sorrow, should it be lost."

This may be kind and charitable, but it is in a lower key than that which Rome generally uses when dealing with such matters, and, what is more remarkable, it is far from being in accord with recent utterances of her own teachers; and if it has to be admitted that salvation depends upon nothing more than baptismal regeneration, there is little, if any, necessity for the cumbrous superstructure of works and penalties which Rome has heaped over it.

This theory of unconscious membership and unconsciousness of salvation is, however, a dangerous one, even for Rome to teach, and she would not be proclaiming it to-day if she had not found that many of her claims are being smiled at, and that there is a necessity to trim them down, and make them less repulsive.

EDINBURGH AND LEITH CHILDREN'S AID AND REFUGE.—An amalgamation with the Society for the Prevention of Cruelty to Children having recently taken place, this Society, which has been in existence nine years, is now the only one in Edinburgh engaged in this preventive and rescue work. To the general work of the Society a great impetus has been given by the opening of the Shelter, and during last year 125 children were received, most of these being afterwards passed into the Homes. Of these there are two for boys and two for girls, besides the Day Nursery at Stockbridge, of which an interesting account is given in a little book enclosed with the report, and entitled, "Our Children." The directors thankfully acknowledge that the subscriptions for the year (£503 6s. 8d.) are a large increase on previous years, but appeal for further help, that the work may be well sustained. The founder and hon. superintendent is Miss Stirling, 16, Craigholm, Burntisland, N.B.

For the Young.

THE LESSON OF THE BLACKBERRIES.

Dear Young Friends,—I have little doubt that at this time of the year blackberries have engaged your thoughts or your fingers, but the special thoughts which came to me while gathering them in Brittany may not have crossed your minds. Brittany, as most of you probably know, is a part of France occupying the North-east corner of that country, and lies on the English Channel, opposite our Dorset, Devon, and Cornwall coasts. The people have many old-time usages, speak a language very much like Welsh, but they are nearly all bigoted Roman Catholics.

I may at some future time tell you something about these interesting people, but such is not my intention now. Being interested in a mission to them, I found myself with a few friends under the hospitable roof of the missionary and his good wife. We felt that these kind people were put to some trouble on account of our entertainment, although we scarcely knew what we could do to help them. But at one breakfast table gathering, after morning worship, we resolved to do something to help the missionary's wife. It was but little that we men could do, but, children, note our resolve, to do the thing next to hand, and to strive as far as possible to be burdens on no one, and leave no day without some useful work done. So one of us decided that he would draw the needed water from the well, as he was to remain at home, another to dig the potatoes and gather the other vegetables, another went and caught a nice lot of fish, and I engaged to procure some blackberries for a pudding. So you see we did something towards earning our dinners.

Now I approach my lesson. The missionary had said to me ere I started, while we were conversing about the spiritual condition of the people of the district, "One of the most difficult things which falls to my lot is to make these poor Bretons understand what sin is." I am afraid that such a difficulty is not unknown on this side of the Channel, but what he specially meant was that the people are kept from reading the Bible by the Roman Catholic priests, and until lately, when our missionary friend, Pastor Lecoat, translated the Scriptures into Breton, they had no Bible or Testament cheap enough for them to purchase. So they never heard that "all have sinned," and that there is "none righteous, no, not one," by nature, as God's Word assures us is the case. Therefore they are taught that when they lie, steal, or commit any other sin, the priest for a fee will give them forgiveness. It was to be my turn to deliver the Sunday morning address, so I meditated to treat of the subject of "sin," and to show them how dreadful it is in God's sight, as Christ's suffering on Calvary shows, and how serious in its everlasting consequences, unless we repent and flee to the refuge set before us—Christ Jesus.

With this subject on my mind I sallied forth with my basket into the lanes of Brittany, which are so like our Devonshire ones. The blackberries grow there upon hedges planted upon high banks, much higher than a man's head, and the branches trail down the sides. As I picked the fruit, I had, I believe, nearly as many thorn pricks as blackberries for a result. So I thought, Is it not so with all so-called pleasures which follow sin—the price paid is very high in pain? But to look at the blackberries as they hung, and at those in my basket, anyone but myself would have concluded that it was all pleasure and gain. How many confessions have I heard from those who in their early life followed the pleasures of sin to the neglect of their soul. After gathering from the sides of the banks for a while I thought I would mount the top and see what I could glean there. I had not been in that position long ere a strong breeze overturned my basket, and emptied my berries into the tangled bushes below. Ah, thought I, how often is it that when a course of pleasure seems assured in its success, God interposes some terrible interruption which dashes all such hopes, and what then is left but, as in my emptied basket, a blank? Oh, how terrible for a young man or woman to find by such a sad experience that the soul, without God for its guide, is never at peace or safe. I did what I could to save the result of my morning's work, and in doing so I stained my torn fingers very much. In using these illustrations I held up my fingers before my audience, and said, "Some of you saw me gathering blackberries yesterday, but suppose that I were to assert that I did not do so, see how I should be condemned, the stains and torn skin testifying against me. So it is with your hearts, 'If we say we have no sin we deceive ourselves, and the truth is not in us.'" The truth in this case stated that I had soiled my hands and suffered pain in the very process. So you see that the teaching of the blackberries bears out the truth of Scripture, as Herbert quaintly puts it: "If thou dost ill, the joy fades, not the pains; if well, the pain doth fade, the joy remains."—Your sincere friend,

Cheltenham. W. L. Lang.

ROGER HASTING'S SECOND THOUGHTS.

Roger Hastings was in a fret. It seemed to him that he was very ill-used by fortune. It did not seem so to his friends. He was young; his health was good. He never yet had lacked food, clothing, or any real comfort. What was it, then, which caused him to wander out for a walk at the close of the day through the bright green fields, with a frown upon his face and a feeling of bitter discontent within his breast? He was in haste to be rich, and he could not see the road open to the gratification of his wish. He had steady employment; his work was not too hard for him, and he was well paid. But during his summer vacation he had been much in the company of young men who did not have to work at all, and who yet had plenty of money to spend. It seemed to him that they had an easy time of it, and that they were no more deserving than he was.

"It is pretty hard on a fellow," he thought, "to be chained down to a perpetual grind, when there is so much to enjoy. And how sordid it seems to be always counting one's pennies as I am forced to do! There is Edgar Hunt: his father gives him money for the asking; and Charles Arnold gets a big salary for doing almost nothing; and Walter Fielding has been promised a share in a good business just because he has a rich uncle who takes an interest in him; while I, luckless chap that I am, have not a friend in the world to help me on."

Roger stopped suddenly. His walk had brought him to the brink of a running stream, into which he had almost plunged before he noticed it. There were stony shallows in the stream over which the waters dashed themselves as they hurried onward. As Roger stood watching them his thoughts took a new direction.

"What a fret you are in, to be sure!" he said to the little rivulet. "All this splashing and dashing does you no good. Do not hurry so. Just beyond you is the smiling calm of the beautiful lake. Hold on your course, and you are sure to get there. It offers you plenty of room and perfect rest. Only be patient."

But the saucy stream rushed on, only laughing at Roger's rebuke and breaking into shining ripples, as though it would say—

"Take home your own counsel, my friend. There is a method in my madness; I know what I am about. I know God's plan for me. He has ordered all my goings. My restlessness springs from no disposition to murmur at his decrees or reluctance to do his will. Can you say the same? Just beyond you is a vast eternity, calm in the breathing of his presence, gloriously brightened by his smile. You have only to be patient, to be faithful, and to hold steadily on your course. You are sure to get there. Be satisfied, then. Be thankful. I must cease to be; you will go on for ever. I am but for a season; you are a living soul. Do not look down at my devious course. Look up, Roger, look up! Have you not the God who created the heavens and the earth for your friend? What can you ask for more?"

Roger did look up. Above him was a sea of cloudless blue, silent, peaceful, serene as the eternal calm to which his thoughts had been directed, and the crescent moon, a trembling line of silvery light, hung there, giving promise of a radiance that would increase in splendour night by night. The discontent died within as he gazed.

"I have been a fool," he said to himself. "Worse than that, I have been wicked. What right have I to the high destiny to which God has called me? What have I done to deserve the goodness and mercy which have followed me all the days of my life? From this time forward, instead of fretting for that which God does not give me, I will try to do all the good I can with the opportunities which He has given me. And, instead of saying that I have no friend to help me, I will take God for my Friend, my Redeemer, my Saviour."

And the rippling stream seemed to say "Amen!" and the heavens seemed to answer back "Amen!" and a thousand voices of Nature in the summer twilight broke into a sudden chorus to prolong the echoes: "Amen!" "Amen!" "Amen!"—Forward.

MARTHA AND MARY.

"It's all very well. I've not much fault to find with Mary, but we do want a bit of Martha as well. There is too much of this religious indolence which pretends to be piety. We want people who can stir about and work the leaven of their goodness into the world. While some are sitting at the Master's feet, others are going down into the pit. I don't wish to put Martha against Mary—not at all; but what I say is, all Marthas and we should forget the Master; all Marys and we should forget the world. A Christian should be a mixture of both."

"Then, in her way, you really think that Martha is a pattern Christian?"

"Most certainly. Aren't we told to be 'not slothful in business'? Besides, it was all for the Master, and didn't He say that even the 'cup of cold water' should not lose its reward? No. We want more fidelity in these daily household matters, these worldly things."

"Still, you must see that Martha, however tenderly, is rebuked, and Mary is commended."

"Yes; and that is just what I can't understand. Martha's was by far the more self-denying task, and Mary's much the more comfortable position. Judging, too, by a comparison of congregational and practical Christianity, most Christians prefer to be 'sitting at his feet,' than to be up and doing their Master's work. 'It is good for us to be here,' they cry, and in their own enjoyment forget or overlook the sorrow and distress that call for their activity."

"I grant you much of that. So, then, to be candid, you would say that Mary was a gentle, emotional, soft, dreamy sort of woman, who loved discourse rather than practice, and lounging rather than work."

"Well, I don't like to say that exactly, because, undoubtedly, she had one genuine feature, her choice of the 'good part.' Still I must confess that I should have liked her better had she taken her share of the work."

"And didn't she?"

"Yes; by sitting on the floor."

"Didn't she take her share at the table?"

"No, indeed she didn't."

"Then what does Martha mean by complaining that she left her?"

"Why, that Mary wouldn't have anything to do with her in getting things ready."

"My dear fellow, that's just where you have misread the story. You must be with a person before you can leave them, and that is Martha's complaint, that Mary leaves her in the midst of the work.* Now look here. This is how it runs. Martha receives Jesus into the house, and with Mary commences to prepare a meal. But while the Lord is waiting the magnet is working. Mary wants to be with Jesus and listen to his words, and so at the earliest opportunity she escapes to his feet. But not before her work is done. True, there may have been one or two odd little things left—perhaps the water had to boil as we might say, or something of that sort. But with Martha it was different; she was 'cumbered with much serving'—she was distracted—'dragged in different directions.' Can't you fancy her? She wants everything to be right, and it all seems wrong—now the cloth, say, is crooked—that plate must be rubbed again—that knife and fork changed. So she worries herself doing the same thing twice over, just the honest, impulsive, fretful housekeeper that she was. But there was no magnet at work. Her mind was taken up with the serving, and the words and person of the Lord Jesus Himself are not able to draw her away. No, in words tenderly mild, but searchingly plain, she is told that she is vitally wrong. Let us follow Mary, never neglecting temporal duties for spiritual pleasures; and yet in all occupations always under the magnet, longing to be at the Master's feet and to hear his words. Sweet and wonderful messages He has for all such, only we must neither tarry too long at the work nor leave it undone. Here we get refreshment and strength for service. Christ says, 'He that hath my commandments and keepeth them, he it is that loveth Me; and I will love him, and will manifest Myself to him.' If Mary were wrong, and Martha right, the Lord was too fair, too true, and too kind not to have pointed it out. So that Mary is our great, our true and only pattern. Now, don't you think I am right?"

"Well, I almost think you are." F.

LIGHTHOUSE CHRISTIANS.

In a gathering of the Lord's people, one Lord's-day morning, a brother stood up and said, with elongated countenance, and head bowed as if, Atlas-like, he was bearing the burden of the world: "Ah, my dear friends, the Lord Jesus does not come into our hearts to make us happy, but to show us the blackness of sin." Illogical and untrue on the very face of it; and, as far as the first clause is concerned, I am able to deny, from personal experience, every word of it. And as to the second, does the revelation and abolition of sin from our hearts cause misery? I trow not—rather the reverse, as I can prove.

The first thing a young convert to God is likely to say, after experiencing the sorrows of repentance and the blessedness of pardon, is, "Oh, I am so happy!" Often this happiness is an ecstasy, oftener still it is the calm joy which puts newness into the life, and a keener delight in the things around it; but always, when the soul realises that it is in possession of a full salvation, there is an assured happiness that not all the trials inseparable from humanity, nor contact with the sins and sorrows of the world, can take away. True, that just as a breath will dim the brightness of a mirror, there are floating clouds to pass over the spiritual horizon, but these give place to fuller brightness, and the soul rejoices even more than before.

Then many good people, of a pessimist tinge of thought, declare that the world is worse than ever it was, and how can Christians be glad of heart, or happy in spirit, since this is so? But the Lord Jesus Christ Himself, after speaking of those in his covenant, and those out of it, said: "These things have I spoken unto you that my joy might remain in you, and that your joy might be full." And the apostle John, writing of our fellowship with the Godhead, says: "These things write we unto you that your joy may be full." Not just a spasmodic, half and half, unreliable happiness merely, but joy—abundant joy, with power to add, and capacity to appropriate and experience yet more more and more.

I believe this theory about Christians being solemn and sad originated with some of the doleful hymns that are sung in and out of our congregations. With the heart bursting with love, and the whole being strung to the melodious measure of joy in Christ, the Christian worshipper is suddenly led in thought into the minor key, by having to join in a so-called hymn, where, after distress upon distress, loss upon loss, and sorrows enough for a dozen lifetimes, the unfortunate "I" of the verse is made to say, at the conclusion of each stanza, "Thy will, not mine, be done." As if God wills his children to be wretched! As if such a catalogue of miseries is inviting to those outside to come in and be one of those who are condemned to such misery!

"Come let us join our cheerful songs with angels round the throne" is much more inviting and stimulating; and even the almost forgotten lines of early Sunday-school memory, "O let us be joyful," are more to the purpose. No, there is too much dolor on the face of a great deal of our Christianity,—I say on the face, for I do not believe that the Christian who sings of himself as a "vile worm," or a "poor, wretched worm," feels the words down in his heart; I hope he does not.

If the "sons of God," the "joint heirs with Christ" are not to have joy—not to be happy, who is? The blessed assurance of a personally-experienced, complete salvation; the knowledge of being righteous before God in Christ Jesus; the thought of ineffable love combining all the glorious forces of nature and grace on our behalf—these things are enough to fill us, and they do fill some of us with the supremest, most unquenchable joy.

An old sailor said once, speaking of his wife, "Ah, she's a lighthouse Christian, she is."

"What do you mean by a lighthouse Christian?" was asked.

"Like the lantern—a glimmer o' light, and a patch o' dark—so, just as I see her brightenin' up a bit, and get's myself ready for a chat, she'll turn all black-like, a sayin' as these is evil days we've fallen on, and we've no cause to be joyful. I says, if these is evil days, we're the only people as has cause to be joyful, 'cause we've got summat in us to overcome the evil. But there, lighthouses have their work to do, so I must not complain o' my old woman—she's helped me to steer clear o' the rock she's stranded on, and that's Half-trust."

Oh, there are so many like the sailor's wife!—they are not wholly joyful, because they are not wholly trusting. They read books, and hear sermons, and sing hymns that treat of the half-way experiences of some people, and, dressed in these garments, made for and by others, equipped for the Christian walk in these borrowed experiences (and borrowed experience never fits the borrower), they launch out. No wonder they fail! with tears in their eyes, and quavers in their voices, and tremblings in their knees, they limp their intermittent course. Let us get our own experiences! Let us get at the heart of God, each for himself; let each manufacture his own joy out of his own limitless share of the Lord Jesus, and see if we do not get something better than the alternations of dark and light which led old John to call his wife a lighthouse Christian. THE GROVE-ROAD MISSION, WOODFORD.

Having its origin in the visits of a Christian man, during the winter of 1877, to the encampment of some gipsies on the borders of Epping Forest, this Mission has gradually grown. At first he read the Scriptures to them in their tents; then, as the people overcame their natural antipathy to strangers, a tent was procured and erected near the gipsies' camp, where short services were held. This attracted others beside the Romani, and in 187 two rooms were rented, at four shillings per week to which the services were transferred. Thi accommodation was outgrown, and in the followin spring a loft above a stable was obtained, and here until January, 1883, the work was carried on During this period God had blessed the efforts o his people, and they were enabled to open a hal seated for 550 adults, which now forms the centr of operations.

Since that time the work has steadily advance and the organisation now includes Sunday-schoo Band of Hope, mothers' meetings, Penny Ban and other meetings, so that over sixteen gathering are held weekly.

A house is needed adjacent to the hall, the groun floor of which should be used for the reading-roo and day nursery, and the upper part for the keepe A piece of ground at the back of the hall can b obtained, and the estimated outlay is £530. Frien interested in this work should read a sketch the Mission, which may be obtained from th superintendent, Mr. E. Hobbs, Chelmsford-roa Woodford.

GOSPEL WORK IN IRELAND.

THE Irish Home Mission work of the Presbyterian Church has been largely developed of late years by the Evangelisation Committee of that Church.

The work is carried on by ministers of the Church and by students who are studying with a view to the ministry; during the summer months it is almost entirely in the hands of students, who are then enjoying their long vacation. When students were first sent out a few summers ago, the limits of the work were very narrow, only two evangelists being employed. Since then, however, the work has developed to such an extent that this summer no less than eleven students were in the employment of the committee.

The summer's work began with a short mis-ion in Killyleagh (co. Down), conducted by Messrs. Ellis and Murphy, the meetings being avoured with many tokens of Divine blessing. Other missions, some lasting as long as four weeks, have been conducted in Portglenone, Ballymoney, and Ballycarry (co. Antrim), in Monellan (co. Donegal), in Newcastle, Ballyna-inch and district (co. Down), in Kilkenny and ther southern districts, and in Donegal.

The meetings at Ballycarry were held in a ent, and were most satisfactory in every respect. After the close of a four weeks' mission in that lace, the tent was transferred to Kilrea, where is at present, the meetings being conducted by Messrs. Simpson, Murphy, and McComb.

The speakers have confined themselves to Gospel themes, and have made it a point to reach Christ and Him only. This seems to be he only way of disarming the suspicions of the oman Catholics, and of bringing to them piritual blessing. In one of the meetings con-ucted by students no less than twenty-five oman Catholics were present, listening with vident pleasure to the story of the Cross. uring another series two Roman Catholics at-nded most regularly, and on the closing Sab-th one of them for the first time attended the rvice in the local Presbyterian church. These stances, which could easily be multiplied, early demonstrate the untenability of the posi-on taken up by some Christians in reference to ish Roman Catholics, viz., that all Christian ork, aiming at their conversion is simply so uch wasted.

Will the readers of THE CHRISTIAN who are rnestly desiring that Ireland should be evan-lised, and should win again a right to the title "Island of Saints," by which in ancient times e was distinguished, ask for an outpouring of e Holy Spirit to embrace not only Ulster, but e whole of Ireland.

PARIS CITY MISSION.

R. W. OLNEY, JUN., writes to us as follows:—
wo things are evident about Paris: her appalling ed of the Gospel—witness the absolute oblivion Divine truth on the part of tens of thousands of people; and her readiness to listen—witness the rty-seven mission rooms of Rev. W. McAll, all ll attended. The greatest difficulty in the path the few real evangelists at work is the general orance of the Scriptures, beyond a very few of leading historical incidents. Consequently the peal to the Bible is seldom appreciated. It is possible to imagine a more likely remedy for this l than the Paris City Mission, now in its infancy. French title is "Comité Auxiliaire d'Evangéli-on de Paris."

t present the Society employs seven agents where are needed. Its only hope, under God, is in the pathy of Christians in England and America. hough the French Protestant Churches support Mission well, they are but few. The genuine-s of the efforts of the missionaries is guaranteed far as possible by the well-known names of r superintendents, including Pasteur Théodore od, Rev. W. McAll, Miss de Bröen, and others -minded.

WOMEN IN THE HIMALAYAS.

MISS MACPHERSON has received a letter from Miss Jerrom, who writes from Mussoorie, N.W.P., India. We make the following extracts, which give some idea of the terrible need and degradation of those to whom she refers:—

I have now laboured among the heathen in India more than a quarter of a century, and at times I feel that the day is not, perhaps, far distant, when I must turn my face towards the setting sun, and leave the foreign field to younger and stronger labourers. It is, however, very strongly impressed upon me that there is, perhaps, a work which long experience has fitted me for, and that is the stirring up of others. . . .

I write from the Himalayas, and my soul's deepest sympathies have been drawn forth by the knowledge of the deep degradation of "Pahari" women (i.e., hill-women, mountaineers), among whom I long to see a mission established. No man seems to care for their souls. Hundreds of the men come into the hill stations for employment during the season when Europeans congregate on the mountains for cool air, to avoid the intense heat of the plains. These "Pahari" men know enough of Hindustani to get on with us, but of their language we know nothing.

Their women are most degraded, polyandry being common among them. The domestic misery among the Mahommedans of the plains, among whom I have laboured for many years—by whom polygamy is practised—is bad enough, but this polyandry is worse. It is common for four or five brothers to have one wife amongst them, who drudges for them all, does field work, and may be sold. I feel I must "tell it out," in hope that many who hear of the deep degradation of their poor sisters in these mountains may be induced first to pray that labourers may be raised up; next, to try what they can do to help.

GOLDEN-LANE MISSION.

THE report for 1885 closes a quarter of a century's work in connection with this Mission. The commencement of this period saw Mr. Orsman going from house to house in the maze of courts and alleys between Goswell-road and Golden-lane. He had a little room which served for school and preaching station. Presently Lord Shaftesbury came to his help, and the Costers' Mission became an established fact, a garden in the district. Now, at the end of the period above mentioned, there is a working staff of nearly one hundred godly men and women, a mission church of nearly three hundred members, possessing one of the most commodious and comfortable mission buildings in London free of debt. The spiritual work involves meetings weekly. Besides preaching of the Gospel, the primary object of the Mission, there are meetings for Bible study, and praise and prayer; and the various other operations comprehend almost every description of agency for the social and spiritual welfare of the people—on the one hand, Sunday-schools; Bands of Hope, evening classes, lectures, and concerts on the other. There are also the Golden-lane Costers' Society, with a balance in hand of £790, the Hoxton-street Traders' Sick Society, Friends of Labour Club, &c., and a soup kitchen for the supply of dinners to the poor during the winter. This, indeed, is a good record—past and present—one which should not only encourage our brother to go forward with fresh courage, but also bring to his aid many new supporters.

MR. CHARLES JAMES IN YORKSHIRE.—This earnest young advocate of the Gospel Purity Association has concluded a week's mission at Wyke, near Bradford. The meetings were largely attended, and great enthusiasm prevailed. The powerful appeals to young men to array themselves on the side of true manhood and virtue were warmly received by a large gathering of men. God has indeed blessed the present visit of Mr. James, and we are hopefully looking forward to another.

ALFRED COOKE, Evangelist.

THE KABYLE MISSION.

A friend has kindly forwarded to us a private letter from Miss Hammon, who has recently gone to Oran to labour in this Mission. We extract the following:—

I AM feeling fairly at home now in "the land of strangers." The very first morning, quite a congregation assembled near us at the windows on the balcony, and in the court surrounding; for a piano happening to be in the room, we began the day by praising God in song. These, however, were not permanent quarters, and we have not since been able to enjoy the luxury of instrumental music, as it is so uncertain whether our stay in Oran will be of short or long duration. The visits to the native sisters call forth my desires and prayers for their salvation from the ignorance and degradation in which they live. Sometimes we find four or five with their children in one court, but can at present only make each other understand by signs, and a few words here and there. Some of them have fine, intelligent faces, and seem very quick to understand, but being brought up from infancy with the idea that they have no souls, and can be of little good even in this world, most of them have dejected countenances, and apathetic expressions pitiful to see.

The children are dear little things, but so dirty and unkempt; it is much laid on my heart to begin a school for native girls, when sufficient knowledge of the language warrants the undertaking. We have distributed many tracts and Gospels to French, Spaniards, and Arabs; with prayer and faith that these silent messengers shall go with blessing to many a heart. To outward appearance, and to human eyes, the work of taking the Gospel to Arabs and Kabyles promises to be arduous and difficult, but the day will come when those sent forth, and God's servants at home, and precious redeemed ones of Afric's sons and daughters with other jewels from "regions beyond" will rejoice together around the throne of God in heaven.

BIBLE COLPORTAGE IN CHINA.

AT the monthly meeting of directors of the National Bible Society of Scotland in Glasgow, on Monday, September 13, there was laid on the table a complete copy of the Chinese Wenli Testament, revised by Rev. Griffith John, and published at Hankow. The demand for portions of this version now averages nearly 1000 per day. Mr. Burnet, of Ching-Kiang, had accomplished a journey of 566 miles through Nganwhui. At Hwui Lung-ki where he and his party where pelted with wet clay till some of them looked like brickmakers, he obtained information which seems to throw light on the disappearance of Mr. Johnson, of the British and Foreign Bible Society, who, in 1869, set out on a journey in this Province from which he never returned. In the talk excited by the attack on Mr. Burnet, an old inhabitant of Hwui Lung-ki informed one of his boatmen that "twenty years ago there was another foreigner here selling books. During the day a fire broke out and burned a large part of the place. The foreigner was blamed for this, and at dead of night a number of men boarded his boat, and killed him and all on board, afterwards destroying the boat." There seems too much reason to believe that Mr. Johnson thus died a martyr's death. Mr. Burnet, having escaped from this virulent community, was prostrated by an attack of small-pox when 400 miles from home.

HOME FOR CHRISTIAN YOUNG MEN.—Mr W. A. Roxburgh, late of the Liverpool Y.M.C.A., has opened a private home for Christian young men, at 77, Queen's-road, Finsbury-park. With Christian influences and associations, it should be a boon to young men engaged in the City.

A TONGUE GUARD SOCIETY has been started. The members pledge themselves to give one penny to its treasury every time they speak disparagingly of another person. The money thus raised is for the benefit of the poor. It was organised last year in Hartford, Conn., and at once became popular, and several others have been organised for the same purpose in that vicinity.

Mr. Moody's Northfield Convocation.

(FROM OUR SPECIAL REPORTER.)

SEVENTH DAY.—TUESDAY, AUG. 10.

CHRIST'S SECOND COMING.

THE whole of the seventh day was given to this subject, which seems to be a comparatively novel one in many of the American churches. It was well and fully discussed at Northfield last and previous years. Each succeeding Conference, however, brings fresh visitors from distant parts, and among these, especially the young pastors, there are always some who have not deeply considered the question, or who have come to conclusions at variance with the premillennialist interpretation of the prophetic Scriptures. Mr. Moody, and all the leading speakers at Northfield, are strong in their convictions in favour of that view, so that the subject from their side is presented in its most convincing aspect, and at these Conferences it "holds the field." This morning Major WHITTLE opened the discussion by stating different points and backing them up with abundance of Scripture proof. He said he believed there was nothing so stimulating to earnest Christian service as a strong grasp of the doctrine of Christ's Second and Personal Appearing. If the young ministers present would only get imbued with the theme and with the hope, it would be as a fire in their bones. It had been a wonderful motive-power in his own Christian life. He made bold also to assert that all the evangelists on both sides of the Atlantic who are being greatly used of God in winning souls are strong on this line of truth. The doctrine might be abused, but he contended that, taking the Scriptures in their plain, evident sense, without preconceived notions or prejudices, the conclusion in favour of Christ's coming again to usher in the millennial day was absolute and inevitable. He quoted various texts to show that the second coming of our Lord spoken of in the New Testament could not be the death of the believer, or the destruction of Jerusalem, or the descent of the Spirit. Moreover, it is to be a personal and visible appearing of our Lord. Then he pointed out that the second advent would have a special bearing on the condition of the Jews—the veil would be removed from them as a nation, and the dispersed children of Abraham would be gathered again to their own land. In its aspect towards the unbelieving world it embraced the taking out a people for the name of the Lord, and the judgment of the Gentile impenitent, and the rejectors of Christ's salvation. On this point Major Whittle quoted a saying of Dr. Chalmers to his fellow-presbyters: "You may talk as you please, but the Scriptures make it clear that this dispensation is going to end with a smash." There are many who think that modern invention and civilisation will inaugurate a millennium, but telephones cannot change the natural heart, nor can steamships carry a man to heaven. The coming of the Lord in its relation to the Church will be preceded by many delusions—"Lo here! and lo there!" (Luke xvii. 22—24). There are some misguided persons now living who even claim that they are the Lord, and that in them He has appeared the second time. When He comes all these delusions will vanish, and the truth will be made plain. It is for believers to live now constantly watching, and waiting, and working, that they may be accounted worthy to escape the tribulations that are coming on the earth. What a comfort this doctrine brings to those who have lost loved ones, and who have the blessed assurance that one day these sleeping ones should awake at the sound of the trumpet which will herald Christ's appearing, and those whom death has parted will be reunited in the presence of their glorified Lord. "Wherefore comfort one another with these words."

after dinner resumed the consideration of the all-engrossing topic. He repeated a confession he made last year, that for twenty years of his public ministry he opposed the doctrine of the premillennial return of our Lord. He proceeded to expound the A B C of the doctrine on the following points:—(1) It is distinctly and repeatedly taught throughout the entire Scriptures; (2) It is declared to be imminent, that is, certain as to the fact, but uncertain as to time. An American student once asked his professor how, if the second coming of Christ were to be post-millennial, it could be said to be imminent; the professor replied, "We are in the millennium now!" Truly a queer millennium, with rioting and anarchy on every hand, the foundations of society shaking, and the Church and the world so mixed up that they cannot sometimes be distinguished. (3) The doctrine of the two resurrections so plainly revealed involves the premillennial appearing of Christ. Every past dispensation has closed in a catastrophe, and the deliverance of the faithful few, e.g., the deluge, when Noah's family escaped, and the destruction of Jerusalem, when the faithful ones had time to flee to the mountains. So God will gather out his own before the judgments descend upon the unbelieving nations. (4) Scripture gives no colour to the idea that the world is being gradually transformed by the preaching of the Gospel. Under this head he stated that the parables of Matt. xiii. presented a kind of chronological picture of the progress of Christ's kingdom on the earth. The sower and the seed, with only one kind of soil that was fruitful, may typify the fact that during Christ's own ministry there were few that were saved. The sowing of the tares will represent the introduction of error into the early Church. The mustard-tree, with the fowls of heaven lodging in it, picture forth the rapid spread of the Gospel, so that it became popular, and was even patronised by the world's powers, as in the times of Constantine. The parable of the leaven indicates the growth of error in faith and practice, permeating the professing Church in the middle ages. The goodly pearls are a type of the recovery of precious and vital doctrine, as in the case of Luther at the Reformation. The parable of the net and the fishes are a graphic representation of the times of modern revivals, when many are swept into the professing Church, but not all are true disciples of the Lord.

In the course of a somewhat discursive address, Dr. Pierson presented the following outline of Scriptural teaching on this subject. It will be welcome to many as a comprehensive and suggestive basis for a profitable Bible-reading:—

TIME UNCERTAIN.

Matt. xxiv. 36; Mark xiii. 32.

NAMES APPLIED.

Times of refreshing (Acts iii. 19).
Times of restitution (Acts iii. 21; Rom. viii. 21).
Times of regeneration (Matt. xix. 28).
Times of revelation of Jesus Christ (1 Peter i. 13).
Times of redemption (Luke xxi. 28).
Times of resurrection (Phil. iii. 2).
Times of his glorious appearance (1 Peter i. 7).
Last time (1 Peter i. 5).
Coming of day of God (2 Peter iii. 12).
Day of our Lord Jesus Christ (1 Cor. i. 8).
Foretold in prophecy (Dan. vii. 13; Jude 14).
Foretold by Christ (Matt. xxiii. 39 to Matt. xxvi. 64).
Foretold by the apostles (Acts iii. 20; 1 Tim. vi. 14).
Foretold by the angels (Acts i. 10, 11).

SIGNS PRECEDING (Matt. xxiv. 3).

Development of man of sin (2 Thess. ii. 3, 4).
Gospel preached for witness (2 Thess. xxiv. 14).
Gathering out of Gentiles (Acts xvi. 14).
Scoffing at promises (1 Peter iii. 3, 4).

MANNER OF HIS COMING.

(1) In clouds (Matt. xxiv. 30; xxvi. 64; Rev. i. 7).
(2) As He went (Acts i. 11).
(3) In the glory of the Father (Matt. xvi. 27).
(4) In his own glory (Matt. xxv. 31).
(5) In power and great glory (Matt. xxiv. 30).
(6) Angels (Matt. xvi. 27; xxv. 31; 2 Thess. i. 7).
(7) Archangels (1 Thess. iv. 16).
(8) With saints (1 Thess. iii. 13; Jude 14).
(9) Suddenly and unexpectedly (Matt. xxiv. 44; Luke xii. 40; 1 Thess. v. 2; 2 Peter iii. 10; Rev. xvi. 15).
(10) As lightning (Matt. xxiv. 27).

EVENTS.

Dead in Christ (1 Thess. iv. 16).
Saints' rapture (1 Thess. iv. 17; 1 Cor. xv. 23).
Complete salvation (Heb. ix. 28; 1 Peter i. 5).
Christ glorified in his saints (1 Thess. i. 10).
Bring secrets to light (1 Cor. iv. 5).
Judgment (Psa. l. 3, 4; John v. 22; 1 Tim. iv. Jude 15; Rev. xx. 11—13).
Reigns (Isa. xxiv. 23; Dan. vii. 14; Rev. xi. 15).
Destroys death (1 Cor. xv. 23—26).

BELIEVERS SHOULD BE

Always prepared (Matt. xxiv. 46).
Should love (2 Tim. iv. 8).
Should look for (Phil. iii. 20; Titus ii. 13).
Should wait for (1 Cor. i. 7; 1 Thess. i. 10).
Should hasten (1 Peter iii. 12).
Should pray for (Rev. xxii. 20).
Should be ready (Matt. xxiv. 44; Luke xii. 40).
Should watch for, be patient unto, be preserved unto, be not ashamed at, be blameless, be like Him, see Him and appear with Him, shall receive a crown of glory, shall reign with Him, shall be found unto praise.

The wicked shall scoff at his coming, presume on his delay, be surprised, be punished. The man of sin will be destroyed.

DR. WEST AND THE OBJECTORS.

This encyclopædic divine from the Far West is a most strenuous believer in the Second Advent, and all that it implies. He took up questions that had been sent in, and replied to some of them, substantially as follows:—

Q.—How can the idea of a forcible smash of the powers of evil exalt our conceptions of God?

A.—I do not know what your conception of God is. I have no conception of God except what the Scriptures reveal. If He has ordained judgment as well as providence and mercy, that exalts my conceptions of Him—which in themselves, however, amount to nothing.

Q.—Eighteen hundred years have passed since the promise was given, and Christ has not come; will He tarry another 1800 years?

A.—Supposing no evidence could be given of the nearness of his coming that would not prove it to be false. From Adam to Messiah there was one continued sigh for a deliverer, and though He tarried long, these longings were not misplaced, but were in due time fulfilled. The Second Coming of Christ is the great and, indeed, the only prophecy of the New Testament. Distinctions are not made between the Scripture prophecies. There is a story told of some wise men who were discussing the prophecies of the old Scriptures. Said Rabbi A. to Rabbi B.: "The Messiah is coming in the clouds of heaven." "But," says the other, "He is to come riding on an ass; how can He come in both ways?" "Ah," says Rabbi C., "If Israel is found worthy He will come in the clouds of heaven, but if Israel is apostate He will come on an ass." So, many things are put down in the millennium that will occur at the end of the age. Time is not going to end when Christ comes, but there will be opened a grander reign than now exists; just as this age is grander and wider than that during the little kingdom of Israel.

Q.—If Christ were to come now, what would become of the post-millennialists?

A.—They would all become pre-millennialists.

Q.—Is, then, this dispensation of the Spirit a failure?

A.—An American sceptic has asserted that Christianity is a failure, and, looking at things from the post-millennial standpoint, I should not know how to answer the statement. But from the pre-millennial position it is clear. Nearly 20 centuries, without more than a fraction of the world converted, looks like a failure; but if God's purpose, as revealed in the Scriptures, is to take out a people for his name from among the nations, it cannot be said that Christianity is a failure. The prediction is that there shall be a falling away before the end come; this is so manifest in these times that the infidel objector has no answer to it.

After some further remarks in defence, Dr. West spoke of the practical effects of this doctrine in the Christian life. As Christ is the object of our faith and our love, so is He the object of the central grace of hope. We hope, first, that He will continue in us the good work that He has begun. Then, if we are taken away while He tarries, our flesh will rest in hope, while our spirits will wing their way to his presence. But our grea object of hope is Himself, in his personal and visible manifestation at his coming. Even the French sceptic Renan admits that there is more Scriptural proof for his Second Coming than there is for all the other doctrines in the Word of God put together. If we love Jesus, do we not long to see Him? How this hope of one day being with Him, and still more of being like Him, should purify our lives even as He is pure.

Mr. Moody said we are plainly commanded in the Epistles to watch and wait, and we cannot be wrong in doing what God tells us through the inspired Word. We are there taught to look, not for death, but for the Lord from heaven. If we are in this constant attitude of watching, there will be no danger of our falling asleep at our post.

MR. RAINSFORD.

Mr. Rainsford dwelt on the thought that whatever Christ does for his people it is in the character of a servant. He took our nature upon Him that He might become a servant. His life on earth was one of lowly service. He is now interceding for us before his Father—a servant still. When He comes again it will be that He may serve his people. Blessed is that servant that watcheth. The Master shall come forth and serve him. His motive for delay is one of mercy and long-suffering, not willing that any should perish, but that all should repent and believe and be saved. The last words of his revelation are a promise from his own lips: "Surely I come quickly." Shall not his spouse, the Church, respond: "Even so; come, Lord Jesus."

This subject is a great one, and our thoughts respecting it to-day have centred around the promises to the Church. But what of the promises by the Father to Christ Himself? "He shall see of the travail of his soul, and shall be satisfied." Is not that word to be fulfilled? There are four Sonships of Jesus Christ, and each of them has a special promise attached to it. He was Son of God—Jehovah's only begotten Son. God has promised him a Bride, and she is being got ready during this dispensation. How beautifully this was foreshadowed in Eden. Adam must have been a long time there before God gave him a companion, because we read that all the animal creation was brought before him, and received their names. Then the man was thrown into a deep sleep, of which Calvary and the sepulchre are the counterpart. Then Eve was taken out of Adam's side, near his heart, that he might cherish her. What a picture of the Bride that is one day to be presented to Christ! This Sonship of Christ is the inner circle of the four. Then, as a second circle, He is the Son of Abraham, and He is yet to be glorified as the King of the Jews, when the chosen people are gathered together unto Him. In another circle we find Him as Son of David. So one day He is to take his power and reign as King of kings and Lord of lords. The kingdoms of this world are to be the kingdoms of our Lord and of his Christ. How David himself delighted to harp on that theme. In Psalm lxxii. he dwells on it in strains of marvellous beauty and power, and at the close of the psalm we are told that David, the son of Jesse, had nothing more to pray for. The fourth circle shows Him to us as the son of Adam, and as such He shall wear his crown, and be the King of the whole earth. Read Psalms xcvi. and xcviii., where everything on the earth is invoked to praise and laud Him as its King. His blood has dropped on this earth, and his human nature came from the very dust of it; do you think He is going to part with it or with us? Surely all this provides the strongest motive for patience, and perseverance, and purity, and a holy conversation. Would that we apprehended somewhat of his power and his glory! He has shown his power in the Creation, and our bodies are to be a new creation. We see his power in regeneration, and greater still will be his power in resurrection. The body of this humiliation is to be made like the body of his glory. This is no idle dream. May the Holy Spirit stamp the promise on our hearts, and exhibit the power of the hope in our lives!

As a closing word Mr. Moody referred to the significance of the words, "Till He come." What would the Lord's Supper be without this forward look to his coming glory, as well as its backward look to his shame and humiliation? We keep the feast "till He come." The talents are entrusted to us to trade with and multiply till He comes and reckons with his servants. We are to fight the good fight till He comes with the reward; there will be no crown till He comes. Satan, our great foe, cannot be bound till He comes. We shall not be reunited with our loved ones till He comes. So let us work, and watch, and wait.

DR. WEST'S CHALLENGE.

The morning and afternoon sessions did not by any means exhaust the interest awakened in this subject. It was largely the theme of conversation between times. Not a few said they had given little thought to it before, but it would henceforth be a factor in their views of vital truth, and in their lives. In order to provide an opportunity for the exchange of views on the part of any whose minds were not fully settled about it, an evening meeting was arranged for in Marquand Hall, when Dr. West, Dr. Pierson, and Mr. Rainsford would be present to answer any queries, and clear up points of difficulty. The occasion was one of lively and sustained interest, though the weight of argument was all on one side. The culminating point was reached when Dr. West repeated a challenge, which he said he had already given in public, but which had never been accepted by any expositor—that the post-millennial advocates should produce one single text from the Scriptures in proof of their theory. This text was not forthcoming, and the challenge is still before the world.

The friendly discussion and exposition of the fascinating theme were continued for a long time after the public meeting was closed, and it was only when the time arrived for retiring to rest that the little groups finally broke up for the night.

AN EVENING WITH THE CHILDREN.

The young people have to take a back seat in this Convention, as they do in mostly all religious gatherings of the kind, but they were not forgotten. I have stated that a Sunday-school was extemporised for them, and they had a meeting on this seventh evening all to themselves. It was held in the Recitation Hall, while the elders were gravely discussing knotty points of prophetic interpretation. A friend provided a lantern, which threw on a screen a set of attractive pictures, illustrating the course of human history, and chiefly clustering around the life and ministry of our Lord. A very graphic and impressively-worded talk, commenting on the pictures, held the attention of the children—alike of a smaller and a larger growth—for an hour. Suitable hymns were interspersed, sung, in most cases, by Mr. Sankey, Mr. and Mrs. McGranahan, and Mrs. Hudson, of Brooklyn. Altogether a very pleasant and profitable evening was spent.

EIGHTH DAY—WEDNESDAY, AUG. 11.

MR. MOODY AND MISSIONS.

With the wide fields of Christian doctrine, and of Christian endeavour, over which to roam within ten brief days, it will easily be understood that Mr. Moody's great difficulty was not so much how and what subjects to choose, as what to leave untouched. Doubtless, he was guided to a right selection. At any rate, there was a fair admixture of "word" and "work."

In closing the proceedings of the morning session, Mr. Moody drew attention to the fact that Miss Gardner, the lady missionary from India, to whom I have already referred in these notes, had left Northfield that morning, and would soon return to her distant field of labour. In parting with her he had been greatly cheered to know that she had received great personal blessing during the days of Conference, and would go back to India strengthened for her loved work. Miss Gardner's stay at Mount Hermon and Northfield has been a blessing to others as well as herself. One of the messages I carried with me from London to Northfield was an earnest and pressing entreaty from Rev. J. Fordyce, for many years a missionary in India, that Messrs. Moody and Sankey should make a Gospel tour throughout the principal cities of that vast dependency of the British crown. Mr. Fordyce feels strongly that the present would be an auspicious time for such an effort in India, and these brethren would gain the ear of the people to an extent impossible for any less known workers. I mentioned the fact of this invitation to Miss Gardner, who took occasion to back it up with all the persuasive powers at her command. Mr. Moody was evidently much impressed with what she represented; for, in referring to her departure, he said he felt a great desire to comply with her request. There are many among your readers who will not cease to pray that the steps of the evangelists may be directed to the Orient. It would, of course, be a great undertaking, and it may be said that Mr. Moody has burdens enough to carry, in connection with his schools that are developing so rapidly. That is true, but other shoulders could bear these burdens, and he and his fellow evangelist seem specially marked out as leaders in great Gospel endeavour. A visit from Mr. Moody and Mr. Sankey to India at this crisis in its religious history might be fraught with inconceivable issues for the good of the whole Eastern world, and I can only hope that God in his good providence will bring it about.

THE NEEDS OF THE FOREIGN FIELD.

The remarks of Mr. Moody in the morning were well supplemented by Dr. Pierson in the afternoon, in a short talk about the needs of the great mission fields. This Conference, he said, will fail of its purpose if it does not produce in us all a deeper devotion to the cause of Christ. Nearly 1900 years have passed away since Christ gave his marching orders to the Church: "Go ye into all the world," and we have not yet reached one fourth of the human race with the Gospel. Think of that! We have a lesson in the book of Esther as to what might be done if the Church of Christ had only the mind to do it. After the royal edict was issued for the destruction of the Jews, at the instigation of Haman, it was necessary to issue another edict to countermand the first. This decree had to be made known through one of the greatest empires of antiquity, embracing a territory as large as the Congo basin to-day. In those days they had no facilities for rapid communication; the news had to be carried by mules, dromedaries, and horses. This edict had to be translated and transcribed by hand into the many different languages spoken in the 127 provinces of the empire of King Ahasuerus. Yet all this was done, and the message of deliverance was made known through that vast region in ten days less than nine months. And the Christian Church, as I have said, has only carried the Gospel to one-fourth of the human race all these nineteen centuries of the Christian era. That is a burning shame to Christendom, and if we do not get stirred up on this occasion to do our part in the great commission, we shall dishonour the Lord who has bought us with his blood. Not to speak of the extreme scarcity of workers in the great mission fields that are now occupied to some extent (one missionary to 160,000 heathen), think of the great unoccupied regions of the globe—Kurdistan with its 3,000,000, Afghanistan with 8,000,000, a large tract in Africa, near the Equator, with 50,000,000, the Congo basin with 50,000,000 more, besides Mongolia, Thibet, Arabia, and other vast territories virtually untouched by the Gospel. The spiritual destitution in China is something terrible. When Mr. Cameron of the China Inland Mission traversed the breadth of the Chinese Empire, a few years ago, he found that a tract 1000 miles broad and 1000 miles long, contained only a single Protestant missionary. When Stanley went across equatorial Africa his experience was somewhat similar. Here we are in this favoured spot singing and praying and talking about the Gospel; we ought to get on to our faces before God, and hear Him saying, "Speak unto the children of Israel that they go forward."

In further enforcing this point, Dr. Pierson said: We, as Christians, are not responsible for the conversion of the nations, but we are responsible for carrying the Gospel message to them. He calculated that out of the 100,000,000 professed Protestants in the world there may be 10,000,000 who are true evangelical believers. These would probably have an average annual income of £100, giving a total of £1,000,000,000. One-hundredth part of that would be £10,000,000, which is five times as much as the whole Christian world contributes annually for the evangelisation of the heathen. Suppose each of these ten million true believers were to give one penny a day for this purpose; that would amount to over £15,000,000 yearly. As an example of what might be done when there is a willing mind and an earnest zeal, Dr. Pierson told of the seven shoemakers in the city of Hamburg, who resolved, by the grace of God, that they would give the Gospel to their destitute fellow-men as far as they could. At the close of twenty-five years, these humble men had founded fifty self-supporting churches of Christ with 10,000 converts; they had distributed 400,000 Bibles, and eight million tracts, while the Gospel had been brought within reach of fifty millions of human beings—a population almost as large as that of the present United States. It would only need 150 men of such faith and zeal to give the Gospel to the thousand millions of the heathen world in twenty-five years. The monks of the middle ages used to chant in their Cathedral service, Laborare est orare (work is worship); let us, as we go down from these mountain heights of privilege, carry out the thought that work for Christ is the highest form of worship.

In the course of the remarks that followed, Mr. Patterson, of Cincinnati, evangelist, spoke of the rare devotion of a Romish priest who has given up his life to work among lepers on one of the islands of the Pacific. He has himself contracted the leprosy, so that he is fast becoming a terribly mutilated specimen of humanity. But he is prepared to sacrifice health, and even life itself, if he may minister to his afflicted fellow-men. What a lesson for us Protestants, who profess that the love of Christ constrains us! It ought to make us ashamed of our apathy and lack of consecration. Major Whittle referred to the missionary movement at Mount Hermon. He said it was the beginning of a new era in the lives of many young men, and also, he hoped, in the history of missions in the United States. Let us take it as a token that the power of the Holy Ghost is coming down upon the people at large. Mr. George C. Needham referred to Gospel work among the large number of Jews and Roman Catholics, in American cities; there are open doors, and room for many workers. Mr. Rainsford also spoke of work among Roman Catholics in Ireland. He related an incident in his own experience—how he was thrown into the company of an Irish farmer during a long car-ride in a remote part of the country, and how the Lord enabled him to present the truth about salvation to the man, who drank it in with the utmost eagerness. "I believe," said Mr. Rainsford, "I shall meet that man in heaven, though I never saw or heard of him again."

At the morning session on this day, some helpful thoughts were given by Mr. Rainsford, on the Baptism of Christ; by Dr. Harwood Pattison, of Rochester Seminary, on the unique Power of the Name of Christ; by Dr. West, on the Sealing of Jesus; and by Mr. Needham.

THE NORTHFIELD SEMINARY.

No meeting during the Convention aroused more general or more deserved interest than the one held this evening in connection with the Girls' Seminary. It was not convened by Mr. Moody, as, of course, he has a natural delicacy in pushing to the front the institution which he has done so much to found, and with which he is so closely associated. The prime mover was Miss Evelyn Hall, the gifted and much-esteemed Principal of the Seminary. It falls to her lot to receive the applications for admission to the school, and her heart had been so touched by the excess of these applications over the normal resources at command that she felt moved to do something in order to meet the need. Her scheme was to start a Students' Aid Society for giving loans to young women who are unable to pay for their own board and tuition. She had no difficulty in persuading Mr. Moody to allow a meeting to be held for the furtherance of this object. He also consented to preside.

In opening the very interesting proceedings of the evening, Mr. Moody said: Seven years ago the corner-stone of the first school-building was laid. My aim was to get about a hundred young ladies educated here who could not afford to secure an expensive high-school education elsewhere. I had no thought of the boys' school then, as many boys can find ways of being educated that are not open to girls. In our small country towns the girls do not have an even chance, and this school was started to help them. We determined to make the cost of tuition as low as possible, and so we fixed it at 100 dollars (£20) a year. We could easily have filled the school with young women who would have paid 200 dollars a year; but that would have defeated our object, which is to help those who cannot pay a large amount. Many of the New England farmers whose land is poor have hard work to rear a family and make ends meet. We have refused hundreds of girls, because we had no funds out of which to support them during their school time. We are anxious, therefore, to organise an Aid Society, so as to give you all an opportunity of helping these poor but deserving girls to get an education. One thing I can honestly say—that the girl who has not got a cent of money has had the best chance of getting into the Seminary so far; I would like to have it so in the future. At this Convention you have only seen the frame of the school, as all the students are on vacation; if you come a month hence you will see the pictures in the frame.

Several excellent speeches followed in advocacy of the proposed Aid Society. Dr. Gordon, of Boston, said he felt very much interested in the project. In his youthful days he was helped by an Education Society, and now he had the privilege of being president of the society that helped him. It is a grand thing for anyone to be able to look back on a life of poverty and struggle; those who have had this experience will, on many grounds, bless God for it, and will always be glad to confess it. But there are some who encounter this early poverty at a terrible cost. He knew of a student who lived on very little, but he came out of his college course a skeleton, and never recovered. If God has given us the power to help others, we ought gladly to reach out the helping hand. The Doctor told of the boy in the Roman Carnival who was covered all over with gold leaf, and who died from the stoppage in the perspiratory system. There are many men undergoing a process of moral and spiritual death, because they are gold-leafed all over with hoarded riches; they give themselves no opportunity of exhaling—of doing good at once to themselves and others. Let us take for our motto, "Bear ye one another's burdens, and so fulfil the law of Christ."

Dr. Wayland, editor of The National Baptist, of Philadelphia, spoke next. Last year at a Mount Hermon meeting, he made a reputation for sententious humour, and on this occasion he sustained it. But there is plenty of method in his merriment. It was a very gratifying thing, he said, to see the change that is taking place with reference to the education of woman. Indeed, it may be said that the discovery of woman's capability is the great discovery of the age. Education, indeed, is more essential to a woman than to a man; because there is very much more that is educative in a man's after-life and contact with the world than in the case of a woman, generally speaking. Hitherto, if a poor young man wanted to be educated there have been all kinds of societies to help him, but there has been nothing of that kind for helping woman. As to the kind of education to be provided, Dr. Wayland scouted the idea that woman is inferior to man in reasoning capacity. On the question of physical training he was very emphatic, and wittily remarked that many young women left college with only a pain where they ought to have a spine; others he described as a mere bundle of nerves, with here and there a bone thrown in. Of course the education must be religious and Biblical—in short, it must be thoroughly practical, and such as will enable a young woman to earn her own living and to serve God with all the powers of body, mind, and spirit with which He has endowed her. He wished the utmost success to these schools for young women and young men, and prayed that many similar institutions might crown the New England hills.

An earnest address followed from Dr. A. T. Pierson, who said he wished to live long enough to see a big University in this Northfield valley with 2000 students—1000 girls and 1000 boys—and Mr. Moody as President. He eloquently expatiated on the value of a good and wise system of education, and spoke in terms of high praise as to the prominence given to Biblical knowledge at Mr. Moody's schools.

Then Mr. Moody called on Miss Hall to make a statement as to the object of the Aid Society. This she did with much self-possession and quiet grace, coloured throughout by an intense feeling of sympathy for those whose claims she presented. It was intended, she said, to give loans to deserving young students, repayable without interest, when they are in a position to do so. The help is given by way of loan, in order to keep them independent and self-reliant. The sums thus refunded will go to help others in a similar way, and thus the circle of usefulness will be continuous. This plan has been in operation for some years at Wellesley College, and is a great success. The young women are most conscientious about refunding the money they receive; during seven years nearly 8000 dollars has been repaid. Miss Hall read quotations from a number of letters received from applicants for admission to the advantages of the Seminary. These were of the most pathetic description, as to the strong desire expressed for education, and in many cases as to the family circumstances that hindered them from paying the necessary fees. One young student who had gone through part of her course wrote to say that she had no means that would enable her to return and complete the curriculum. A letter was written to say that an Aid Society was about to be formed and a loan would be made to her; her gratitude was unbounded. Last year nearly 100 applicants for scholarships had been refused from lack of the means. Miss Hall proceeded to tell something of the work the graduates of the seminary are now doing, how some are acting as city missionaries, in New York, Chicago, &c., and others as Christian teachers, raising the standard of education, while many are busy about various forms of Christian effort. A little band of Indian girls received education at the Seminary, and have now gone back to their own territory, teaching and occupying posts of usefulness. Many of those who have gone through the Seminary write to express their gratitude, and the continued interest they feel in it, and the hope that many others may received as great blessings as they. A general invitation was given by Miss Hall to become members of the Students' Aid Society, the yearly fee for enrolment being only two dollars; thirty dollars will secure a life membership, and 100 dollars an honorary membership.

Meantime, a desire to help, expressed in their speeches by Dr. Gordon and Dr. Pierson, had found responses in the hearts of many in the audience. One friend set the ball a rolling with the offer of 100 dollars; thereafter, for some considerable space, and with a little friendly prompting by Dr. Pierson, the promises multiplied, until it was found that the goodly sum of 3000 dollars had thus been given, besides smaller amounts and membership dues, totalling 130 dollars more.

The meeting was highly enthusiastic throughout, and the result far exceeded the most sanguine hopes of its conveners. That result may be taken to indicate not only the interest felt in this growing movement for the education of women, but as a token of gratitude to Mr. Moody for the good things he had provided at the Conference, and the many services he has rendered to the community at large. I imagine no one was more rejoiced at the favour shown to the schools than Mr. Moody himself. The prosperity of these institutions is a matter that lies very near his heart, and I may take it on myself to say that his many friends in Great Britain cannot show their friendship in a more appropriate or more welcome way than by furthering the interests of the Young Ladies' Seminary and the Mount Hermon Boys' School. If any readers of The Christian would like to have a small share in this good and paying business let them join the Students' Aid Society, and send their two dollars (or as much more as inclination may prompt) to Mrs. D. L. Moody, Northfield, Mass., U.S.A., who acts as treasurer pro tem.

NINTH DAY—THURSDAY, AUG. 12.

FLESH AND SPIRIT.

This question was taken up on Thursday morning by Rev. H. M. Parsons, of Toronto. He is a man of fine portly presence, with a wonderful flow of speech; sometimes, indeed, his fluency runs away with him, and the clearness of argument is obscured by the exuberance of speech. His talk to-day on the Flesh and the Spirit was vigorous and well sustained. The Scriptures, he maintained, strongly define the distinction between the two, and we ought to do the same. Too often people rush into Christian work in the energy of the flesh, without having been led and empowered by the Spirit. Coming to specific passages in support of his view, the speaker quoted Gen. v. 3, to show that while Adam was originally created in the likeness of God, we are there told that he begat a son in his own likeness. In John i. 13 we have a description of the genesis of a Son of God, "born not of blood, nor of the will of the flesh, nor of the will of man, but of God." So here we have distinctly two natures one born of man and the other born of God So, again, we learn from John iii. 6 that the flesh can produce nothing but flesh, to the end of the chapter. You never can educate, or reform, or convert flesh into spirit, or into anything but flesh. We cannot use the word "birth" without its carrying with it the thought of life, and this applies to the spiritual as well as to the natural birth. Believing parents should pray that the child which has been born to them, may be born anew of God, and have the image of God implanted in it by the Holy Spirit of God. They can thus be the moulders of the character of those who will follow them on the stage of life. As opposed to the Holy Spirit there is the devil, who is the god of this world, and, so to speak, at the head of the flesh nature. There is an insane idea in Boston that the devil is not a person. Yet he rules this world to-day, and he is not yet cast out of the heavenly places, though he will be soon. In 1 John iii. we read that that which is born of God cannot sin; on the other hand that which is born of the flesh cannot do anything else but sin, simply because it is of the flesh. While this is true, we can be just as certain of being in Christ as of being out of Christ. Jesus is a person, and we may be as certain of knowing Him, as we are of knowing any of our earthly acquaintances. An infidel once asked a lady if she believed the Bible. "Yes." "Why do you believe in that Book?" "Because," said she, "I am acquainted with the Author." This is proof that cannot be gainsaid.

Dr. Parsons went on to show that the existence of these two principles in the believer does not destroy his personality or responsibility. When we have a clear conception of the parallel existence of the two natures, we are not troubled by it. It is when we allow barriers to come between us and Christ, and we live in the flesh instead of in the Spirit, that we have trouble and difficulty. Paul knew the distinction when he said, "I no longer live, but Christ liveth in me." The Spirit and the flesh are always at war. The flesh warreth against the Spirit, but the Spirit warreth against the flesh, so that we do not do the things that the fleshly nature would prompt us to. It is a glorious thought that the Spirit enables us to do that which we naturally do not want to do. The speaker, incidentally alluding to such worldly engagements as dancing and novel-reading, said we could always settle the point as to what was of the flesh, by testing ourselves whether or not we could easily turn from such things to the quiet study of the Word of God and to prayer, and find enjoyment in them. On the question of Bible study, he was very strong in his contention that the Word of God should be allowed to speak for itself to the soul, without the intervention of human commentaries. It is only after we have prayerfully studied any passage ourselves that we can safely go to the writings of others and see what they have got out of it. It is a dishonour to the enlightening Spirit of God to put any human teacher between Him and the soul.

followed in the same vein of thought. He fully accepted the view of the two opposing natures of flesh and Spirit in the life of the believer. He pointed out the vital difference between culture and regeneration. We may cultivate and prepare the soil to the last degree, but unless the seed is dropped in, there will be no fruit. So all mere cultivation of the natural man, without the implanting of the uncorrupted seed of the Word by the power of the Spirit, will avail nothing. The highest level of the fleshly nature is infinitely below that which is produced by grace. The two elements of Christian life and Christian growth are mortification of the flesh and cultivation of the Spirit—the subduing and repressing of the old nature, and the development of the new nature by the power of the Holy Ghost. It is true the "old man" was crucified on the cross, but that was only as far as the claims of the law were concerned. We have still to mortify the deeds of the flesh, and we can only do it in the power of the Spirit. We cannot mortify the flesh by the flesh. We cannot die by the power of our own death, but we can do it by the indwelling power of the Holy Ghost. He alone is able to subdue the flesh, and ultimately bring it under, so that by and by we shall be able to sing: "Thanks be to God, who giveth us the victory through our Lord Jesus Christ."

In the afternoon addresses were given by Dr. Gordon, Mr. Rainsford, and Dr. Parsons on the witness borne to Christ throughout the Scriptures, and the responsibility that devolves on all his followers to witness for Him by their life. I pass over this meeting, and give some notes of the meeting of

THURSDAY EVENING.

It was intended as a kind of free conference, from the interchange of opinion or exhortation on any helpful topic. As matters turned out, the talk principally hinged on different methods of Bible study, and on the best ways of getting average American congregations to be more in love with the Scriptures. Dr. Pierson began with some hints on Bible study. It is important, first of all, to grasp the purpose of each book. Thus, in studying Ecclesiastes, we have to discover that it teaches the unsatisfactory nature of all worldly things. The moment God is introduced, the whole scope and aspect of life to the writer are changed. Judge of a book, therefore, by its evident purpose; this will help us better to understand isolated passages. It is a good thing to write out a brief analysis of the scope of a book and copy it in your Bible as a sort of introduction to the book. Always note carefully to whom a book was specially and primarily written, and where and when it was written, as well as by whom. Study the parallel passages in other books. The marginal notes should have due attention, though sometimes they are very superficial. Briefly put, the Bible student's motto should be: "Read, search, meditate, and compare."

Dr. Parsons: Do not treat the Bible as a book of abstractions. Hear the voice of Jesus all through it. Ask the aid of the Holy Spirit to illuminate the mind as to the meaning of the text. It is good to get hold of the truth, but better to let the truth get hold of and possess us. No one can teach others properly till he is so full that the truth bursts forth through the channel of speech.

A Brother: If we do not obey the Word according to the light we have, we will not get more light. Find out the connection between the didactic and historical parts; consider the circumstances under which any book or part of a book was penned. Read and compare both the authorised and the revised versions. Never think we have exhausted the meaning of a passage. It is much to be desired that some good scholars should furnish marginal references to the revised version.

Mr. Moody: Have you ministers all got Bibles in the pews of your churches? Dr. West: We have two in every pew. Dr. Parsons (Toronto): Out of 1000 hearers, 600 take their Bibles and follow the reading.

Mr. Moody: We cannot get the people to do it in the United States, as a rule.

Mr. Rainsford: If the people do not have their Bibles, they cannot intelligently follow Biblical preaching. Some preachers, however, never refer to the Word of God. Let your preachers abstain from "ballooning," and preach the Word, and the people will provide themselves with Bibles.

Dr. Parsons: The Socratic method of question and answer would help us. Instead of always stuffing the people with preaching, let there sometimes be mutual discussion and study between pulpit and pew.

Mr. Moody: The whole trouble comes from this miserable textual preaching. Perhaps, if we had responsive readings in the church, it would be better. But some of the churches are so dark, with their stained-glass windows, that the people could scarcely see to read. I do not believe in asking the Bible Society to supply copies. Let the people buy them for themselves, and carry them to church through the streets; then they can preach a sermon a mile long.

Major Whittle: The fault is not all with the preachers. I know of one minister who commenced expository sermons, and the elders told him to change the style. Unless a man has got backbone, he cannot withstand the pressure brought to bear on him.

Mr. Moody: I think some preachers make a mistake in putting too many Scripture references into their sermons. I used to err on that score, but now I never have more than ten passages in one sermon.

Dr. West told how he had gathered his congregation together and trained them, especially the young men, to take part in the prayer meeting, and to be ready when called on with a brief exposition. He had now some two dozen young men who could take his place at any time and conduct the weekly prayer meeting.

The discussion, of which I have presented only the main points, was carried on with spirit, and showed that the friends were alive to the comparative lack of Biblical knowledge in the churches. Mr. Moody remarked, towards the close of the conversation, that he believed people were getting tired of mere moral essays, and the preacher who opened up and expounded the Scriptures would be the preacher of the future.

WHAT CHRISTIANITY CAN DO.—Writing from a town in Northern India, a private correspondent says:—I had before me to-day a wonderful instance of the power of Christianity to regenerate Indian womanhood. I was calling on the old native pastor here. His wife, dressed in quite native style, came into the little drawing-room, and sat down and talked with us as if she were a motherly old English lady, as simply and freely, and with perfectly well-bred propriety. It was marvellous to me that Christianity could, in a single life, without inherited traditions, have so raised an Indian woman from the poor shrinking thing she once was, ashamed to look at her husband even, let alone strangers, and thinking she would be guilty of grievous indecorum if she spoke a word to them, or to him in their presence. I could not but think, if a native heathen wife ever came to see her, how the sight would dwell in her memory and awaken longings in her breast, shocking as the conduct of her Christian sister would seem to her.—Christian Leader.

PERTH CHRISTIAN CONFERENCE.

(FROM OUR SPECIAL REPORTER.)

THE Perth Conference sprang out of the revival of 1859-60, which infused new spiritual vigour into the religious life of Scotland. Its meetings have for twenty-four years constituted a strong bond of union between believers, and filled Christian workers with fresh enthusiasm and activity.

The opening meeting of this year's Conference was held on Tuesday forenoon last week in the City Hall, and was well attended. It did one good to see so large a company of Christians gathered at a busy hour to hear what message God's servants were commissioned to bring them. The subject of Conference for the day was

THE CHURCH IN ITS ORIGIN.

Lord POLWARTH presided, and spoke some weighty words by way of introduction.

Dr. ANDREW BONAR, of Glasgow, began by calling attention to the fact that, in reading the Bible, we often pass by a great truth till suddenly a light shines on it, and its importance dawns on us. This teaches us that God does not reveal all truth at once, but gradually, and has the effect of keeping us humble. The origin of the Church lies in the words, "The Lord hath need of him." As the painter needs the canvas, the sculptor the marble, the potter the clay, so the Lord needs sinners that He may be glorified. "He hath made us, and not we ourselves." By "making" us is meant more than creation; it means shaping us for his own purpose. In his sovereignty He chose us to show his wisdom and grace, and his skill in fashioning out of vile material vessels, first of grace and then of glory.

We need Him; but He also needs us. He poured out his wondrous blood on Calvary, but if there were none to sprinkle with it, what glory would there have been in pouring it forth? Christ saves and sanctifies his people, because He has need of them; and when He shall come the second time, it is to be glorified in them. The angels will glorify their King when they see those whom He shall raise in the beauty of the resurrection body, and with the beauty of the resurrection soul shining on their countenances. These ministering spirits will say, in wondering adoration: "Can that be the old saint with the wrinkled face, haggard and drawn with lines of pain, who used to live in a hovel, and whom we so often comforted on earth? Not one of us has now such a beautiful face!" And so they will glorify Christ.

But what is the meaning of "the fulness of Him that filleth all in all" (Eph. i. 22, 23)? If Christ fills all in all, how can it be said that the Church is his fulness? These words are not spoken of Christ as the Son of God, but of Christ as God-Man, the Head of the Church. He, who as God filleth all in all, needs as the Head of the Church a body. He needs feet, hands, and voice. To be perfect, He needs that all his members should be round about Him. Learn from this blessed truth the dignity of a Christian. Again, it teaches us to keep humble. All the glory of our salvation belongs to God. Dr. Bonar spoke with unction. Our meagre outline can give no definite idea of the life and power that throbbed through his words.

The impression he produced was deepened by Rev. H. W. WEBB-PEPLOE'S address, in which the utter hopelessness of man's position apart from Christ, and the grace of the Lord Jesus in founding the Church, were forcibly emphasised. He showed, by running through the argument of the Epistle to the Romans, our natural condition, and what we become in and through Christ. His marvellous acquaintance with the Scriptures struck more than one of his hearers. His thinking and language were steeped in Bible thought and language; so his words had a rare charm and helpfulness.

In the afternoon there was a free conversation about

MOTIVES FOR CHRISTIAN LIFE AND DUTY.

Dr. BONAR presided, and followed the line of his remarks in the forenoon. He said that the Lord needs his people to convert souls. It was a striking fact that the country, destitute of living witnesses for Christianity, was spiritually dead. Heathendom was unmoved till missionary effort touched it. He counselled Christian workers to guard against the mistake of not thanking God for a soul's conversion unless they had a hand in it. Experience shows that very few souls are saved by one man's efforts. Faithful preaching awakened concern; a friend's plain dealing in conversation deepened the impression; and then a third was used as an instrument to lead the anxious one into the peace of believing.

Rev. Dr. BAXTER, Blairgowrie, said electing love, the atonement, and holiness should be powerful motives in Christian endeavour. Rev. Mr. FOX, St. Nicholas, Durham, dwelt on the motive supplied by the sense of duty. We are apt to contrast duty with love, as law with Gospel, but may not duty be the highest expression of love? Duty has formed the finest characters our country has produced, and that duty was rooted in love of Fatherland. Mr. ARNOT, Glasgow, maintained that living faith, a dead self, and a single eye were needed in preaching with power, or in serving God acceptably. Professor MARTIN, Aberdeen, pointed to the Second Advent as an impulse to Christian activity. Several other ministers and laymen took part in this most interesting discussion, which threw helpful light on the factors which should be at work in the service of Christ.

In the evening the large hall was comfortably filled. Mr. CHARLES COOK gave a rousing address to workers, from Psalm cxxvi. 6. "He that goeth forth" enunciates the great principle of going out. "Weeping" shows the spirit in which we must go forth. Singing and logical preaching are good, but the tear can reach men when words fail. The burden of the Lord must press heavily on us before we enter into this spirit of service. "Precious seed" is the material we must use. The Word of God is the only power that can touch, quicken, and bless sinners and saints. He spoke of the encouragement conveyed by the assurance, "shall doubtless come again with rejoicing, bringing his sheaves with him," and illustrated its truth by some of his own experiences in visiting English and Continental prisons.

Rev. W. HASLAM spoke with a fiery energy and pointed vigour that compelled attention. He forced on Christians the consideration of the question, "What was I saved for?" He lamented that there were so many palsied Christians who are weak and useless, and rejoiced in the tides of blessing which were sweeping over different parts of the world. He showed how, as the fruit-tree was created to bear fruit, so believers were "created in Jesus unto good works." He warned his hearers against the idea prevalent in some quarters that a certain supply of grace is given, and that it can be used when convenient. That idea is hurtful to true dependence on God, and to activity in his service.

Mr. FRASER, of the Indian Civil Service, gave some weighty counsels, which he illustrated by incidents in his own labours for Christ in India; and so ended the first day's meetings.

On Wednesday afternoon the subject of the CHURCH'S POSITION AND RESPONSIBILITIES,

its conflict and service, was taken up. Lord POLWARTH drew attention to the truth that we can only understand our responsibilities when we understand our position. The position of the Church is "in Christ." The dimensions of that definition cannot be gauged. It is too high and too deep, too long and too broad, to be comprehended. Our true position is "in Christ"—(a) in respect to the covenant; (b) as touching representation, Christ's death, resurrection, ascension, and glory are ours; (c) as touching union, we are united to Christ. Out of these relations spring corresponding duties. If we are united to Him, we should bear the fruits that come from vital union.

Rev. GEORGE WILSON, St. Michael's, Edinburgh, discussed the Church's conflict and service. The Church should realise the lines along which the battle is to be fought. The boundaries between the world and her must be clearly marked; whoever is on the side of sin is against Christ. The greatest risk of the Church in our day is being satisfied with what the world can give, and stopping short of the full enjoyment of the grace of God. No man can conquer for Christ over whom Christ has not won a complete conquest. The weapon with which the conflict is to be carried on is the simple Gospel. The intellectual, moral, social, and political hostility to religion in our day cannot be effectually met with any other weapon. We must serve as well as fight. We must bear witness of what the Lord has done for us. If there is any self-intrusion in our service, in that proportion will our service be weak.

In the afternoon the topic was

CHRISTIAN WORK ABROAD.

Mr. FRASER, who has been fifteen years in India, and who is now an influential magistrate there, drew a dark picture of the evils connected with the revival of heathen orgies and the debasing rites of superstition. He said that zenana work was the most pleasant and hopeful feature in Indian missions. He bewailed the inconsistencies of his countrymen, who are a stumbling-block to the progress of Christianity. The natives will not have an exploded faith, which has no power in moulding the lives of those who profess it. He dwelt on the encouragement furnished by the existence of a young Church. India has now native ordained missionaries and flourishing congregations, as well as bands of devoted lay workers.

Rev. Mr. SWANSON, lately a Chinese missionary, spoke of the wonderful advance that the Gospel has made in China. He endorsed Mr. Fraser's words about the hindrances caused by the inconsistencies of Englishmen. He gave some interesting facts to prove that the teeming millions of China are being brought under the influence of Christianity.

Rev. JAMES MCCAUL, of Montreal (Canadian Presbyterian Church), in pleading the claims of the French Evangelisation Board throughout Great Britain, called attention to the spiritual state of the vast colony to which he belongs, which, as he reminded us, covers an area of 3,500,000 square miles. The work he is associated with is very hopeful. A great craving for knowledge is getting a hold of the French Canadian Catholics, and nothing short of the Gospel will satisfy them.

These missionary addresses were full of stimulus. They supplied information about the Lord's work in foreign lands, and stirred up Christians to pray, and aid as best they can in extending the boundaries of the kingdom of Christ.

In the evening Mr. SWANSON spoke again. He had an audience which should incite any man to speak his best. The large city hall was crowded to the door. Mr. Swanson was equal to the occasion. His subject was "China." A somewhat captious critic said, "That man has China on the brain." Very likely he has, for he has got it in his heart. How his face shone, how his eyes flashed, and how his voice trembled with intensity of feeling as he pleaded the cause of the people he loves so well! He said that to him a Chinese missionary's life was the grandest possible. China, he believes, has a great future, and a door is now opened in it for the Gospel which Christians should use without delay.

When the veteran missionary sat down, Mr. GEORGE CLARKE, of the Railway Mission, London, who has been greatly owned of God in evangelistic work in Scotland during the past months, gave a Gospel address. His melting appeals and bold yet tender home-thrusts produced a marked effect on the great assembly, and were attended by manifest blessing. Many anxious souls professed to find peace, and careless ones were awakened.

The subject of Conference on Thursday was

THE CHURCH IN ITS HOPE AND FINAL INHERITANCE.

Lord POLWARTH again struck the key-note of the deliberations of the day by giving Christians as their motto the words, "Until the day breaks and the shadows flee away." Rev. W. STEVENSON, Leith, said there were three elements in the hope of the Church: (a) It is a hope of the individual perfection of the saints; (b) A hope of the supremacy of our Lord Jesus Christ and of his kingdom over the world; (c) A hope of evil being put away in isolation for ever, and that the Church would be presented pure, spotless, and without wrinkle. On these points all Christians are agreed, though they differ much as to the method of the development of the kingdom of God.

Rev. Dr. BENNETT, Chelsea, spoke of the inheritance of saints, and pointed out the necessity of living worthy of that inheritance. For this the daily power and felt presence of the Holy Ghost are needed.

In the afternoon the Communion of the Lord's Supper was observed. It was a season of refreshing and blessing. Members of different sections of the Church sat side by side, forgetting the divisions that separated them, in love to their common Saviour. Something of heaven's peace and unity was felt. With this feast of remembrance and of anticipation the proceedings of the Conference proper came to an end. Many of those who had spoken and listened went to their respective homes with the last words they had heard at the Communion-table ringing in their ears: "They washed their robes, and made them white in the blood of the Lamb;" but some remained to the evening meeting, which was a memorable one. The hall was densely crowded.

Rev. Mr. MCCAUL urged on believers the duty of going down from the mountain of privilege with the determination not to sink back to the old levels of selfishness and ease. The only way to keep near Christ is to go where He is, and that is among the perishing, to save them. Mr. CHARLES COOK spoke some solemn words from "The door was shut." Mr. GEORGE CLARKE followed with a Gospel message, that was as good news from a far country, and cold water to those in thirst. The hands of the clock sped on, but there were no signs of restlessness. Every eye was fixed on the speaker, every ear drank in the message of life he uttered, and the after-meeting showed that the Gospel is still the power of God unto salvation. The last day was, indeed, the great day of the feast.

MR. S. WALTON AT SANDGATE.

BY AN OLD SOLDIER.

THIS evangelist has closed a most interesting mission at Miss Papillon's Soldiers' Institute, Sandgate. The little mission hall and adjoining room were filled every night with soldiers, so that the civilians were almost squeezed out for want of room. It gave us great joy to see fine young soldiers anxiously inquiring the way of salvation in such large numbers. The handful of workers was much too small to cope with the after meetings, and we believe many have decided for Christ who were not personally spoken to.

Many of the cases are of a remarkable type; one is that of a well-educated man, who in his college life, while studying for the ministry, was poisoned by some sceptical books. Having abandoned the idea of the ministry, he tried another calling, which carried him around the world. In this he failed, and enlisted in the army. He made sceptical attacks upon the missionary, but at last yielded to the invitation of the latter to come to the meetings, where, broken down under the power of God, he yielded himself to Christ, and is now rejoicing. A poor backslider wept bitterly in the after meeting, for the grief she had caused her Lord and Master. After confessing her sins, she went away bright and happy, praising the Lord.

The Bible readings in the afternoons were held in Christ Church Mission House, Folkestone, when numbers of the upper classes were touched by the word of exhortation to the higher Christian life, and several young ladies professed conversion.

Will your readers remember us in prayer, and especially the young converts, whose trials and temptations are sometimes very severe in the barrack-room. If any would like to write to them, or send them books, they can obtain the addresses from Mr. Hull, at the Soldiers' Home, Sandgate.

LADIES' NEGRO'S FRIEND SOCIETY.—This Society, with a history extending over sixty-one years, carries us back to the time when the emancipation of the negro even in British possessions had still to be contested. It brings before us the names of many ladies who nobly espoused the cause of freedom—the revered Rachel Lloyd, who, from her fifteenth year to the close of her life in 1854, wept and worked for the negro race; Mary Lloyd, Lucy Townsend, Elizabeth Heyrick, and many others. This Society is still doing Christ-like work in aiding missionaries and others engaged amongst the negroes of Africa and Jamaica. We are sorry to note that the subscriptions seem to be on a diminishing scale, and, in the hope that this may be reversed, commend the work of the ladies to the notice of our readers. The President is Mrs. E. Sturge, Charlbury, Oxon.

AN APPEAL FROM BRAZIL.

DEAR SIR,—I have for a long time had the pleasure of reading THE CHRISTIAN through the kindness of a lady in Edinburgh who sends it me regularly. I have found it a source of much benefit and comfort in my work as a missionary, and I wish more Christians would send on their papers, after reading, to those who are bearing the heat and toil of the work of preaching the Gospel to those who are now in darkness. We have in this city one church of twenty-three members, in the province of Sao Paulo one of forty-two members, in Bahia one of seventy members, in Maceio one of thirty, and in Pernambuco one of thirteen members. We have five missionaries and wives on the field, one lady teacher, one Bible-woman, and four native preachers, all under the Southern Baptist Board of American Missions.

In this great city, with its thousands of souls, there are but six Protestant churches, and only four of the six preach to the Brazilians. May we not well say, What are these amongst so many? Who will come over and help us win Brazil for Christ? Think of the twelve millions of souls in this empire, who are almost without any true knowledge of the Gospel of our Lord Jesus Christ. The religion taught here is worse than Paganism. Could you but see the sights that I see daily—of sin and degradation, ignorance and shame, saints' days kept sacred, and the Lord's day made a convenience of, priests living in open adultery, drinking and gambling, &c.—the greater portion of the lower classes doing the same, because the priest will not marry them without an exorbitant fee. In the church, a dead Christ, in wood or stone, a dead form of worship, conducted in a dead language that few understand; dead saints on canvas surround you on all sides, and the "Blessed Virgin" is given the chief place, instead of the living Christ. The Bible is a sealed book to them; they know nothing of the risen Christ as a Mediator and personal Saviour; it is only through the saints and the Virgin that they are taught to approach unto God, putting aside the new and living Way that our Lord opened up. The name of God is not at all sacred to them; they use it as a common name. They also have religious societies, such as the Society of the Blessed Mother of God, Society of the Holy Spirit, &c. Christians! is this not enough to make your blood tingle? and yet some say Brazil is a Christian country, and needs not the Gospel.

Let me, in closing, ask the prayers of all who love our Lord Jesus Christ for the work in Brazil, and may the Spirit of God incline the hearts of some to come over and help in this work.

E. H. SOPER, Baptist Pastor.

A BIBLE AND PROPHETIC CONFERENCE.

A BIBLE and Prophetic Conference, following out the idea of the first general American Prophetic Conference held at New York City in 1878, has been called to meet at Chicago, November 16—20. It will be based on the resolutions adopted at the first Conference, affirming a belief in the fulfilment of the prophetic words of Scripture relating to the first and second comings of Christ, the imminence of the second coming, its necessary precedence to the millennium, and the duty of the Church to hasten it by watching and working, and declaring that "the doctrine of our Lord's pre-millennial advent, instead of paralysing evangelistic and missionary effort, is one of the mightiest incentives to earnestness in preaching the Gospel to every creature until He comes."

The committee have circulated the call, with the endorsement of a large number of leading religious workers, bishops, pastors, evangelists, and others, and among the names supporting the movement are those of Rev. Dr. A. J. Gordon, of Boston, Bishop Nicholson, of Philadelphia, Rev. Dr. H. M. Parsons, of Toronto, Rev. W. J. Erdman, Major Whittle, Mr. George Needham, and many others. The programme will cover about twenty topics, and the deepening interest in the study of the development of prophecy, in history particularly, with reference to the triumph of Christianity, is expected to draw a much larger attendance than that which marked the first gathering, eight years ago.

A HOME for lady students and Christian workers will be open at 186, Euston-road, on October 1. Particulars may be obtained of the Secretary, Miss Pocock, at the above address.

VILLAGE TENT MEETINGS.

HENDON.

A TENT was put up here by the Evangelistic Mission in a field (lent by Mr. Bishop) near the Midland Railway Station, and services were commenced in it on Sunday, August 8, which continued until September 2. There were good attendances, and interest shown on the part of residents and others. Several persons professed conversion. Some of the last meetings here were addressed by Mr. Sidney Smith and his wife, converted gipsies. This tent was removed to where services were conducted from Sunday' September 5. From that time to the close—Sunday, September 15—anxious souls were met with, as well as decided cases of conversion. Attendances have exceeded expectation, the tent being nearly full some week-nights, and crowded every Sunday. Services have also been held at concerning which a friend writes: "Last night we had a meeting for praise and testimony. For about an hour saints and sinners stood up and testified to being revived and saved. We have heartfelt gratitude for God for his blessing upon this special effort."

CHILD'S HILL, N.W.,

LITTLE DOWNHAM.

At this place, near Ely, Cambridge, a tent has been pitched for Sunday services, during the past six weeks, and meetings are now held nightly, notwithstanding a late harvest. On Sunday, 12th instant, there were attendances of 300 (afternoon), and 600 (evening), out of a population of about 1000. There has been much interest in this work, and signs of abundance of blessing. There is no work which "pays" better than tent work. Who will help us to extend it?

TEMPERANCE NOTES.

HOME.

IN The Alliance News "The Fruits of the Traffic" continues to be a ghastly record of outrage and crime.

IN connection with the annual meetings of the Baptist Union, at Aberdare, important total abstinence meetings were held.

AT the recent Millenary celebration at Ripon, held at Fountains Abbey, the Marquis of Ripon would not allow the sale of intoxicating drink in the grounds.

IN connection with the Central Hall Blue Ribbon Army Mission at the Newcastle-on-Tyne Police Court, since March 183 signed the pledge.

A TEMPERANCE MEETING was held in connection with the recent Trades Union Congress at Hull. A resolution was passed against unnecessary Sunday work, and the previous question was carried against a proposal to open museums, &c., on Sundays.

IN his presidential address at the opening of the Trades Union Congress in Hull, Mr. F. Maddison said: "Anything which tends to lessen the evils of intemperate drinking is to the advantage of the cause of Unionism, and should be encouraged by us."

ON Monday evening Mr. C. H. Spurgeon commenced a Seven Days' Gospel Temperance Mission at the Tabernacle, Newington-butts. Addresses were given by Mr. Spurgeon and Mr. J. W. Harrald. The meetings will be continued every evening this week.

FOREIGN.

THE Wiltshire Regiment (99th Peshawur), which numbers 1000 men, has 539 abstainers.

A TRANSLATION of Dr. B. W. Richardson's work, "Popular Instruction on Alcohol," is supplied to prisoners in Dutch prisons.

IN a paper in The Contemporary Review, Mr. S. Smith hopes the Commission on the Government of India will probe the drink-traffic to the bottom.

IN The Quarterly Review the "vintage feast" amongst the Greek islanders is described, and it appears to be a strange mixture of superstition and intemperance.

GENERAL FISK, who is likely to be Prohibition candidate for the American Presidency, says, "The Christian Church ought to lead in this great reform. It is her peculiar province."

AUSTRALIAN PAPERS say that the interest in Mr. William Noble's mission is increasing. He held some very successful meetings in Sydney, at one of which Sir Henry Parkes took the chair.

A CORRESPONDENT referring to our note on "Bordeaux" claret says that it is still naturally produced, but is not all French grown. Although of little alcoholic strength, people are better without it, pure or adulterated.

THE New York Tribune says: "Prohibition has now been the law in Rhode Island for more than a month, and while it may yet be too early to predict from results its permanent success, a most promising beginning has certainly been made.

Notes and Comments.

NEXT week we shall give portrait and sketch of Rev. Dr. Murray Mitchell, the well-known Indian missionary.

Last Sunday, at Highbury Quadrant Church, Dr. L. Bevan preached his farewell sermons, on his departure for Melbourne, Australia.

The Prince of Wales, writing to the Lord Mayor with respect to a proposed national memorial of the jubilee of the Queen's reign, says:—

> It appears to me that no more suitable memorial could be suggested than an institute which should represent the arts, manufactures, and commerce of the Queen's Colonial and Indian Empire. Such an institution would, it seems to me, be singularly appropriate to the occasion, for it would illustrate the progress already made during Her Majesty's reign in the Colonial and Indian Dominions, while it would record year by year the development of the Empire in the arts of civilisation. It would thus be deeply interesting to Her Majesty's subjects, both within and beyond these islands, and would tend to stimulate emigration to those British territories where it is required, to expand the trade between the different British communities, and to draw closer the bonds which unite the Empire.

The Lord Mayor loyally seconds the proposal, and accedes to the suggestion of His Royal Highness that a Mansion House Fund should be opened for the purpose of raising the necessary means.

We have been favoured with advance sheets of painfully interesting letters from two China Inland missionaries with respect to the riots at Chung-K'ing. We are greatly rejoiced to find that, though the danger was very imminent for a time, the lives of all the Mission families have graciously been preserved. The latest accounts state that all had left the disturbed city, and, after a trying and perilous journey by boat, were safely housed at the English Consulate, I'chang, on July 20.

Though no lives have been lost there has been great loss of property, as the following paragraph from Mrs. Marcus Wood's letter will show:—

> The next day accounts were brought us of what had been our homes—not a single thing was to be found on the ground where our homes were. We were never so poor with regard to this world's possessions; not a change of clothing, not the worth of a pin have we more than the clothes we have on. The loss of our Bibles, given us by dear friends, photographs of our dear parents, and brothers and sisters, some now in heaven, seems a terrible loss. It is all for Christ's sake, and the Gospel's, and we know that our God and Father must have some wise purpose in it all; it is sure to work together for our good.

We refer our readers for the full details to China's Millions for October, and commend the Mission in this crisis to the prayerful sympathy of our readers.

Mr. Axel Gustafson, who writes on the temperance work of Mr. Samuel Morley in our present issue, is the author of a remarkable book, one of the ablest, on this subject: "The Foundation of Death: a Study of the Drink Question" (Kegan Paul. 5s.) The book is full of information, the painstaking accuracy of which is one of its many recommendations. It will rank as a standard work of reference of the highest value, and has already reached its fourth edition.

An exceedingly hearty reception was extended to Rev. and Mrs. E. P. Hammond, by a large company of friends and neighbours, on returning to their home at Vernon, Ct., U.S. Many words of loving welcome were spoken, and much interest was manifested in Mr. Hammond's account of their European experiences.

Italian papers quoted by the correspondent of Evangelical Christendom more than justify the hesitation with which our correspondent, Miss Carruthers, intimated that the evangelical preaching of Padre Agostino, of Montefeltro, should be received. It is now stated that—

> After he became a priest, Padre Agostino began to preach the sermons of Giraud, which he learned by heart. "One of the evangelicals (Ribetti)," says the Civilta Evangelica, "having heard him, immediately recognised the sermon. Determined to unmask the imposture, he published Giraud's sermon side by side with the Padre's. Thus this Colossus with feet of clay was in a moment overthrown, and exposed to the ridicule and contempt of the public. The course began in a way worthy of a consummate Jesuit. His arguments were most interesting at the first, and purely evangelical; having thus allured the public with his sugared pill, he began to preach purgatory and confession, and said that we could not draw near to God save through the intercession of the Virgin, and added, that the evangelicals were cruel, because they wished to do away with the worship of Mary," &c.

The "burning question" of the hour is the proper way of extinguishing the flame of paraffin and other lamps containing mineral oil. An explosion at Bournemouth, caused by blowing down the lamp glass, has caused the death of a mother and severely injured her husband. These mineral oils are now in very common use, and great care should be exercised to prevent such unhappy accidents. Voluminous correspondence in the daily papers indicates that safety may be assured by lowering the flame, and either blowing sharply, not down the glass, but across the top, or by placing a cap on the glass so as to stop the flow of air.

One correspondent cautions people against using benzolene, which is much more inflammable than kerozene. Human life is too precious a thing to be wasted through the neglect of a few simple precautions; workers among the poor should instruct them on these points.

Miss Von Finkelstein is fully engaged up till the end of March next, by the Sunday-school Union and the British Society for the Propagation of the Gospel among the Jews, for her interesting and instructive lectures on life in the Holy Land, and among the Bedouin desert tribes. She has received many applications for lectures, with which she is unable to comply. We are glad, however, to inform our readers that her brother, Mr. Peter M. Von Finkelstein, who is a thoroughly competent lecturer on the same topics, is willing to undertake any engagements which his sister cannot fulfil for want of time. He may be addressed at 4, Bedford-place, London, W.C.

"W. P." is very anxious that Mr. and Mrs. Grattan Guinness's valuable book, "Light for the Last Days," should be brought within the reach of those who cannot afford its price. Here is a good opportunity for some benevolent friends to establish a fund by which a few hundreds or thousands might be provided for those to whom a twelve shilling book is unattainable.

"M. C. M." wishes THE CHRISTIAN were more prominently exhibited on railway bookstalls. If our friends when they travel would ask for it, their purchase of an extra copy would encourage the stall-keepers to order it, as of course they give prominence to what is in demand.

Our correspondent adds that "Christians often buy shilling novels to read in the train, quite forgetting that that effectually shuts their mouths from speaking for Jesus to fellow-passengers. 'Whose I am, and Whom I serve,' ought to be as visible there as everywhere else—even when the luggage is lost!"

A correspondent at the Antipodes refers to the long-debated question of a London daily paper worked on purely Christian lines. He quotes the Melbourne Daily Telegraph as an example of what might be done. This paper was purchased by a syndicate of gentlemen with this object, at a cost of over £20,000. It is now advocating Bible teaching in State schools, and kindred objects, in opposition to the other Melbourne dailies.

We are learning, day by day, the value of the Press in doing battle with the special evils of the time. The service rendered last year by The Pall Mall Gazette is now generally recognised, and will long be had in grateful remembrance. Several journals on the other side of the Atlantic have lately been following suit, though on a smaller scale. The Springfield (Mass.) Republican, one of the best conducted and most high-toned provincial papers in the United States, has recently entered on a crusade against the numerous sham workmen's clubs in that city. These so-called clubs, a list of which our contemporary published, are simply devices for escaping the restrictions on the liquor traffic, and are forcibly described as "Guzzling Camps." We wish The Republican all success in its valiant fight for law and good morals.

The Montreal Witness, another earnest advocate of social purity and sobriety, is exposing the gambling hells that are apparently flourishing in that city, to the ruin of many of its young men. A Witness representative has interviewed a number of Montreal ministers; these, with one consent, applaud the action of the journal, and admit the prevalence of the evil. Several of them charge the police authorities with complicity; and all earnestly call for more stringent legal provisions in dealing with lotteries and other schemes that foster the gambling propensity. If our pulpits generally would back up the efforts of the Press to remedy social abuses, success would be more speedy and more complete.

Some friends deeply interested in world-wide evangelisation have drawn our attention to the comparative dearth of good missionary hymns. They, and many others, would rejoice if the Lord should lay it as a burden on the hearts of our Christian songsters and songstresses to write some hymns that might be as Macedonian trumpet-calls to the Church. A few rousing and musical poems suited for popular use, setting forth the needs of the heathen nations and the glories of the Gospel, would be an unspeakable boon to the cause of missions. We would gladly receive and publish any such hymns.

With Introduction by Rev. C. H. BLUMHARDT.

PROFESSOR HENRY DRUMMOND, Author of "Natural Law in the Spiritual World," says:—

"I have come to think of Boll, since visiting it, as in many ways one of the most interesting places in Europe—interesting not only for its natural loveliness, its past history, its warm fellowships and cherished memories, but for its noble testimony to Christian faith, and for the problems in the deepest things of life and truth which it leaves for after years to solve." Henry Drummond.

Cloth, bevelled boards, 2s. 6d.

CHRIST LIFTED UP.

Meditation on the Death, Resurrection, and Ascension of Our Lord Jesus Christ.

BY REV. ROBERT GILCHRIST.

"An earnest, practical exhibition of the Gospel under a variety of aspects. Christ lifted up on the cross, and at the Father's right hand, is the grand theme, and affords scope for setting forth a wide range of Gospel teaching. The writer does this in an interesting, while simple style."—British Messenger.

"It is quite refreshing to turn to Mr. Gilchrist's profitable Meditations on the Crucifixion."—Record.

"Old-fashioned divinity presented in a pleasing form. May its readers be many."—Sword and Trowel.

HOLIDAYS OVER—WORK RESUMED.

WITH the close of the holiday season we are full of hope that the change has braced us up, and invigorated us for another year's work. Very likely we, for a time, may feel "fit for anything," but the strain of every-day cares and the influences of daily surroundings gradually induce a return of the old tired feelings, proving that sea breezes and change of scene were only temporarily helpful. The resumption of ordinary duties makes us aware that it was more the effect of external influences than any radical invigoration which buoyed us up, and we find that old weaknesses were only in abeyance for a time. Invalids, too, who, in the earlier part of the year longed for the annual change, are now in many instances cast down because they realise that their recuperative forces have not been strengthened to an extent which would enable them to resist the influences of the coming trying season. With these facts before us, therefore, we do not err in saying that the close of the holiday season brings to many disappointed hope.

Now, lest we be charged with looking on the gloomy side of affairs, we hasten to offer comfort to those who have been thus disappointed in their expectations of benefit from change of air and scene. While there are many who fail to obtain restoration because their term of rest is insufficient, there are more who are not likely to be restored by this means, because they are continually overtaxing the brain, or in other ways subjecting the system to a strain which the recuperative forces are totally inadequate to sustain. In such cases the only help consists in the abiding presence of a source of energy which must have a twofold action: it must coalesce with, or assist the recuperative forces, and at the same time repair or correct those deficiencies caused by the over-strain to which in an unassisted state they had previously been subjected.

Hygienic and scientific investigations have ever been directed to the discovery and perfection of some means whereby vigour may remain unimpaired under excessive brain-pressure, and amid unfavourable surroundings. The question naturally arises, What are the conditions most favourable to the maintenance of a fair average of health and strength? And fortunately it admits of a solution in the discovery of the affinity of Magnetism to life itself. Investigation has thus been successful, and the application of the discovery has been fraught with the happiest results.

It is to be feared that some regard with disfavour our opinions on the subject of Odo-Magnetism, because we may appear to overstep the mark in claiming for a remedial agent kinship with human life; but, nevertheless, the force exists, and owes its very existence to the Source of human life, and is as mysterious as life. We know not by what means these two subtle incomprehensibles are affiliated, but it is proven beyond all dispute that they do amalgamate, with untold blessing to mankind; and we rejoice that Magnetism, in common with many other of the Creator's beneficent provisions, has been brought to light and knowledge. In claiming for Magnetism a place among occult influences second only to life itself, we do not exceed our privileges, but only seek to place it in its true position, and thankfully avail ourselves of one of the grandest, yet simplest, methods of restoring health to suffering mankind.

It will be regarded as a pleasure by Mr. B. C. Garratt to do anything to extend the knowledge of this subject, and to afford any desired information. His advice may be had gratuitously, by personal application or by letter, and those whose sufferings have become chronic through the failure of ordinary remedies are, if possible, more especially welcome to his attention. A thoughtfully candid opinion may always be anticipated, with the fullest consideration of all necessities and varying features of the case submitted.—B. LIGHT FOR THE LAST DAYS. A Study Historic and Prophetic. By Mr. and Mrs. H. GRATTAN GUINNESS. Price 12s., with Two Coloured Diagrams.

This work demonstrates the point now reached in the Divine programme of universal history, and considers the character of the coming kingdom as well as the order of events which will, according to Scripture, introduce it. The book indicates many wonderful and suggestive relations between Bible statements and familiar facts.

"This is another deeply interesting book from the united pens of Mr. and Mrs. Guinness, whose former work, 'The Approaching End of the Age,' has already, in its eighth year, reached a tenth edition."—Christian.

HELP ON THE WAY. By the Rev. JOHN S. SHEILDS, D.D.

The AUTHOR says:—"The aim of this work is a practical one, my object being to offer some help to wayfaring men. It is a humble effort to help those who, walking in the way of life, have not seen very deeply into spiritual things. I have endeavoured in a simple way to treat of some confusions of 'things that differ' and errors of interpretation which I have found to be actually existent."

In his commentary on Zechariah, Dr. Pusey said: "In the dreadful Irish famine of 1847 the absence of the children from the streets of Galway was one of its dreariest features. In the dreary back streets and alleys of London the irrepressible joyousness of children is one of the bright sunbeams of that great Babylon amid the oppressiveness of the anxious, hard, thoughtless, careworn, eager, sensual, worldly, frivolous, vain, stolid, sottish, cunning faces which traverse it. God sanctions, by his Word here (Zech. viii. 5), our joy in the joyousness of children, that He too, taketh pleasure in it, He, the Father of all. It is precisely their laughing, the fulness of her streets of these merry creations of his hands, that He speaks of with complacency."

A startling and deplorable statement has been made by M. Auguste Vacquerie, in some published calculations concerning French criminal statistics:—

> During the last year for which statistics are available there were 7572 suicides committed in France, and over a sixth of them within the Department of the Seine; 5964 were men and 1608 women, and the half of the men were unmarried. Hanging is the favourite mode adopted, 3303 employing it. Drowning was selected by 2059, and 906 preferred the revolver. Over 200 threw themselves from windows, and only 149 took to poisoning. The principal causes assigned, after those of mental and physical weakness, are debauchery, chagrin, and misery.

What a depth of meaning there is in the words, "Without God and without hope."

In the Monthly Notes of the London Missionary Society, the following affecting passage occurs in a communication from Travancore:—

> Many of the villages in the central and southern parts of the district connected with Quilon have never heard of the love of the Saviour of the world; others have heard something and are begging for Christian teachers. Had we the means, our work could be more than doubled. One case is at Paripalli, where four public roads meet. Our native pastor and Rev. C. Solomon, of Nagercoil, met hundreds of the poor people returning from a heathen festival, who are willing to leave their idols and learn of Jesus, but we have not the means to send a teacher. From Quilon to Ungel by the public road is thirty-two miles, and we have nothing—no out-station—the whole way between.

Surely the native church in Travancore, or we in England, cannot be indifferent to the new sight of a people willing to get out of the power of darkness, and who have none to guide them. Such a fact has its arousing lessons for our nineteenth-century Christianity.

A recent forecast of the Future of France, by Père Hyacinthe, has its lessons for the times. He holds that the immense standing army menaces the life of the Republic, and that such armies offer a temptation to a powerful and ambitious man. He sees pending, through governmental weakness, a terrible Ultramontane reaction, and that an aggressive priesthood is the most dangerous foe with which the Republic has to fight. But are not other counties summoned to watch against these dangers as well as France? Dictatorship and Ultramontanism may come suddenly if nations take not heed.

Dr. G. F. Pentecost, of Brooklyn, with his daughter, sailed from Liverpool for New York by s.s. Alaska, on Saturday last. He goes back to his important pastoral, evangelistic, and literary work, much invigorated, we trust, by his sojourn among the Scottish mountains.

A friend, who has just returned from Paris, thinks the helpers of Miss De Broen, whose work he much commends, would wish to be informed that she is ill, and additionally tried by the need of funds. We hope her health will soon be re-established, and her needs supplied.

In the Dublin Metropolitan Police district last year 13,550 women were convicted summarily for various offences. Only the other day a woman of thirty-three years old was sentenced to imprisonment for the 220th time. In 1885, 103 children under 16 and 6452 just above that age were sent to jail, and 264 were sent to Industrial schools. Commenting upon these painful figures, a Dublin newspaper says:—

> The root of nearly all the evils from which Dublin suffers lies in the fact that the homes of the working classes are demoralised and debased with drink, and that no powerful influence appears disposed to come to the rescue. . . . Drink is the key-stone of the bridge which leads to moral degradation, physical deterioration, and political slavery. . . . Is the vintner still too strong for the Dublin clergyman? Is the tavern still too strong, socially, politically, and financially, for the Church?

In the article from which we have quoted these passages, "Ireland's greatest enemy" is very plainly set down as drink. It is almost beyond dispute that in the whole of Europe there is not a city so debased and degraded by intemperance as Dublin. The consumers of the drink fill the prisons, lunatic asylums, and workhouses with which the Irish Metropolis abounds; and their children fill the gutters. The makers of the drink are building churches, and hiding themselves and their work behind titles. We rejoice that at length the newspapers are beginning to speak out and to help those who, in the name of Christ, have been unselfishly labouring to stem the torrent of vice and misery.

A very interesting paper in the last number of The Presbyterian Review throws some light upon the working of Romanism in Canada. Professor McVicar ably shows how the Protestant population in the Quebec province is being gradually eliminated. The Romanists are purchasing their estates. As the educational institutions are under the control of the priests, the Bible is a prohibited book, and the priests actually burn all the impressions they can seize. Intolerance is rampant, as it ever is where Rome has any power. The outlook altogether is anything but hopeful. Yet there are those in our midst who credit Rome with all sorts of loving intentions, and who fail to see that she is essentially cruel.

The Record's inquiry into the mental and spiritual attainments of the recently ordained deacons in England is of deep interest to all who desire to see the sinning and suffering brought to the Saviour. All such will be saddened by the information that, whilst the new clergy are men of a good range of general information, their knowledge of theology, in most cases, is confined to the tenets relating to the Church of England and the Sacraments, and there has been "far too little study of the Bible." It is saddening to read references to "the terribly low ebb to which the study of Scripture has sunk," and to "the almost incredible ignorance of Scripture which is familiar to theological examiners in the University."

Large public meetings have been held in Lima and Callao, and petitions adopted praying the Government of Peru to expel the Jesuits from that country. The fact needs no comment.

God's promise, "I will bless thee and thou shalt be a blessing," has been taken to heart in a very practical manner by the native Christians of Madagascar, who during the past ten years have contributed no less than £800,000 for the spread of the Gospel.

Along with much that is discouraging there is great room for thankfulness with regard to missionary work in India and the East. In the Madras Presidency, during the last ten years, an increase has been reported of nearly 200,000 in the number of the native Christians. In Japan the growth has been from one hundred and fifty to ten thousand; there being to-day 190 churches, 8000 communicants, and 250 native preachers. Twenty-seven American women are working in Japan with very satisfactory results, and altogether the Gospel certainly is making remarkable headway.

At the rate of progress hitherto maintained, however, one hundred and eight years must pass, it has been estimated, before the huge Empire of India is thoroughly evangelised; there is, therefore, need for renewed and more vigorous effort in missionary work, and in the support of missions. Perhaps, if each time we prayed for labourers to be sent forth into the harvest, we made some little sacrifice to assist in maintaining them, the spread of the Redeemer's kingdom would be almost visibly hastened.

The well-known Baptist Noel once preached a sermon in words of one and two syllables, and the result showed satisfactorily that the story of Divine love can be told without the use of conventional language. There are many preachers who are surprised at their want of success in winning souls, who might find a great change if they would only adopt the Bishop of Ripon's suggestion to re-write their sermons, and strike out every big word, and translate every theological phrase into clear and simple language. The secret of successful preaching, however, lies to a great extent in not taking the Bible at second-hand.

Last Monday, at the noon prayer-meeting, Aldersgate-street, sixty little girls from Dr. Barnardo's Homes were commended to God in prayer, on the eve of leaving for Canada. Dr. Barnardo stated that this party, the fourth and last for the present year, would bring up the number of children emigrated from the Homes to a grand total of 2354; 622 were the result of the present year's efforts alone. With the deepest thankfulness he stated that not one girl of the many sent out to Canada had lost her character for respectability. Such a result is not likely to have been attained had these little ones been placed out in England. The party sail from Liverpool to-day (Thursday) in the Parisian, under efficient care.

LIVERPOOL CONFERENCE.—The ninth annual Liverpool Christian Convention is to be held in Hope Hall, on October 7 and 8. It is arranged this year to take the form of a united missionary gathering on a large scale. Representatives of various denominations, and from all parts of the mission field will attend the Convention and give information, as well as seek to stir up the hearts of Liverpool Christians in the great cause of the evangelisation of the world.

STARTING OUT IN CANADA.

By Miss ANNIE MACPHERSON.

LIFE'S turning-points have been rapidly passing before us, for the sixty young lives who have left Stratford during the past week for their new homes. Our hearts have been much touched by the tender and often tear-filled eyes that have come and gazed upon our little ones to make their choice. An aged farmer and his married daughter could not decide upon either of the three boys being examined, when he said, "You help us." The old man's stick fell from his hand. The only Irish laddie left, in a moment, stooped and picked it up. "There," said I, "you have one quick as thought to help you as a little son." "God bless the lad; he will have a good home with us," replied the old farmer.

We believe that a higher Power has operated upon these uncared for destitutes, making them willing-hearted to go forth and endeavour to be obedient. Most gratefully did these young hearts pour forth their gratitude, as each in turn drove off amid the waving of the handkerchiefs of our home-staff.

To see our little pets fondled by other hands cheers us in such seasons. We rejoice that they will still be loved. And we look forward to the time when we shall see them where partings will be no more.

Dr. A. comes to tell us how well his two former boys (the first received fifteen years ago) had grown up, and were now fine men in the true sense of the word. We allowed him to take a well-educated youth who had proved unsuitable for farming, but would do well with him. This doctor drove twenty-one miles, occupying a whole day, to get, as he hoped, as good a boy as the two whom he had trained and helped.

In many Canadian families where the children are few, our little ones are chosen for companionship, and our hearts rejoice to see them so entirely provided for.

Two railway guards call upon us, commissioned to see if we had any little ones for adoption. These applications were declined, being contrary to our rules. We correspond with those who receive our children, and require ministers' and magistrates' recommendations. An hotel-keeper's application has also been declined. We have the sympathy and confidence of the people in every direction, who are ready to aid us in selecting suitable homes. If any mistakes are made through lack of knowledge or judgment, our nephew, Mr. William Merry, removes the children, or makes re-arrangements. How happily placed is the little girl of nine years of age who had been beaten in every inch of her body by a brutal father, who is still serving his time in prison for his cruelty.

Everything is so bright and winsome here, that the past seems already blotted out. What a privileged work it is to turn tears into laughter, and weaklings into strengthened, useful beings, each with a precious soul.

A husband and wife without children apply to us. We find they are earnest Christians, and when asked why they want a little one, reply, "The house is so lonesome without a child's voice." The kind-hearted man added, "We feel very tenderly for these poor little lambs brought from so far to us." We could not doubt but that the Lord had answered our prayers in thus burdening their hearts for our little ones.

Another kind man ventured to ask, very tremblingly, where the little girl he had chosen had been found, for he felt the responsibility of incorporating a stranger amongst his own children, remarking, "She will, of course, go to school all the time with my own." He was cheered and encouraged by our relating to him experiences in our own life's history, and most of all by the words of Scripture, to "trust, and not be afraid." Tears and humility of spirit in this man were most delightful to see.

Our nephew is about to leave us for a five weeks' tour, hoping to see several hundreds of our children in their farm-house homes. For him and for ourselves we ask your continued prayers. Our constant experience is that no labour is lost. No extra effort, nor a bit of patient toil, for these we undertake to help, if done unto the Lord, will be forgotten.

Letters just received from two of the boys prove the benefit received even now. In England the prospect of both these boys (now eighteen years of age) was not very bright. Now they are where their gifts will be developed and valued.

Labour is honourable, and colonial life has rest in it, and if the blessing of the Lord is with those who are brought to Canada, their honest labour will add to self-dignity and independence. Some young men are coming out with ideas of getting a dog and a gun for sport. Such theories are soon exploded. It is evident that they have no idea of steady work. Such, we hear, are going about borrowing money; when they return to England they will be ready, not to blame themselves, but to complain of the country.

HOLIDAY WORK.

IN a recent letter General Noble, of Dublin, says:—We have just returned from the Engadine and from Italy. At St. Moritz we had our regular Bible-readings about three times a week, and they increased steadily in numbers till from five we reached fourteen persons. We had an excellent pastor in Dr. Gordon Gray, Presbyterian chaplain, of Rome. At Beattenberg we had also Bible-readings, and there we met Mr. Denham Smith and his family, and had an exceedingly profitable and pleasant time with them.

Both in the Engadine and in Italy we were able to give away tracts, leaflets, and portions of the Gospels, and nowhere did we meet with a refusal to accept; generally people thanked us most heartily for them, and twice we were asked to accept fruit and milk in return.

ROMISH MISSIONS IN CHINA.

SIR RUTHERFORD ALCOCK, in a long and interesting letter to The Times of Monday week, explains the important question which is now agitating France, China, and the Vatican. He shows that the Chinese hatred of Christian missions and Christian missionaries is due to the fact that for centuries the Roman Catholic missionaries in China have been accustomed to rely upon the political power of France, instead of putting their trust in the Spirit of God. They have persistently interfered with Chinese politics, and have used the armies and fleets of France to extort sites for churches, land, and various privileges, by brute force from the Chinese Government. Under these circumstances the Chinese naturally hate all Christian missionaries. We cannot expect them to distinguish between Roman Catholic and Protestant missionaries, especially since English policy in China has been as wicked as the policy of France. It is true that we have not interfered in China on professedly religious grounds. Our motive has been obviously the greed of unscrupulous merchants. But there is nothing more nefarious in modern history than our opium wars with China.—Methodist Times.

THE ARTILLERY LANE MISSION carries on a difficult work amongst the lodging-houses in the neighbourhood, of which twelve are under visitation, each accommodating from fifty to 200 persons. Of this work, as well as of the Sunday morning breakfasts, it may truly be said that it is sowing seed by the wayside. The report speaks of the hostile attitude assumed by some of the more degraded inmates of the lodging-houses, and in sorrow that more hunger for the "bread of life" is not manifested by the poor outcasts who gather to the Sunday morning breakfasts. Yet it is, indeed, a necessary and blessed work, and, as we well know, not without fruit even now; there will be yet more by and by. The most degraded, helpless, and poverty-stricken are reached, and, besides some comfort for their poor starved bodies, have the Gospel preached unto them. Bible-readings, and Gospel services, Sunday-school, and mothers' meetings, are carried on in connection with the Mission, and in the report acknowledgment is made of much help rendered by some of the missionary students from Harley House, Bow. The superintendent and treasurer is Mrs. S. Finn, 14, Talbot-place, St. Ann's-road, Stamford-hill.

THE HOME OF INDUSTRY.

THE monthly meeting for workers was held on September 15. A good number of friends gathered, and after a social tea the more serious business of the evening began. Mr. R. C. MORGAN presided, and after singing the well-known hymn, "At even, ere the sun was set," Mr. George Holland led the meeting in prayer, earnestly praying for Lady Hobart, who is dangerously ill.

After some of the friends had engaged in prayer, Miss READE gave an account of her mission work in South Arcot. She said the name Highway and Hedges Mission was adopted because the words indicated the work. By "highway" she wished to designate the open-air work, and by "hedges" particularly to describe the work in the Mahometan villages, which are surrounded by hedges as a protection to the women. The Mission premises are on the highway to Madras, and they do not have to go beyond the gates to get an audience. At the entrance there is an open Bible exhibited, so that passers-by may read, and, lately, two heathen who had been reading called at the cottage and inquired respecting what they had read. Open-air services are held in all the villages for some miles round, and God has given great encouragement. In some places the people are very ready to hear, and crowd round listening attentively. At others, they are argumentative. At one such village she could with difficulty get a hearing, but now the attention is so great that she had preached for two hours to a mixed crowd of Mahometans and Hindus, and the people have hardly moved. After preaching there once, a man came to her, seeking salvation. He had tried four ways of salvation, but was not satisfied. The last was that taught by a peculiar sect, the leader of which, a few years ago, issued a code of morals like the Mosaic law, except the sacrifices. The great stumbling-block is the eating of animal food, the killing of which is by some Hindus termed murder.

The chief branch of the work is itineration in the villages. To give an idea of the need for workers, she said that she took tours sixty miles from Cuddalore, and for the whole distance the road is lined with Mahometan and Hindu towns and villages, and not a single mission station, only her voice and that of the native helpers to tell the people of Christ. The people are longing to hear the message, Last year she was sitting in the verandah, when some Hindus saw her, and asked when she was coming to their village.

The women are ready to hear, but the chief hindrance is the persecution to which those who would embrace Christianity are subjected. One young Brahmin, speaking of a young convert, said that if he saw her he would kill her. In another case a young women had received the word, and she had been welcome to the house until the Brahmin came in while she was speaking; after that the house was virtually closed to her.

In the Orphanage there are nine young girls, and one is now with Miss Reade in England. She had reason to believe that they were truly converted, and they are now studying Hindustani, so as to help in the work. Miss Reade then gave some instances of encouraging cases, noting especially one young man, who was baptized as Samuel, and is now preparing for mission work. He had declined to return to his heathen relations, although they used every means to induce him to do so, and invoked the law on their behalf.

After the address a letter was read from Miss Macpherson, who is now in Canada, and another from a missionary in India, portions of which we reproduce elsewhere.

MR. GEORGE MULLER has appeared before Brisbane audiences during this week. He unexpectedly arrived there, and has made his own arrangements with the various churches. His presence is his best sermon. As a living illustration of the power of prayer, he stands prominently before this unbelieving generation.—Australian Christian World, July 30.

ETHICS OF THE SERMON ON THE MOUNT.—1.

There is one great and essential distinction between the ethics which have their origin in the teaching of Jesus Christ, and those which are derived from the philosophies of men, however wise or good.

This remark applies with equal force to the moral teachings of great men like Confucius, Socrates, and others, or to the maxims of expediency—truthful, and often righteous in themselves—which have grown out of the relations between man and man, and the necessity which those relations reveal for a modus vivendi, by which the peace and order of human life may be maintained.

The distinction between such teachings and the teachings of the Christ is in this, that while human philosophies deal only with the relations between one man, or set of men, and another, Christ always lays bare first the relation between man and God, and bases upon it some great law or precept for the guidance of human conduct.

This feature is exhibited with luminous distinctness in the Sermon on the Mount. In three notable instances, among many, which occur in that marvellous compendium of Divine truth and wisdom, illustrations of it are furnished, to which attention cannot be directed without our estimation of the value of our Lord's teachings becoming deepened and extended. One instance refers to prevalent human anxieties. A second to the privilege and advantages of prayer. A third points to the future results of human conduct, especially of the reception which is given in this life to the teachings of the Christ as the great Messenger of God.

In this article a few reflections will be offered on the passage which deals with earthly cares and anxieties. In each case the use which the Lord makes of the adverb of sequence, therefore, is remarkable from the fact that in his discourse on the Mount, if anywhere, the methods of the trained logician are never resorted to by Him.

In Matt. vi. 24, the Saviour makes this authoritative declaration: "Ye cannot serve God and Mammon." Here, in a sentence, is laid bare a great fact in the relations between the government of God and a vast range of human conduct. The practical teaching deduced from it by the Christ is addressed to his disciples.

"Ye cannot serve God and Mammon." Mammon is the Syriac name for the Greek Plutus, the god of wealth. It is significant that in the heathen mythologies this god is represented as blind, on account of the undiscriminating and unequal distribution which he makes of his resources; lame, because of the slow and tedious rate at which they are accumulated; and as having wings, to indicate the swift velocity with which they fly away when men have gained them. Among the Hebrews, however, and so in the teachings of our Lord, the name was only the symbol of earthly riches. The Saviour's declaration is, "Ye cannot serve God, my Father, and this god together."

"Serve," equivalent to "love, admire, obey." The principle of the teaching is simple; it prevails through all life. That which is loved absorbs the thought, directs the action, and occasions the expenditure of the energies of life. It cannot be otherwise, whether it be for this god or that; and in the relation which subsists between the "God of our Lord Jesus Christ," and Christ's disciples, only one love is allowed, because only one can be true, and only one can give efficacy and energy to the actions of life. "Therefore I say unto you, be not anxious for your life."

Here, then, is a law—one which men of the world will never cease to say it is impossible to obey; indeed they treat it as an absurdity. It is often pointed to as an illustration of the impracticability of living a religious life, especially in the spheres of business.

To those who sit at the feet of Jesus, and learn of Him, however, this law brings a double revelation.

First, it shows that Mammon-worship, as all idolatry, has its roots in the love of self: "your life." The gentiles of our day are men who have no mind for a life oppressed by inconveniences. To eat, drink, dress, and enjoy, is the object of life, and money makes it practicable. Therefore, have Mammon as your god.

Second, it shows that, for men who come into the kingdom of heaven, the whole of life is provided for.

The reason we are anxious is that we think of ourselves as having two lives, the spiritual life and the bodily life, as we call them. Could we realise the simpler truth that our life has two parts, the spiritual and the bodily—the one subordinate and temporary, the other to go on eternally—our solicitudes would take their proper order. The spirit distended with the larger care of the kingdom of God, and the pursuit of his righteousness, would see, in the light of the Redeemer's law, that the things which separate between us and God, and make the love of Him impossible, must have no place in the life of Christ's disciples; and further, that the solution of life's difficulties is best attained, the closer we come, through Him, into fellowship with the mind of God. FOUNDATION DIGGING v. BUILDING.

Natural things are pleasant figures and types to us of spiritual things.

Observe that builder, digging deep into the ground for a rock or a solid basis on which he may build a lofty, massive structure. He uses powerful tools, and he places them in strong hands. The mattock and pickaxe are driven well into the ground; all loose rubbish is removed, or torrents of rain may some wintry day undermine the foundation of the great building.

Now he begins to build. No longer does he use pickaxe and mattock—his tools are changed; the line and the plummet now appear, rough coarse hands must move away, every stone is laid with care, and strong cementing powers are called for.

THE DIGGER.

That bold evangelist is the digger; he has no regard to man's surface character; he is addressing an unconverted friend or a crowd of unconverted persons; they plead morality, good works, good manners, or the charms of civilisation, but he strikes again and again at natural depravity, and sends the pickaxe of eternal judgment into the falsely polished natural heart; he gives no quarter to moral veneering, and takes every refuge from under their feet, and lays bare before them that mighty Rock, Christ.

They find themselves nowhere—so to speak—before a true evangelist; he removes every cloak, every human device, every excuse, and as they hear him striking the mighty rock, and as they gaze upon it, they feel that they are only dust and their morality, mere rubbish compared with that solid Rock of Truth and Perfection.

THE BUILDER

Observe now, however, the builder,—he is generally, but not always, a different man—his feelings, and his work, do not resemble the evangelist's.

Rough, rude stones appear, which must be built upon the rock carefully and gently. The builder exhibits the shape and formation of the Rock. Quietly and carefully he points out their own deformities, and firmly but lovingly he removes unsightly parts.

The Holy Spirit is the only power he possesses. The Word of God is the Builder's hammer. The new, rough stones yield marvellously to the Holy Ghost and the Word, if the builder be lowly, humble, and well taught in the Scriptures.

EXTREME MEN.

Some of the new stones wish to project beyond the foundation Rock, and show their zeal by insisting upon going much further in some points than Christ went, but it is zeal without knowledge, and the wise builder insists upon Christ's line being the plummet-line.

UNFRUITFUL CHRISTIANS.

Some—yea, the majority—of the new stones wish to keep far within Christ's line, and dread the thought of taking Christ's plummet-line. They argue, they reason against it; some say it is not wise, others that it is too bold, yea, "presuming rather," or unsuitable to the age in which they live; unpopular, and liable to do more harm than good. They reason and argue against the builder and the plummet-line, the laws and rules of the Bible. As the line is discussed, they think it well to find a less-advanced line, and would invent a new creed if they dared, but being true believers their consciences are in favour of the builder, but flesh and carnal mind are contrary to him. They weary and exhaust the builder; these new stones are heavy, rough, and oftentimes very disagreeable; quite as difficult to move as the ugly, moral rubbish which the evangelist dug with the pickaxe; but the builder must use no pickaxe, the stones that stand around him now are stones bought and paid for by the Master—expensive stones, and they must not be broken up. The Spirit's power is needed, and this with much prayer; a superabundance of love and forbearance will work wonders and miracles upon the new stones; they are his own children, the builder is only their brother, and he must appeal to the Holy Ghost daily and hourly.

THE BUILDER'S FAILURES.

If he is not forbearing, the builder will grieve the Spirit; if he does not use the true cement of love, the builder will lose his labour; if he exercises lordship over his younger brethren he will grieve the Spirit; if he pretends to have knowledge that he does not possess he will grieve the Spirit; if he pretends to be a guide in deep Scriptures that he has not really studied he will grieve the Spirit; if he shuns to declare the whole counsel of God he will grieve the Spirit. If he fails to make his work interesting in the eyes of the new converts, he probably lacks gifts, but the lacking may be in his mode rather than in the matter he teaches; his manner may not be gracious, his brotherly love may not seem to be what it should be, or his discourses may lack figures and illustrations. The Bible is full of figures and illustrations, and appeals, not only to the judgment, but to the sense and imagination, and thus the single faculty of judgment is not overstrained and memory is assisted.

The builder's work is greatly needed now—loving, able teachers, flowing with the oil of grace, and able to impart that oil liberally, and yet able to give the whole counsel of God frankly and fully. Gordon Forlong.

DR. SOMERVILLE has been making an evangelistic tour in the Highlands. During the series of meetings in the Hebrides he addressed thirty-five meetings in twenty-eight days. He is accompanied by his son, Rev. J. E. Somerville, and has been received cordially everywhere. The audiences have been large, frequently 300, which, considering the sparseness of the population, is very good. The people have travelled miles to hear the venerable moderator of the Free Church. Much good is being done, and people's attention turned to the bright side of Christianity.

INTERNATIONAL BIBLE READING ASSOCIATION.—This Society was inaugurated by the Sunday-school Union as an auxiliary to the international series of Sunday-school lessons. The daily readings are selected topically, and have reference to the lesson of the following Sunday afternoon. This year the Union numbers over 100,000 members, and the Sunday-school Union hope to increase its usefulness in the coming year. In schools where the international lessons are adopted, a branch would be found helpful to teachers and scholars. A monthly letter is issued for the members. The Union has met with much approval in the colonies, and Mr. Waters, the hon. secretary, has received several letters from colonial schools testifying to the good effect. Further particulars as to starting branches may be obtained from Mr. Waters, Sunday-school Union, 56, Old Bailey, E.C.

Letters to the Editor.

FRIENDS' SCHOOLS, BIRMINGHAM.

SIR,—Referring to the adult schools in Birmingham, your correspondent H. F. asks the question: "Where in the world will you find scores of gentlemen who are willing to leave their homes on Sunday morning between six and seven o'clock, and open their schools at the very early hour of 7.30?" If your correspondent had read the thirty-ninth annual report of the Frieads' First Day School Association, he would have found that there are 34,000 scholars in the Friends' Sunday-schools throughout the kingdom, of whom 21,000 are adults. He would also have found that in most of the great centres of industry, as well as in smaller towns and villages, these adult schools are engaged in bringing home to many the saving truths of the Gospel, who never previously attended a place of worship.

There are thousands of men thus taught in Sheffield, Hull, Bradford, and Leeds; while many hundreds are to be found in such places as Norwich, York, Darlington, Bristol, Ipswich, Colchester, Reading, Luton, Hitchin, and Middlesbro'. Indeed, from Newcastle in the North, to Plymouth and Falmouth in the far West, wherever any number of Friends reside, these schools are to be found in active operation. In London, too, at Bunhill Fields, in Spitalfields, in Bethnal-green (where a new hall has just been erected), at Ratcliff, and on a smaller scale in Westminster and Peckham, similar work is being carried on with happy results. One of these is the establishment of a new meeting of the Society of Friends at Bunhill Fields, attended by many devout worshippers, chiefly from the working classes. In most places, too, the membership in the Society has increased, as the result of this work.

Your correspondent asks, "why the scholars don't get set to work." I answer, that as they receive spiritual good they most usefully and successfully set themselves to work. Not only have teachers from Birmingham travelled among their fellow-members and those of other denominations, throughout the length and breadth of the land, for the last thirty years in the advocacy of these schools, and of mission-work generally, but not a few converted scholars have been similarly engaged in places distant from home. In most places, too, meetings for divine worship have grown out of the school work, attended bye arnest and serious congregations. At Birmingham alone, twelve such meetings are held every Sunday evening in the town and suburbs.

From my intimate knowledge of the Birmingham schools, I am able to state that many of the scholars do go "into the numerous highways of Birmingham," holding open-air meetings, distributing tracts, visiting the sick, canvassing for new scholars, and in many other ways manifesting obedience to the Divine command, and, by the force of example, using the best sort of "compulsion" in bringing others under the sound of the Gospel.

Another result in Birmingham, as in some other places, of the action of the Friends' adult schools has been the extensive adoption of the "early morning" system by most other religious denominations in the town and district. More than twenty years ago a Severn-street teacher was invited by an eminent Baptist minister to give some details of adult Sunday-schools to the young men of his congregation; the result has been that schools and branches have grown out of that visit numbering over a thousand members. A large proportion, too, of the thirty or more Board Schools of the town are now occupied on Sunday by the Friends and other denominations for adult-school purposes, and for religious services in connection therewith.

Your correspondent complains that the voice of the Birmingham Friends is not louder in relation to the work to be done by these schools. The above facts will, perhaps, show that their voice has had some happy results. I would, however, in common with my fellow-teachers, that the voice were louder, when it is a voice directed by the Divine Spirit. But I am thankful to be able to speak confidently, from an intimate knowledge of my fellow-teachers for more than thirty years, that their aim has not been notoriety, or the desire to be "seen of men," but with calm, unobtrusive zeal, steadily by prayer, fully to carry on the work allotted to them; a work which, notwithstanding many errors and shortcomings, has been abundantly blessed to the salvation of souls, and to a great improvement in the morals and manners of the population of this great town.—Yours respectfully,

Birmingham. WILLIAM WHITE.

WHY HAS GOD RAISED UP THE Y.M.C.A.?

SIR,—Is it not remarkable that the only answer that can be given to this question was given by its founder, Mr. George Williams, at the Bristol Conference last week? He said, "I believe that the Lord has raised up the 3000 Associations to train and supply men to evangelise the world." (See last CHRISTIAN, p. 19.)

Is there not here a world-wide organisation, capable of supplying thousands of men, for the occupation of new spheres, in order that the Gospel may be preached as a witness to the world? (See THE CHRISTIAN, Sept. 9, p. 18: "Plan to Evangelise the World."

Doubtless this is THE WORK of the Church, and of the Y.M.C.A. as part of it.

How many thousands might not be led to go out immediately, if simultaneous meetings were held at every Association, so that each member might find out for himself the will of the Lord concerning him in this great cause.—Yours faithfully, J. M.

FEMALE EMIGRATION TO AUSTRALIA.

DEAR SIR,—In reply to a recent suggestion in the Notes and Comments of your valuable paper, I wish to state that domestic servants are in great demand in Victoria. Unlike New South Wales, Victoria has discontinued immigration, and the young colonials, as a rule, do not care for domestic service, preferring the freedom which factory work allows. All things considered, the temptations are not greater than in England. The Y.W.C.A. and the Girls' Friendly Society are in active operation. The secretaries of the Melbourne Y.W.C.A. are most devoted workers, and give every possible help and information to young women arriving from England. The Association is doing a splendid work at the Assembly Hall, Collins-street.

As a former associate of the G.F.S. in Victoria, I can say there are numerous and well-worked branches in Melbourne, and all the principal towns and country districts of the colony.

There is also the Melbourne Home and Registry for Governesses and Servants, under the superintendence of a Christian lady. The advice given by the Committee of the Sydney Y.W.C.A. applies equally to girls going out to Melbourne.

Perhaps a word as to wages and work may be useful. General servants receive £24 and cooks £40 per annum; wages vary according to capacity. A knowledge of dairy and laundry work is frequently necessary for up-country servants; and those who are going to a new country for manual work must be willing to rough it a little, and dispense with a few of the comforts of the old land. Thorough English servants would find good situations in Victoria, and any respectable girl going out under the auspices of the Y.W.C.A. or G.F.S., would be sure of a kind welcome in Victoria.—Yours faithfully, OLIVE.

SIR,—The enclosed extract from The Sydney Mail of July 17 may be of use to show the tone of he female labour market. The Girls' Friendly Society and the Y.W.C.A. serve in a limited way as protectors to some portion of the emigrants, Other emigrants are nominated by their friends in the Colony, and of course these friends look after their nominees on their arrival. The Governor, Lord Carrington, and Lady Carrington take much interest in emigrants, and in consequence thereof there has been a great improvement in the hiring rooms, which were small and incommodious.

If the arrangements are unscientific at the port of arrival, what can be said about the training the emigrants have received in this country to prepare them to encounter the trials and difficulties (either of an adverse or opposite kind) of a new life in a new country!

I know that, in spite of the world-spread depression in commerce, that Lord Carrington, addressing male immigrants, whilst recommending them to take the work that offered without waiting to pick and choose, assured them that able and willing hands would not want for work.

There are many Colonists who are blind monopolists, and would restrict immigration or stop it altogether. A. COLONIST.

St. Leonards-on-Sea.

The paragraph describes the hiring of single girls which took place at the depôt, Sydney. There were forty-nine girls, and "the proceedings were quiet and orderly, the arrangements at the depôt being improved by the addition of several rooms, and the hustling and huddling which used to mark hiring day have disappeared. The girls speak in terms of praise of their reception in the colony, and, contrasting the depôt here with that at Plymouth, they describe the latter as a perfect 'horror.'"

YOUNG MEN IN MANITOBA.

SIR,—In THE CHRISTIAN of the 9th inst. I read these words: "Minnesota saloons are filling her State prisons so rapidly that the State is about to build a new one." Prevention is better than cure, and I therefore venture to send you an extract from a letter I have just received from the Rev. Hugh Tudor, Episcopalian clergyman at Medicine Hat, N.W. Canada. I do not for a moment mean to imply that Medicine Hat is in any respects like unto what you say is the sad state of affairs in Minnesota; quite the contrary. What Mr. Tudor asks for, however, may be called "prevention;" and, knowing as I do, the need to have a counter-attraction to saloons, I ask you to be kind enough to allow this letter and the extract to be published in your columns, and then leave both in the hands of God. If Messrs. Morgan & Scott will kindly consent to receive donations for the Medicine Hat Room. I shall be most thankful, and, in order to start the list, I will gladly give £5.

Yours faithfully, HENRY A. GREIG.

The Eaves, Belvedere, Kent.

[EXTRACT.]

"There is a large number of young men residing at Medicine Hat, mostly employed by the Canadian Pacific Railway; nice, respectable fellows, whom I should like to benefit. They have no place to go to either in the day or evening, except bars at hotels or saloons, neither of which are ennobling. I am very anxious to provide some sort of recreation-room for them, and the Bishop thinks the need very great, If I could possibly get £100 I could build a place which would be divided into a reading-room and one for general amusement, with games, conversation, &c. We can have newspapers, and by degrees a library, and tea and coffee, and once a week a debate or discussion. A committee shall be formed from and by the members, and I will act as president. You know the needs and temptations of young men, and, left to themselves, as these are, during our long winter, I am most anxious to get hold of them. As you know, there is absolutely no comfort in their lodgings and shanties. Can you help me?"

ST. GILES' CHRISTIAN MISSION.

SIR,—Much has been said in the daily papers with reference to the case of Ellen Baker, aged 22, the wife of James Baker, who was executed (with two others) for murder and burglary at Netherby Hall, near Carlisle, at the age of 24. His last words to her on the scaffold, previous to execution, were, "Nelly, keep straight." No doubt, poor girl, she tried, for a time; but she soon experienced the tender mercies of the wicked. One of her companions enticed her, in her poverty, into shoplifting, for which she was sentenced to six weeks' imprisonment. It pleased the Home Secretary to release her from Millbank to my care, on the intercession of Mr. Monro, Assistant Commissioner of Police, and Mr. C. B. Stuart Wortley, M.P., who has been exceedingly kind in rendering every assistance for the young woman's future welfare. She is now on her way to a new country, and we trust, by God's help, she will lead a new life.—Yours very faithfully,

Brooke-street, Holborn. WM. WHEATLEY.

[The foregoing letter comes, with timely emphasis, as a postscript to our note of last week respecting Mr. Wheatley's noble Samaritan work among London criminals. We observe, in a police-court report last week, that he has, with the sanction of the magistrate, also saved several juvenile offenders from the contaminations of a prison-house, and secured them honest work. No better way can be found of thinning the ranks of our hardened criminals than by heartily supporting the St. Giles' Christian Mission.—ED.]

CIRCULATING LIBRARIES.

SIR,—A wet day, or a little more leisure time than usual—not unfrequent accompaniments of a summer holiday in the country or at the sea-side—generally leads to the inquiry, "Is there a circulating library here?" And as there is usually one to be found, some in out-of-the-way places where one is surprised to see it, the reader who cares for really solid literature is almost invariably disappointed in his search for anything worth reading. Three-volume novels abound, and their well-worn covers denote abundance of readers. But is it not within the range of probability that books of another class would also be welcomed, and would meet with plenty of demand, if only they were to be had?

While resting for a time at a quiet litle seaside resort, the thought has been suggested to me, Could not something be done to improve the character of the literature in our small circulating libraries? and this idea, which I venture to submit to the notice of your readers, has occurred to me:—If all those who care for good reading, and have sought it in vain among the shelves of trashy novels, would make a point of placing upon those shelves some really standard or useful work, would it not be conferring a benefit of really solid value upon visitors and readers who should afterwards visit the library, and be a suitable, and substantial, and inexpensive way of leaving behind some little acknowledgment of happiness enjoyed, or health gained, in some pleasant summer holiday?

Books of travel, biography, natural history, and good fiction, not omitting volumes suitable for Sunday reading, would, I am sure, be a great boon, not only to visitors, but to residents also, and those who have constant access to the library, to say nothing of the servants in the lodging-houses, who will almost invariably open and read, as opportunity permits, any books which may be left lying about.

A Constant Reader.

THE SPIRIT'S WORK.

Dear Sir,—I was glad to see your Dutch friend's comment in The Christian of September 9, on 2 Cor. iii. 17, in connection with its context. I would like to add another to it. The words "from glory to glory" are often taken as though they meant only an inward work progressing in our souls after conversion, whereas the verses preceding show that it is the Spirit's work to lead us now away "from the glory" of Moses, or the old covenant, which, however for a time it might have been glorious, is "done away," and to conduct us on to the surpassing "glory" of Christ in the new covenant, which "remaineth."

Therefore, let all who have received mercy renounce the hidden things, the adulterations of the Word of God, by mixing up the Law and Gospel, and thus destroying the liberty of the Spirit. But let us all have a desire to manifest God's truth.—Yours faithfully in Christ,

G. S. Windham.

Upper Hall, Farnham.

SERIOUS QUESTIONS.

Holiness.—The work goes on, but it does seem as if it would move both faster and grander if there was more of a spirit for united effort, more holiness mass-meetings. As things have been going of late, holiness people get together in mere handfuls—twos and threes—where there should be hundreds. Frequently a meeting is announced for a county, or representing a district, and not half a dozen outside of the locality will be present. It did not use to be so. There is great loss to the cause in this way. There is power, wisdom, suggestiveness, as well as swing and stir, in a massing of holiness forces that does not exist among the same people when grouped in small gatherings. Our people are failing, for some cause, in getting out to meetings as they used to do, and it is to the harming of the spirit and effectiveness of the movement.

Dear Sir,—The above is a cutting from a monthly paper, the organ of a mission we all highly esteem, edited by one whom we all love; and I ask you to consider the phraseology used in it regarding a subject of vital interest to us all. It deals with that "holiness without which no man shall see the Lord." The manner of doing so is open to grave objection. If you will call attention to it, I believe there will be an effort made to correct that which is hurting a good cause.

"Holiness mass meetings" are urged as sources of "power and wisdom," and "twos and threes," "mere handfuls" of people, are condemned as useless for the work," which, it is said, "would move faster and grander" by means of "swing and stir" in great gatherings of "holiness people." These words savour entirely of the flesh, and surely are not according to the Scriptures. By denominating some as "holiness people," others are, by implication, unholy. A return to the simplicity of the Word of God would now be a very blessed step for those who are seeking to lead believers into closer communion with the Lord.

To listen to all sorts of teaching and be carried away nem. con. is the custom of the hour. It is greatly to be desired that we should cultivate discernment, by examination of statements and reference to the Holy Scriptures. The very act of taking time to do this, and waiting for the Holy Spirit to teach to us, ourselves, the truths about which we hear others speak, would strengthen our spiritual understandings, and give weight to our testimony, when we are able to declare our consensus in the teaching that is being offered to the Lord's people.

The immense variety of "views" of spiritual things, and the novelty that is aspired after, in interpretation, and in mode of expression, are all symptoms of falling away from the simplicity and purity of the Word of the living God. We must, sooner or later, return to the plain, direct language of the Bible, and cease to make stock phrases and party watch words. Such things form very subtle bands and chains, by which to restrain Christian unity and godly love.

Those on whose words I have commented do not withhold their names from the public, but rather stand out responsibly to draw believers to their side. It is right that they should avow their opinions; and with the same courage and zeal, those who do not agree with them are bound to bear their witness openly.—I am, dear Sir, yours faithfully,

Susanna Meredith.

SEAMEN ON THE TYNE.

On Whit-Monday, 1885, there was opened on the banks of the Tyne, just opposite the Shipping offices, South Shields, a Missions to Seamen Church and Institute, for the sole use of seamen and their families. It is open all day and every day, and affords shelter to from 100 to 150 seamen, waiting to be hired, who had heretofore no choice between standing all day in the open street, and the adjoining public-houses. Already these latter are heavy losers. The neighbourhood is undergoing an evident change. About a thousand seagoing men (besides wives and families) have taken the total abstinence pledge. The Gospel is reaching the hearts of many.

Upwards of 4000 Bibles and Prayer-books have been bought by seamen at South Shields during the last six years; whilst upwards of 5000 of them have taken the pledge.

That God has owned and blessed the individualising Gospel labours carried on daily at the Seamen's Institute, tangible evidences are not wanting. Some eighty-four officers, seamen, and firemen are acting as volunteer helpers on board ships at sea amongst the crews debarred from the ordinary public means of grace. Many have to endure hardness whilst witnessing a good confession before many witnesses, of various nationalities, creeds, and languages in the forecastles. Others by acts of self-denial, moral courage, meekness under injuries, and patience with those who oppose themselves, show that they are acting under the guidance of the Holy Spirit of God, and, by their endurance, are helping forward the Gospel of Christ.

REV. ALEXANDER McAULAY, says The Methodist Times, will sail for the West Indies on November 18. He hopes to be in Antigua on Christmas Day, the centenary of Dr. Coke's arrival in that island. The centenary is to be appropriately commemorated throughout the jurisdiction of the West Indian Conference with thanksgiving services and a thanksgiving fund, which will be used to remove debts, open missions, extend education, and make further provision for superannuated ministers. Mr. McAulay will assist, as time may permit, in the centenary meetings. But his special object is to win souls by conducting evangelistic services. He will take with him as a fellow-worker "the Cornish evangelist," Mr. Sampson. Mr. McAulay expects to be back in England by the early part of next summer.

Mr. GEORGE CLARKE in KIRKCALDY.

By Rev. JAMES STALKER.

This place has probably never before been so deeply moved by any evangelistic effort as it has been during the last two weeks and a half by the visit of Mr. George Clarke.

He came to us almost a complete stranger; for, although the remarkable work he did in Glasgow last winter was known to a few, even his name had been unheard of by the general public. The season of the year also made the mission a great venture. Mr. Clarke, when invited here, could only offer us the last week of August and the first week of September, and he himself scarcely expected that any committee would risk a mission in such a time.

One circumstance in our favour was that all denominations united in welcoming him, and most of the ministers prepared their congregations beforehand for the mission. Prayer meetings were held for several Sunday evenings to seek the Divine blessing, and there was much secret prayer in a limited circle.

The Y.M.C.A. took in hand to fill the first meeting—a gathering of young men—on Sunday morning; and through their efforts about two hundred young men were assembled in St. Brycedale Hall. Mr. Clarke awakened the interest of his hearers by narrating the circumstances relating to his own conversion. The following Sunday morning the same place, which holds between three and four hundred, was packed with young men, who listened with deep attention to an address on The Christian Athlete. For athletics, especially football, there has been for some time a furore here, and Mr. Clarke's reputation as a runner acted as a kind of bell to bring the young men round about him. His address betrayed a minute acquaintance with every detail of an athlete's existence, and he made his hearers think of their sports in a way that probably never occurred to most of them before. We are hopeful that not a few of those who are most enthusiastic in the cultivation of athletics may in the future engage with equal ardour in the struggle for the crown of life.

The first general meeting was in Pathhead Established Church. On Monday in Pathhead Free Church there was only an inconsiderable audience; but it grew night after night, till by the end of the week it completely packed the building. The same happened the following week in the much larger church of St. Brycedale. On the evening of Sabbath week this church, which holds about twelve hundred, was packed at six o'clock with women, and Bethelfield, U.P. Church, which holds as many, at seven o'clock with men. Indeed, by the end of the mission it had become the general topic of conversation in the town.

In other places Mr. Clarke has been specially blessed among the better-off classes. Here also he gave Bible-readings, intended principally for them, in the afternoons; but he had chiefly to deal with large miscellaneous audiences, and over them he exercised no less influence than over more select gatherings elsewhere.

Wherein his power lies it is not easy to say. He has not, of course, the experience of Mr. Moody, for he is only about thirty years of age; nor has he the accurate culture and thoughtful originality of Professor Drummond—the two evangelists with whom, in Scotland at least, it is most natural to compare anyone who promises to be an evangelistic power. But he is a man fashioned by nature on an original plan, and developed by a remarkable history: his style of speaking is bold and manly; and the matter of his addresses is full of varied interest. Perhaps, however, the best explanation of his power is the simple one that he preaches the marrow of the Gospel with intense earnestness, and the power of God rests upon him.

The number of inquirers has been very large, amounting to several hundreds; and those who have dealt with them have received the impression that the work has been thorough. God's people have been revived, and our hearts are full of joy.

Mr. Clarke is a practical man, who, as he moves from place to place, likes to leave behind him permanent monuments of his work. In this town we stand much in need of a place of recreation for working lads. To begin an institute for their improvement, Mr. Clarke asked a thankoffering of £100 on the closing day of the mission; we received over £150.

HARVESTING ON THE CONGO.

Dear Sir,—Reports of the progress of the Livingstone Inland Mission have appeared in The Christian at times, mostly telling of temporal blessings vouchsafed to members of the Mission, and of journeys performed and stations built, and requests for prayer have appeared, which, thank God, have been answered in a wonderful manner.

Here, there have been a few converts for some time, and these have shown a true working spirit, assisting Mr. Richards in the work of evangelising. The seed sown is now bringing forth a rich harvest. During the last month nearly 700 people have been blessedly converted to God, and one who saw these people five years ago, as I did, and sees them now, can see the great change, and cannot but praise God for his wonderful grace, which has brought them salvation. Their faces tell the story, and their lives confirm their profession. One writing to me from this station, who is in no way connected with Mission work, says: "I was rather tired when I reached the hill above Mbanza Manteka. It was changed in a moment, when I saw below me a bird's-eye view of the pretty villages, and green ravines. The tones of a bell greeted me, and the whole impression was one of peace. I was not wrong. Arrived here, I could hardly believe my eyes. I beheld Mr. Richards preaching in the middle of a large circle of men and women, throwing away their 'Inkissis' (idols and charms). That is to say, I have been witness of an 'eventment' of great importance, and Mbanza Manteka will be distinguished in the future Congo history, as the first Christian parish, already more than 600 people."

This evening two of the converts returned from a preaching tour, and they have visited several villages. They report five conversions. They met with a good deal of opposition, and some of the people threatened to shoot them, but they replied that they were not afraid of death now, for it was not death to them, but only going to be with Jesus. One man got up and defended them, and said he would kill anyone who killed them. From this same town a man and his family have been driven away, because he tried to teach his fellow-townsmen what he himself has learned. He is rejoicing in his new-found love.

I wish those who take an interest in the work out here could just peep in at the morning and evening services, and see with what vigour the people sing the hymns of praise, the eagerness with which they drink in the Word, and the simple, childlike faith they show in their prayers. They would pray and give more liberally to forward the glorious work of "Congo for Christ."

I would take this opportunity of thanking those who so kindly responded to my request for old linen, &c., some months ago.

We would again ask an interest in the prayers of your readers, that the Pentecostal blessing here may be continued, and that other places may share a like blessing,

Yours in the Lord's work,
Stephen J. White.
Mbanza Manteka, Congo, S.W. Africa, Aug. 5.

TEMPERANCE TRACTS WANTED.—Mr. C. L. Bare, writing from Shahjahanpur, N.W.P., India, says:—I wish to thank the kind friends who have sent me tracts and papers. I have been enabled to place a number of tracts and papers on the tables in the hospital, and the regimental library and reading-room, besides distributing quantities by hand and through the post to others. The work here among the soldiers grows in interest; and I believe the Lord is blessing the feeble means used. Rum still goes on doing its terrible work. Only last week a poor fellow, discouraged, cut his throat. He had been a hard drinker for years. He couldn't break the habit. I tremble, not so much for the poor man, as for those who gave him the first drink, and helped to educate the habit. Will some kind friend send a good selection of forty or fifty tracts on the evils of strong drink, and the benefits of a sober life, full of facts and common sense, plainly and lovingly expressed? It is a terrible battle we wage with the powers of darkness.

MISCELLANY.

KING'S CROSS THEATRE.—Rev. Z. B. Woffendale, of Somers-town Church, is conducting a fortnight's mission campaign here. The meetings have been crowded, and accompanied with many tokens of spiritual awakening and widespread blessing.

THE CHURCH ARMY are holding open-air harvest thanksgiving services in Hyde Park, near the Marble Arch, every Sunday afternoon at three, during this month and next. The headquarters of the Army being at 190, Edgware-road, they are able to make a good muster, the choir numbering about 100 voices.

CHILDREN'S SCRIPTURE UNION—The following are the portions for the ensuing week:—September 26, 1 Thess. ii. 1—10; September 27, 1 Thess. iii. 1—13; September 28, 1 Thess. iv. 1—18; September 29, 1 Thess. v. 1—11; September 30, 1 Thess. v. 12—28; October 1, Psalm cxvi. 1—19; October 2, Leviticus i. 1—13.

AMUSEMENTS AND MISSIONS.—A nation that can afford to spend annually £12,000,000 on theatres, £13,000,000 on tobacco, and £124,000,000 on strong drink has plenty of money for the most gigantic missionary enterprises as soon as our Christianity is sufficiently intense to reach the national heart and conscience.—Methodist Times.

CLIFTON CONFERENCE.—This long-established Conference, in the Victoria Rooms, will be held on October 5—7. This year's subject is "God's Mind and Man's Mind Contrasted, concerning (1) Sin—its origin, its nature, and its effects; (2) Grace—its fount, its subjects, and its operations; (3) Glory—its source, its increase, and its fruition."

MR. JOHN GIRLING, hon. pastor and superintendent of the Hackney-road Mission, Union-crescent, Union-street, E., is on a six weeks' tour through the United States and Canada to recruit his health, which, with seventeen years' close voluntary labour for the spiritual and temporal weal of the poor, has been much tried. He hopes to return by the end of the month.

NATIONAL THRIFT.—A movement is on foot, by the members of the National Thrift Society, to erect a Thrift Hall as a memorial to the late President of the Society, Mr. Samuel Morley. It is proposed to erect the hall in as central a position as possible, so at to make it a centre of thrift and temperance work, and of other social movements for the welfare of the industrial classes.

MR. HERBERT A. FRANCIS concluded an eight days' mission at the "Edinburgh Castle," Limehouse, E., on Sunday last, by preaching to large congregations afternoon and evening. Throughout the week the Gospel of the grace of God has been simply, faithfully, and eloquently preached to deeply-interested audiences, and the Lord has blessed his Word nightly to young and old.

W. R. N.

BERE REGIS, DORSET.—The three weeks' tent mission conducted in this village by Mr. John Elliott has been of a deeply interesting character. Mr. Sankey's hymns have been used, and these form a great attraction to the country people, who are not familiar with them. The presence and power of the Holy Spirit have been realised in a remarkable degree. Numbers of young men have attended, as well as many older ones, who have been well known for their past ungodly lives.

REQUESTS FOR PRAYER,—For blessing on meetings being held at Selkirk, N.B.——For blessing on the labours of Mr. H. M. Barnett at Tenby, during the latter part of September and beginning of October; for conversion of unsaved ones and edification of saints.——For the conversion of an elder daughter.——For blessing on the town of Helmsdale, Sutherland, N.B.——For mission at Christchurch, conducted by Mr. Opie Rodway, from September 24 to 28.——For blessing on a tent mission at Kingston, Dorset, to be conducted by Messrs. James Clark and John Elliott, of the Evangelisation Society.——For special help and guidance in a time of perplexity.

THE TENT, UPPER CLAPTON.—During the last three months Gospel services have been held here in connection with the Upper Clapton Local Evangelistic Mission, and the Lord has abundantly blessed his word and encouraged the hearts of his people. Night after night the tent has been filled with earnest and anxious souls eager to listen to the "Gospel's joyful sound," and many have come out from the world and boldly confessed Christ. On Friday evening (the last night of the tent mission) a special thanksgiving service was held. The meeting was led by Mr. J. B. Wookey, and a brief address was delivered by Mr. G. E. Morgan. About one hundred and fifty stood up and testified to having received a blessing from the services.

SCANDINAVIANS IN LONDON.—Miss Hedenstrom writes that several leading Churchmen in Sweden have lately taken interest in her work among seamen in London. The Bishop of Carlstad has sent in a collection of £74 for the new Home. This is remarkable, considering the objections held by the clergy to lay work, and especially women's work.

CLAPHAM MISSIONARY CONFERENCE.—This Conference will be held in the Conference Hall, Clapham-road, S.W., October 27, 28, 29. Meetings each day at 3 and 7 p.m. President: Mr. Reginald Radcliffe. The object of this Conference is to stir up zeal for missions to the heathen among the Christians of the district, and to promote the sending forth of labourers into foreign fields of service. Ministers of all denominations are invited to cooperate in the effort.

LEEDS.—A tent mission, lasting twenty weeks, has been concluded here. The tent belongs to the London Evangelisation Society, and the evangelists have been Messrs. Taylor and Mehew. Throughout the whole time large and attentive audiences have assembled nightly, and it is believed that very many were led to accept Christ as their Saviour. It has been very cheering to hear of numbers who at the previous summer's tent services were led to the Saviour.

SOUTHEND, ESSEX.—During the past few weeks there have been evangelistic services here twice daily, those in the morning especially for children, and three times each Sunday. These gatherings have been remarkable for the happy unanimity which has prevailed. It has been a time of much blessing for all, many young believers have been emboldened to come forward and bear witness for the Lord, and several have been led to a decision through the word set forth.

BIRMINGHAM.—The Bloomsbury Institution, which commenced as a small mission in 1860, now has two halls, seating respectively 600 and 300 people. There is also a public laundry, Sunday-schools, and other agencies. The work has, however, sustained a severe loss by the death of its superintendent, Mr. David Smith. The management has now passed into the hands of a committee, who wish to clear off a mortgage and debt on the buildings, amounting to £600. Mr. T. Henry is the Hon. Secretary, and Mr. A. Etheridge, of 31, Nechell's Park-road, Treasurer.

THE AUSTRALIAN ABORIGINES.—At a special meeting of the Aborigines Protection Association of New South Wales, Rev. J. B. Gribble was appointed special lecturer on the native question. He delivered his first lecture, entitled "Blacks and Whites; or, The Horrors of the Far North-West," on July 22, in the Y.M.C.A. Hall, Pitt-street, Sydney. After lecturing in the towns of New South Wales, Mr. Gribble will make a tour in Victoria. A petition to the Queen is being got up for a Royal Commission to inquire into the condition of the Aborigines of Australia.

GORDON MEMORIAL MISSION, NATAL.—It will interest the friends of this Mission to know that Dr. and Mrs. Dalzell have sailed by the Grantully Castle to resume their work among the Zulus. They are accompanied by Mr. W. R. Moodie, who is to take charge of the boys' and girls' schools, and by Mr. and Mrs. Mundell and family, who will manage the farm. Thanks to the liberality of Mr. J. Campbell White, of Overtoun, who bears the whole cost of the establishment of a branch of the Mission, Dr. Dalzell, will be able to commence another work, such as is being carried on at the "Douglas" Station, founded by the Glasgow Free Church students. The branch will be named "Overtoun," and be under the care of Mr. and Mrs. George Bruce, who go out by the same steamer.

THE WORLD'S WOMAN'S TEMPERANCE UNION.—In our issue of August 26, we referred to the formation of this Union. Its object is very definite, "The prohibition of the traffic in brain poisons the whole world round," and for this we like it. It strikes at the opium and other nerve poisons as well as the cursed drink traffic. A women's petition on the subject is now being signed for presentation to all the governments of the civilised world. The Union has fixed October 16 as a day of prayer for the causes of temperance and purity throughout the world. It is also desired that October 17 be observed as a Temperance Sabbath, and that all pastors be requested to preach sermons on temperance and purity. Particulars of the Union may be obtained of Mrs. B. F. C. Costelloe, 40, Grosvenor-road, Westminster, S.W., or Miss Frances E. Willard, Union Signal office, Chicago, U.S.A.

OBITUARY.

PASTOR ESPENETT,

OF Cannes, died last month, at Sepey-sur-Aigle, Switzerland, whither he had gone for his health; and Madame Espenett, who was nursing him, fell down in apoplexy, and died by his side at the same moment. They are greatly missed.

REV. DR. FLEMING STEVENSON.

We have seen with much regret the announcement of the death of Rev. Dr. Fleming Stevenson, minister of Rathgar Church, Dublin, one of the leading ministers of the Presbyterian Church of Ireland. Dr. Stevenson's death came suddenly and unexpected. We hope in an early issue to give his portrait, with biographical sketch.

CANON MORSE,

who was about to resign the vicarage of St. Mary's, Nottingham, died suddenly last week. At an early hour on Saturday morning he was suddenly taken ill, and died, it is supposed, from failure of the heart's action before medical aid could be obtained. Mr. Morse, who was a graduate at Cambridge, had held the living of St. Mary's since 1864, and had always taken an active part in the various philanthropic institutions of the borough.

REV. J. C. GALLAWAY.

Rev. J. C. Gallaway, Secretary of the English Congregational Chapel Building Society, of which the late Mr. S. Morley was President and a genereus supporter, died last week at West Bromwich, in his 78th year. His labours included three pastorships at various times in England, and one in New Brunswick, but his name is best known in connection with chapel building among Congregationalists. To this he brought large experience, improved methods, and, above all, a warm brotherly sympathy.

MISS CLARK, INVERNESS.

Many of your readers will hear with regret of the death of the saintly Miss Clark, of the National Bible Society Depôt, Inverness. Her remains were interred in the chapel-yard burying ground on Tuesday, September 7. Miss Clark was a daughter of the late John Clark, merchant, Inverness. From a child she had known the Scriptures, and early began to take a lively interest in the work of Christ. During a brief sojourn in Madeira in the spring of 1844, she did very much to kindle and maintain an interest in the English services held there by the late Dr. Julius Wood; and in 1846, when the now memorable persecutions broke out in Madeira, Miss Clark was in the midst of the fray. On return to her native city she interested herself deeply in the work of the National Bible Society. Her consecration and piety in this work became widely known. Never robust, her strength latterly was impaired, but at the last her call came suddenly, and now she is at home. J. R. M.

MRS. GIRLING.

Mrs. Girling, "mother" of the Shakers' community, died on Saturday morning at Lymington, and it is expected this will lead to the break-up of the community. The scene in the camp was beyond description, so deep was the grief of the community. "One who Knew Her" writes in The Pall Mall Gazette:—Had Mother Girling lived early in the Middle Ages, she would have been canonised, and her thousands of devoted followers, called by her name, would probably for centuries have contributed to elevate and purify the life of the world. No one who ever met her, and seriously talked over the strange claims which she unhesitatingly advanced, could fail to be impressed by the limpid purity of her soul and the tender, loving sympathy with which she regarded all mankind. Anyone who is familiar with Laurence Oliphant's writings, or has at all studied the strange phenomena of American Shakerism, will be sufficiently cognisant of the general drift of the doctrines which underlay Mrs. Girling's teachings. It is now not three months since I visited the little camp and drank tea with the poor frail creature, who told you, with a quiet but weird look in her eyes, of the strange experiences which had befallen her and which had left in her mind an absolute certainty that she was in very truth a new incarnation of the Deity. One of the signs of this was to be found in the stigmata which, as was the case with many other ecstatics in times past, appeared on her hands, feet, and side. One had at first to overcome the shock that was inevitable from what appeared to be so blasphemous a pretension, and had to school oneself to regard it as a mere mental delusion, which sprung from no moral fault or spiritual arrogance on her part. She was the plain hard-working wife of a man in the lower middle class in the Eastern Counties when the mysterious vision appeared to her which was to change the whole course of her life.

THE FRIENDS' CHINA MISSION.

(Specially Communicated.)

THE Society of Friends' Foreign Mission Association has a number of earnest representatives labouring for the Lord, especially in India and Madagascar. This month two more "Friends," Mr. and Mrs. R. J. Davidson, of London, have started for China, in connection with the same body. Mrs. Davidson (Miss M. J. Catlin), recently married, has long been engaged in useful work amongst the poor of East London, as at Hart's-lane and the Bedford Institute, also in connection with the Friends' Convalescent Homes at Epping and Folkestone. She has successfully passed the examinations of the St. John's Ambulance Association, and has obtained the diploma of a first-class lady nurse, after a course of attendance at Queen Charlotte's Hospital, Paddington. Hence she will probably find much scope for indirect usefulness in mission work, both amongst natives and Europeans, in the East, by the exercise of her medical qualifications.

A crowded farewell meeting, in the new hall at Hart's-lane, Bethnal Green, the night before Mr. and Mrs. Davidson left England, was a very interesting occasion. Representatives of the China Inland Mission, &c., took a useful part in the proceedings. Next day, as the party were going on board the Bengal, P. and O. steamer, at Tilbury, a little incident illustrated the hindrances which tend to counteract the influence of missionaries, both in India and China. A well-dressed person, probably not a teetotaler, stumbled on the gangway to the steamer, when a respectable Hindu gentleman quickly stepped before him. Hereupon the Englishman shouted angrily, "You nigger! You black nigger! I'll fight you. A pretty thing for a white man to be insulted by a black nigger;" and so on. Such uncalled-for treatment of the Orientals irritates them exceedingly. To this is added, in the Chinese ports, the baneful influence, amongst the white residents, of many immoral women from professed Christian lands, so that there is much need in the East for missionary influence amongst the whites, in order to do good to the natives also.

Mr. and Mrs. Davidson have had a pleasant voyage, without sea-sickness, across the Bay of Biscay, and through the Suez Canal. Although in the second-class cabin, they speak very highly of the comforts enjoyed and of the courteous attentions received from all the officers and ship's company, from the captain downwards, and especially from the stewards and chief stewardess. Indeed, it is to be hoped that these pleasant experiences on the P. and O. steamer may not unduly contrast with future missionary trials. Mrs. Davidson has already found a little "mission" work amongst the children on board; she writes that it is the daily prayer of her husband and herself that they may, in whatever way possible, be enabled, by the Lord, to witness for Him, when not vocally, then silently and by example. Their friends of the Society, and others at home, have been very kind in the supply of gifts and outfittings. But there must necessarily be at first, on their arrival in China, a patience-trying period of learning the language, and other preparation; though, probably, Mrs. Davidson's indirect mission efforts will not be long in finding openings for useful service.

MILLWALL.—A Gospel hall has been opened at Cubitt's-town, near the Millwall docks and warehouse. The hall is situate in a very poor and growing neighbourhood, and help is needed to purchase necessary fittings, chairs, &c. The superintendent is Mr. George Fuller, 1, Follett-street, Poplar, E.

ABOVE IT ALL.

I SEE the crowds of earth go by,
  I hear the world's loud trumpet call;
Though through its midst my path should lie,
  Yet I must live above it all.

The sorrows of the daily life,
  The shadows o'er my path which fall,
Too oft obscure the glory's light,
  Until I rise above them all;

Until upon the mountain height,
  I stand, my God! with Thee alone,
Bathed in the fullest, clearest light—
  The glory which surrounds the throne.

Here hushed are all the sounds of earth,
  The laugh of pleasure, moan of pain;
The vain deluding shouts of mirth,
  Here fall upon my ear in vain.

Calm in thy secret presence, Lord,
  I rest this weary soul of mine;
Feed on the fulness of thy Word,
  And die to all the things of time.

Learning that Word, so wondrous deep,
  To live in joy and grief the same;
Weeping as though we did not weep,
  Gaining, as though we did not gain.

Oh! take my fevered hands in thine,
  And keep me, Master, nearer Thee;
Walking above the things of time,
  In closest fellowship with Thee.

With Thee, above the clouds and gloom
  That shade and dim this lower life;
Walking with Thee—with Thee alone—
  Above the storm, above the strife.

TENT MISSION, SOUTH NORWOOD.

AN exceedingly successful mission in connection with the South Norwood branch of the London City Mission has been held during the past three months in a tent capable of holding over 400 people. Altogether about ninety meetings have been held, including evangelistic services, temperance and prayer-meetings. The speakers have mainly been City missionaries, and agents of the Evangelisation Society. The temporary erection has been on many occasions crowded to excess, notably on the last few Sunday evenings, when between 600 and 700 were present, the preacher being the local City missionary, Mr. J. J. Browne.

At the thanksgiving service, held on Monday week last, Captain Charlton, Mr. Sawell, of the Parent Society, as well as many resident friends and other supporters of the Mission, took part. Many conversions have taken place, and numerous other blessings have been received. An earnest wish has been expressed by those attending these services that the work should be continued in a permanent building, and such desire being heartily approved of by the officers of the London City Mission, Christian friends who are able and willing to assist in this important and much-needed work of spreading the Gospel among the poor of a district, containing altogether about 750 visitable families, are invited to address the Honorary Secretary, Mr. F. Fishwick, Willingham Lodge, South Norwood, S.E.

A QUIET RESTING-PLACE.—A correspondent writes:—I should like to draw the attention of your readers to this delightful spot, situated in the valley of the Rhone, not far from the lake of Geneva, among high mountains, some of which are covered with snow. This place affords a lovely retreat for tired workers. A dear Christian lady Madame Malherbe, has taken a house in a beautiful situation, where she receives a few weary or sick Christians. Her Bible-readings are deeply instructive and especially helpful to any who may be seeking after a life of deeper communion with God. She has herself for years lived a life of Sabbath rest, and has been blessed to many souls. Madame Malherbe will be glad to welcome any of God's children, who may be passing this way, at her daily Bible-readings. There is also a monthly Conference at her house for the promotion of Scriptural holiness. Address, Madame Malherbe, Bex, Canton de Vaud, Switzerland.

The Book World.

Stories from the Band of Hope. 2s. Sunday-school Union. A collection of anecdotes on temperance topics, which may prove useful to teachers when addressing Band of Hope or Sunday-school.

The Association of the Virgin Mary with Our Lord in the Scheme of Salvation (6d., Kensit) is the title of a pamphlet issued by the National Protestant Union, showing the errors of this conjunction. The argument is supported by quotations from the early Fathers.

Four Essays on the Sabbath, to which were awarded prizes of £100, £50, £30, and £20, by the Sabbath Alliance of Scotland. 7s. 6d. James Gemmell, Edinburgh. These essays are a storehouse of facts about the Sabbath. The binding nature of its observance and the advantages it secures are clearly set forth. Ministers and Sabbath-school teachers should consult it from time to time for fresh arguments in defence of the Day of Rest, which the enemies of Christianity seek to abolish.

The Child's Own Magazine (Annual vol. 1s. 6d. S. S. Union) is full of interesting stories in prose and poetry, with illustrations on nearly every page, and a coloured frontispiece. A good present for children. Young England (5s., same Publishers) is a wholesome, interesting, and instructive volume, suitable for either boys or girls. Among the best stories are "Under the Northern Lights," by Gordon Stables, who is always a favourite with boys; "Who was Guilty?" the story of a school mystery, by William J. Lacy; "That New Town in Texas," by Grace Stebbing. There are also some good papers on Natural History, treated in an attractive style. The volume is well illustrated by famous artists, and will be a very suitable Christmas present.

Social Arrows. By Lord Brabazon. 5s. Longmans, Green & Co. It is good to see men of wealth and of leisure devoting their energies to the elevation of the people. Among our titled philanthropists Lord Brabazon has earned a conspicuous and a worthy place. With the hearty co-operation of Lady Brabazon, he has thrown himself into such movements as the Y.W.C.A. and the Y.M.C.A., the Early Closing Crusade, and other ameliorative social schemes for bettering the condition of our overcrowded city population. Into this volume his lordship has collected a number of published papers and addresses on these topics. They embody much sound reasoning and sympathetic feeling, with an adequate sense of the difficulties of the situation. If all our legislators were imbued with a like spirit, it seems to us that fewer of our social grievances would go unredressed.

A Layman's Study of the English Bible. By Francis Bowen, LL.D. T. Fisher Unwin. This little volume is one upon which much scholarship has been bestowed, but which we are unable to praise. The writer states that he set himself to look at the Scriptures "just as one might first enter upon the study of Gibbons' great historical work." The result is disappointing. The Bible is commended as a class-book, half an hour devoted to which "will be mere recreation, and will never be unprofitably spent." Its books are said to contain "legends" and "what purport to be revelations of the supernatural and of immortality." Dr. Bowen states that "the children of tender years who have been properly taught, the Bible is simply a big story-book, and one of a very fascinating and instructive character." The remark is in keeping with the tone of much of the "Layman's Study," a vein of doubt running through the various chapters. Strangely enough, although the accuracy of the Bible narratives is discounted on nearly every page, and some portions are referred to as being "after the manner of Æsop," the writer says, "My own strong conviction is that the only hope for the civilisation and the happiness of the generations that are to come in the English-speaking world depends upon the continued reverent study of the English Bible." We can only regret that the writer's own study of the Scriptures has not been more devout, and we do not advise any of our readers to follow in his footsteps.

The current number of the New Princeton Review (2s. Hodder & Stoughton) is one of deep interest and varied worth. An article on "The Agnostic Dilemma" comments powerfully on the fast ebbing tide of speculative philosophy. A very striking paper contains impressions of the writer as to the decay of religious life in some of the rural districts of the New England States of Vermont and New Hampshire. The article on the origin and growth of the great Mormon "delusion" ought to be well studied in these days, when so many are being led captive by it. There is not a dull page in the whole magazine.

My Mission Garden. By Rev. S. Langdon. 2s.6d. T. Woolmer. The author, a Ceylon missionary, has woven together a number of interesting facts respecting the splendid plants of that tropical land. At the same time he gives much information respecting the people, and the efforts which are made to lead them to Christ. The book is one calculated to interest young people in foreign missions, while giving them an insight into the natural history of a well-favoured isle.

The Sunday-school Teacher's Pocket-book for 1887 (2s. Sunday-school Union) contains, as usual, special information for teachers, class register, pages for notes on each lesson, &c., as well as the ordinary information given in pocket-books. Very useful to teachers using the International Lessons. The same publishers send us copies of their New Year's Addresses: that for teachers by Rev. R. Tuck, entitled "More Like the Master" (1s.); for senior scholars, "The Young Yoke-bearers" (1s.), by Rev. H. Simon; for scholars, A Happy New Year (6s. per 100), by Mr. E. J. Kennedy; and for parents, "Give them a Fair Start" (6s. per 100), by Rev. R. H. Lovell. They are all good, but we can specially commend Mr. Tuck's paper for the teacher.

Nature Musings for Holy Days and Holidays. By Rev. N. Curnock. 2s. 6d. T. Woolmer. The author of this truly charming book has studied in the school of nature to some purpose. With the grace of patient and reverent study, he also possesses a gifted and graphic pen. He leads us through a picture gallery of those natural beauties and marvels that thickly encompass us on every hand, if we had the opened eye to see, and the heart to appreciate them. He has been prompted to publish these chapters, he says, by "the love of God, the love of nature, and the love of children." Three of the best possible motives; thoughtful children, of varied ages, will thank him heartily, and will surely catch some inspiration that may set them exploring and musing for themselves. Dr. Dallinger, of Sheffield, contributes an introduction. There are many fine engravings that adorn and elucidate the text.

The City Youth. By Rev. Thain Davidson, D.D. 3s. 6d. Hodder & Stoughton. Any man who strives to mould the young life of a great city sets a noble task before him. Dr. Davidson has done this for some years past by his monthly sermons to young men in Colebrooke Church, and he has done it splendidly. This is the third volume of these sermons, and it would be hard to find a better book for putting into the hands of a youth entering on city life. The discourses show great freshness, and, in some cases, wonderful ingenuity of treatment, while all are helpful to the last degree. The first sermon in the book, on "The Youth Void of Understanding," is a model of pungent and practical speech on a pressing topic of the time. We earnestly commend these valuable discourses to all who would further the true welfare of the rising generation.

Illustrations for October, commencing a new volume, will contain the beginning of a series of portrait biographies of "Railway Men," and a series of illustrated articles on "The Press and Press Buildings."

Rest on the Way (1s. Hodder & Stoughton) is a dainty and artistically got-up text-book, giving a comforting verse of Scripture for every day in a month; choice verses alternate with finely-finished chromo illustrations.

A new weekly magazine for preachers is announced under the title of The Weekly Pulpit. It will contain sermon outlines, Homiletic Notes, and other helps in ministerial work, and will be issued exclusively for the use of ministers. The publisher is Mr. Elliot Stock.

Anti-Infidel Tracts. Mr. W. R. Bradlaugh is still doing good service with his series of tracts written to expose the fallacies of the apostles of so-called free-thought. Although there is nothing new in these tracts, the statement of the truth cannot but do good, and these leaflets may be used with advantage to show working men the errors of their would-be teachers. Other publications having the same purpose are—"Why am I a Christian?" "Is the Bible True?" and "The Six Days of Creation." Mr. Bradlaugh has also published an autobiography of himself. All these pamphlets may be obtained from Mr. Bradlaugh, 70, King's Cross-road, W.C.

Mr. Kensit, 18, Paternoster-row, sends us a number of pamphlets on the Romish and Ritualistic questions The Progress of Ritualism (1d.), The Massacre of St. Bartholomew (2d.), William Cobbett on the Church of Rome (1d.), and Lord Robert Montagu's Reasons for Leaving the Church of Rome (1d.). Their contents are indicated by the titles, so that further comment is unnecessary. The same publisher sends us Evening Communions (2d.), an argument in their favour by Rev. J. J. Beddow; A Sermon on Transubstantiation, by Rev. Talbot A. L. Greaves, M.A., and "Who can Forgive Sins but God Alone?" a tractate exposing the unscriptural character of confession as practised by the Romish Church.

The International Daily Text Book for 1887 (4d Sunday School Union) provides a text for every day in the year, taken from the International Bible Readings, and is intended to be a daily companion for Sunday-school teachers and others who are studying the International Lesson. It is neatly got up, and can be conveniently carried in the purse, or waistcoat pocket.

ALDERSGATE-ST. Y.M.C.A. has started a new venture. We have before us the first number of The City of London Association News, a monthly, which, while intended specially to give information respecting this Association, will give news of the other City Y.M.C.A.'s. It is carefully edited, and we hope it will grow both in size and circulation, and be a power with our business young men.

FRESH-LOOKING ROOMS.—Mr. J. Van Sommer writes suggesting a plan for brightening the houses of the poor, which has been tried successfully. It is to whitewash the ceilings and re-paper or recolour the walls of their rooms. By doing several rooms at one time, the cost is only about five shillings per room. Those who have had their rooms done have been very thankful, and in some cases the landlords have made an allowance to them for the improved state of their apartments.

YOUNG MEN IN ISLINGTON.—On the evening of Sunday week Dr. Thain Davidson preached his monthly sermon to young men, which is fully reported in The Islington Gazette of the 15th inst. The subject was "Saul: a Choice Young Man;" while many points in the character of the first king of Israel were commended, his defects were pointed out for warning and instruction. A very sympathetic reference to the career of the late Mr. Samuel Morley came at the close of the discourse, and the hearers were exhorted to follow in his footsteps. Said the preacher: "You may never, indeed, attain to one-tenth of his influence and wealth, but up to your proportion you can walk in his steps. As one who for many years knew him and admired him, I feel that I cannot but point the finger to that splendid exemplification of Christian sagacity and goodness, and remind you that the deepest spirituality is not incompatible with worldly success. You, too, young men, make the Bible your guide, and prayer your daily resort; you, too, set your faces like a flint against every form of commercial immorality; you, too, join in the war against drink and self-indulgence; you, too make your lives fruitful in blessing to all around you."

Notes on Daily Readings.

SUNDAY, SEPT. 26.—I CHRON. VIII.

1.—Now Benjamin begat Bela.—"The reason of this return to the genealogy of the Benjamites seems to be the desire to connect the genealogical introduction with the historical body of the work. As the history is to begin with Saul, the genealogical portion is made to end with an account of the family of this Benjamite monarch (33—40, and ix. 35—44)."—Sp. Com.

33.—Esh-baal.—"Previous to the introduction of the Phœnician Baal-worship into Israel by Ahab, the word 'Baal' had no bad sense in Hebrew, but was simply an equivalent of the more ordinary El, 'God.' Hence there is nothing strange in the use at this time of the names, 'Esh-baal' (man of God), 'Beel-iada,' 'Merib-baal,' &c. Later on in the history, however, such names became offensive to pious ears, and were changed for the better or for the worse, 'Beel-iada' becoming 'El-iada' ('let God aid'), 'Esh-baal,' 'Ish-bosheth' ('man of shame'), 'Merib-baal,' 'Mephi-bosheth, and the like. On the history of Esh-baal and Ish-bosheth, see 2 Sam. ii. 8—10, iii. 6—15, iv. 1—12."—Sp. Com.

MONDAY, SEPT. 27.—I CHRON. IX.

1.—The Book of the Kings of Israel and Judah.—This seems to have been, as before stated, a compilation of those national Chronicles which were carefully and regularly written in both the kingdoms.

2.—The first inhabitants.—"I.e., the first inhabitants after the return from the captivity. See Neh. vii. 5." The Israelites.—The returned exiles are enumerated under four heads: (1) Israelites, i.e., the mass of the laity, whether belonging to the Ten Tribes or the Two; (2) the priests; (3) the Levites; and (4) the lowest order of the ministry, the Nethinims. These last, whose name is derived from the root nathan, "to give," were a sort of hieroduli, or sacred slaves—persons "given" to the Levites to perform the lower and more laborious duties of the sanctuary. Some were given as early as the time of Moses (Num. xxxi. 47); a great accession to the number took place on the submission of the Gibeonites (Josh. ix. 23); and a further enlargement was made by David (Ezek. viii. 20). At the time of the return from the captivity, owing to the small number of Levites who came back (Ezek. ii. 40—42), the services of the Nethinims became very important."—Sp. Com.

22.—In their villages.—"The porters, like the singers (Neh. xii. 29), dwelt for the most part in the villages round Jerusalem (25), and relieved each other at the gates, each course or set taking the duty for a week at a time. They are mentioned under the name of Arthinims only in Chron., Ezra, and Neh."—Idem.

35—44.—"An almost exact repetition of viii. 29—38. The writer is bent on connecting the genealogical section of his work with the historical, and finds it most convenient to effect the junction by reintroducing the genealogy of the person with whose death the historical portion opens."—Idem.

TUESDAY, SEPT. 28.—I CHRON. X.

"This chapter corresponds most closely with 1 Samuel xxxi. It contains two facts not found in that document—the fastening of Saul's head in the temple of Dagon (10), and the burial of his bones, and those of his sons, under an oak (12). Otherwise the narrative differs only by being abbreviated (see especially 6, 7, 11, and 12), and by having some moral reflections attached to it" (13, 14).—Sp. Com.

6.—All his house died together.—This cannot mean that all Saul's family, or even all his sons, perished with him, for everyone knew that Ishbosheth, his son, both survived him and succeeded to his throne. Ezra cannot be supposed to overlook a fact so patent. All his house must mean "all his household"—his personal attendants, or body-guard, called in 1 Samuel xxxi. 6 "his armour-bearer and all his men."

12.—Took away the body of Saul.—"From 1 Samuel xxxi. 10, 12, we learn that the bodies of Saul and his sons had been fastened to the wall of Beth-shan, which was now in the possession of the Philistines, and that the men of Jabesh-Gilead took them from thence." And buried their bones.—"The bodies, as we learn from 1 Samuel xxxi. 12, were burnt. Consequently, nothing remained to be buried but the bones. The narrative of Chronicles thus incidentally confirms that of Samuel."—Sp. Com.

The action of the men of Jabesh-Gilead should be carefully noted. Consider the crushing nature of the recent defeat at Mount Gilboa, and admire the high courage of the men who at such a time both conceived and executed the bold design of snatching the royal remains from the power of the conquering foe. But their gratitude is even more admirable than their courage. Forty years before, Saul had saved them from a terrible fate. Since then their deliverer had risen to great eminence, and had fallen again into sin, as well as into disaster and death. Still they remained true. Saul had been their saviour, whatever else he might have been. And now he is being disgraced in his death! They take fire at the very thought. Fatigue and danger are as nothing. The body of their deliverer must be rescued and honoured. And so a shining deed of valour and of love is done. Surely if the men of Jabesh-Gilead did so much for their dead saviour—for poor fallen Saul—we should do as much or more for our Saviour, who lives and reigns, and in whom is no fault at all.

WEDNESDAY, SEPT. 29.—I CHRON. XI.

Ezra passes over David's reign of seven years and a half in Hebron, with the brief notice in chap. iii. 4, and begins at once with the story of his elevation to the rule over the entire kingdom, which took place at the death of Ishbosheth, the son of Saul (2 Sam. iv. 4).

Verse 1—9 run parallel with 2 Sam. v. Compare 10—41 with 2 Sam. xxiii. 8—39. The rest of the chapter is drawn from some source other than Samuel.

This chapter, and the one that follows it, are chiefly interesting as an account of those who came to David to strengthen him, and to make him king. Our chapter states at once three very solid reasons for their allegiance to David: (1) Relationship.—"We are thy bone and thy flesh." If this was a good argument in reference to David, how much better is it when used by a Christian believer in reference to Christ. (2) Experience.—"In time past . . . thou wast he that leddest out and broughtest in Israel." There is often a real, though partial experience of the help and power of Christ previous to the act of entire submission to Him, which is in itself a most powerful inducement to that full submission. (3) Divine appointment.—(2) "Thou shalt feed my people Israel." One can easily appreciate the unanswerable force of this argument in reference to David and Israel. That David was chosen by God to be their king was reason enough for highest allegiance. Strange, we are so slow to feel its force when it is applied to Christ and ourselves!

10—25.—"Out of the general body of his followers, David organised a band of worthies or knights, answering very much, we suspect, to the three degrees in the Order of the Bath, in which we have Grand-Crosses, Knight-Commanders, and Companions. In David's band there were three chief heroes, three second in prowess, and thirty inferior to these—thirty-six in all."—Kitto. The story of the drawing of water from the well of Bethesda (15—19) tells of intense attachment to the person of David; such loyalty as made his very wish a law to them, was no small part of the secret of their distinction. A little of the same enthusiasm for Christ our King would turn many a common-place believer into a true hero.

THURSDAY, SEPT. 30.—I CHRON. XII.

"This chapter comprises four lists:—(1) One of men, chiefly Benjamites, who joined David at Ziklag; (2) A second, of Gadites, who united themselves to him when he was in a stronghold near the desert (8—15); (3) A third, of Manassites, who came to him when he was dismissed by the Philistines upon suspicion (19—22); and (4) a fourth, of the numbers from the different tribes who attended and made him king at Hebron (23—40)."—Sp. Com. It is a list of men, with their gifts and services, dedicated to the King. Among them we note the following:—(a) The Benjamites, (2) "Who could use both the right hand and the left,"—a fine example of natural talent, fully developed by a long course of patient training, now dedicated to the highest use. (b) The Gadites (8), in whom bodily strength, courage, and agility are finely exemplified. Here was ability of another kind, fully educated, and now put at the service of the King. (c) The children of Benjamin and Judah (16—18)—a splendid instance of entire and willing submission to the King. "Thine, David (we omit the italics, which only weaken), and with thee, son of Jesse! Peace, peace unto thee, and peace to thy helpers, for thy God helped thee." Note, it was by the Spirit that Amasai spoke thus. By the Spirit only can we speak thus to Jesus Christ—"It is God who worketh in you to will," &c. (d) "The children of Issachar, that had understanding of the times, to know what Israel ought to do" (32)—an example of rare and much-needed discernment of the signs of the times. (e) Zebulon, &c. Men of ability to command, of skill in the fight, "who could set the battle in array" (see 33, 36, and 38, R.V.). They were able officers. Does not the Church need such to-day? (f) This gathering to David was sincere: "All the rest also of Israel were of one heart to make David king" (38). If we could say that all were of one heart to make Jesus King, the Millennium would have begun. In conclusion, we mention (g) the large and generous gifts made by three tribes (40), and (h) the gladness of these men as they gather round their appointed king, giving both their substance, their talents, and themselves to his cause (40). "Go and do thou likewise." So only shall we enter into the joy of our Lord.

FRIDAY, OCTOBER 1.—I CHRON. XIII.

THE JUDGMENT OF UZZA, AND THE BLESSING OF OBED-EDOM.—It should always be remembered that the punishment of death by the hand of God, so often met with in the sacred history, is not to be taken as a sign that God has cast off the man so punished. The doom of physical death need not involve that of spiritual death.

(1) "Let the sin of Uzza warn us all to take heed of presumption, rashness, and irreverence, in dealing with holy things. Uzza's long familiarity with the Ark probably occasioned presumption. A good intention will not justify a bad action; it will not suffice to say of that which is ill-done that it was well-meant. (2) The God with whom we have to do is a jealous God; let us not dare to trifle with Him; and yet, let us, through Christ, come boldly to the throne of grace, for we are under the dispensation of liberty and grace—not of bondage and terror. (3) Let David's displeasure upon this occasion caution us to take heed to our spirits when we are under the Divine rebukes, lest, instead of submitting to God, we quarrel with Him. (4) Let the stop thus put to the solemnity caution us not to be driven off from our duty by those providences which are only intended to drive us from our sins. (5) Obed-edom knew what slaughter the Ark had made among the Philistines that imprisoned it, and among the Bethshemites that looked into it. He saw Uzza struck dead for touching it, and David afraid of meddling with it. Yet he opened his doors without fear. 'Oh, the courage,' says Bishop Hall, 'of an honest and faithful heart!' The same hand that punished Uzza's presumption, rewarded Obed-edom's humble boldness. The Ark is a guest by which none shall lose who bid it welcome. Piety is the best friend to prosperity. Obed-edom's household shared the blessing; it is good to live in a family that entertains the Ark, for all about it will fare the better."—Henry and Scott.

SATURDAY, OCTOBER 2.—I CHRON. XIV.

"The particular service for which David was raised up was to save Israel out of the hands of the Philistines (2 Sam. iii. 18). This Divine Providence gives him an opportunity of accomplishing. The Philistines were the aggressors. They considered not that David had the presence of God with him, which Saul had forfeited and lost. The kingdom of the Messiah, as soon as it was set up in the world, was thus vigorously attacked by the powers of darkness. The heathen raged (Ps. ii.): but in vain. They took counsel together, but were broken in pieces (Isa. viii. 9, 10)."—Henry and Scott.

David's dependence upon God for guidance is most instructive. He put himself entirely in God's hands (10). Honouring God thus, he was himself honoured. Clear counsel was given, and victory followed (10, 11). "In all thy ways acknowledge Him, and He shall direct thy path." But there is more to be told. The Philistines return after a while. How many men, in such a case, would have presumed upon the counsel lately given in circumstances so nearly alike. Not so David. He inquires afresh of God. Well for him that he did, for this time he was told to wait till the rushing noise in the tree-tops gave God's signal for action. Moreover, he was not to meet them by a front attack, but to fetch a compass and fall upon them from behind. Thus, the directions given in the second case differed from those in the first, both as to time and manner.

"David waited till God moved, and stirred then, but not till then. Thus he was trained in dependence on God. God performed his promise, went before him, and routed all his enemies. . . . When the kingdom of the Messiah was to be set up, the Apostles, who were to beat down the devil's kingdom, must not attempt anything till they had received the promise of the Spirit; who came with a sound from heaven as of a rushing mighty wind."—Henry and Scott.

CHRISTIAN COMMUNITY

INSTITUTED 1772.

President: G. WILLIAMS, ESQ.
Vice-Presidents: A. PEASE, ESQ., M.P.; S. D. WADDY, ESQ., M.P., Q.C.; and J. H. GLADSTONE, ESQ., Ph.D., F.R.S., &c.
Treasurer: F. A. BEVAN, ESQ.
Honorary Secretary: THE REV. W. TYLER.

This, the oldest of all the Evangelistic Societies in London, is largely engaged in taking the Gospel to two classes, viz., those who cannot, and those who will not, attend ordinary places of worship. The former are met with in workhouses, infirmaries, and suchlike places; the latter in the open air, common lodging-houses, &c., besides in rooms and mission halls, where every sort of religious, social, and benevolent efforts are in daily operation, by 150 volunteer workers and a large contingent of lady helpers, who visit 12 workhouses and infirmaries, with 12,000 or more inmates.

During the winter, an earnest and most successful effort has been made to reach the "Outcast" from whom the "Bitter Cry" has come. Thousands of them have been sheltered all night, and fed in the Mission Hall, Thrawl-street, Spitalfields. Many have been secured work, and assisted in other ways. To sustain this and the general work, Funds are urgently needed.

Subscriptions and Donations will be most gratefully received by the Treasurer, F. A. Bevan, Esq., at the Bank; by the Secretary, Mr. James Atkinson, 10, Enfield-road South, Kingsland, N.; by the Bankers, Messrs. Barclay, Bevan & Co., 54, Lombard-street, London, E.C.; or the Editors of THE CHRISTIAN.

JAMES ATKINSON, Secretary.

CASE FOR THIS WEEK.

CRITICAL CASE of DISEASED RIGHT LUNG.—Mr. G——, of PLYMOUTH.

This patient writes me, May 25, 1886, saying, "I hope my case may persuade some other sufferer to apply to you. For several reasons I do not want my name in print, but you can give it privately."

Another patient, writing me to report his own favourable progress, says, "I have just seen Mr. G., whom I personally know. I did not expect him to live; his cure was wonderful."

The case of Mr. G. commenced with congestion of the right lung, followed by severe hemorrhage. The lung was then reported to be in a very bad state, and the condition most critical. To the surprise of all, after commencing my treatment, he made such progress that "in a few months he got about again." "I paid (he says) the greatest attention to all your rules. I am thankful to say I can attend to my business as usual. My case has excited very much interest, and if this testimony is of any service you are at liberty to publish it, and to give my name if you think proper to any inquirer."

To show the importance of perseverance in such a case, I think this patient was nearly a year and a half under my treatment.

THE CELEBRATED NORWEGIAN SLIPPERS.

COMFORT, EASE, AND PLEASURE FOR WEARY FEET.

The immense demand that there was for these Slippers last season (over 2,000 pairs being sold in a single day), and the fact that all through the summer we have daily received applications from persons in all parts asking if they can still have them, has induced us to again stock a very large quantity, which we are pleased to offer at our former low prices.

These Slippers are worn by rich and poor alike, because they are easy, comforting, cheap, and answer every purpose that a slipper can be required for. We have had letters of recommendation and repeated orders from all parts of the world.

These Slippers can be had in either black or scarlet. They are made of stout felt throughout, no nails or hard leather to injure the most sensitive feet. Trimmed with imitation fur. Worn in drawing-room, bed-room, boudoir, and street. Carriage free at the following prices: Boys', Girls', and Ladies' sizes, 1s. 6d. per pair. Gentlemen's, 1s. 9d. A reduction of 2d. per pair if three pairs are taken, or 4d. per pair on half-dozen. Exact length of foot or size taken must be sent with each order, and all orders should be sent at once, as we have a great difficulty in getting them later on.

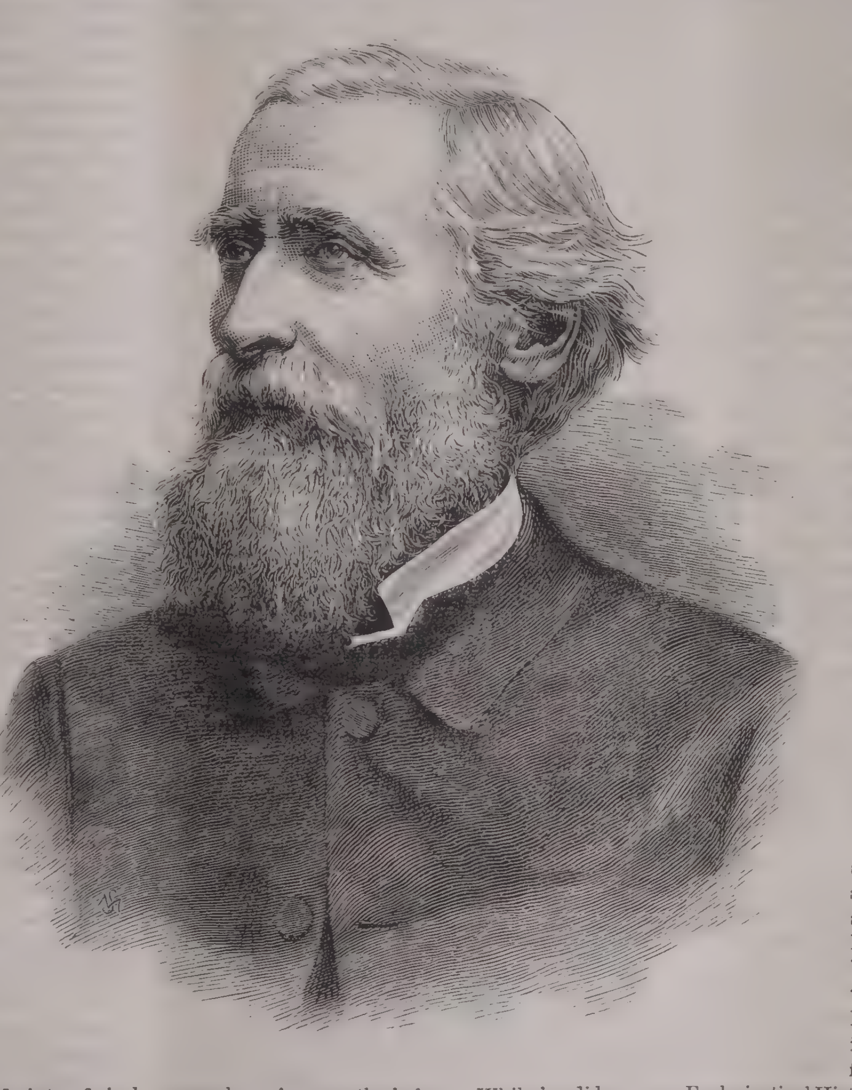
REV. J. MURRAY MITCHELL, LL.D.

THE name of Dr. Murray Mitchell is known in many lands; and wherever it is known it is held in high esteem, as that of one who has laboured long, unweariedly, and successfully as a missionary among the heathen, and as an earnest and eloquent advocate of the Mission cause. Upon these works he has brought to bear a mind of much power, most sedulously and laboriously cultivated, stored with varied erudition, and refined with exquisite taste; and a heart warm with love of God and of man. His physique is somewhat slight, but his constitution is of the class commonly described as wiry, so that, although now in his seventy-second year, he is as able and willing to work as most of the men who have borne twenty years less of the heat and burden of the day, and who year for year have had far less to bear than has fallen to his lot.



JOHN MURRAY MITCHELL was born in Aberdeen in August, 1815. He was one of a large family, and three brothers, as well as himself, became ministers of the Established Church of Scotland. After getting his "primary education" at the parish school of Kinneff, in Kincardineshire, he went, in 1828, to the Grammar School in Aberdeen. Here, as a favourite pupil of Dr. Melvin (one of those "hero-schoolmasters" who roused the faculties of their best scholars to enthusiastic action), he laid the foundation of that classic taste which, under other circumstances, might have degenerated into finical dilettantism, but which, in the course of his laborious life, he has turned to good account in the study of various languages and the elucidation of several systems of philosophy and religion.

In 1829 he entered Marischal College, Aberdeen, taking the second place in the Entrance Examination; and during the four sessions of his undergraduate course he gained prizes in very class. At the close of that course, in 1833, e stood highest, over all, in the examination for the degree of Master of Arts. Classics and philosophy were his favourite studies. He entered the Divinity classes in the Aberdeen University in 1833, and brought to the study of theological subjects the same powers and the same ardour which had made him quasi senior wrangler a few months before. While he did as much as any, and far more than most, of his fellow-students in the acquisition of theological, historical, and linguistic knowledge, he stood out as an earnest Christian, and, even then, as a zealous advocate of missions. It is interesting to know that at a time when missionary zeal was scarcely existent anywhere in Scotland, his ardour in the work was excited by contact with the sons of Dr. Milne, one of the pioneers of missions to the Chinese. It required some courage in those days to attempt, in connection with the Church of Scotland, what Mr. Mitchell successfully accomplished, the formation of a Juvenile Missionary Society. In the course of his theological curriculum, he formed the resolution to become, at its close, if it were God's will, a missionary to the heathen; and this resolution was confirmed by a meeting with Dr. Duff in 1836. In the session 1834-5, Mr. Mitchell gained a prize, given by the Lord Rector of the University, for an essay on "The Septuagint and other Greek versions of the Old Testament," and the following year, on the recommendation of Dr. Melvin, and at the earnest request of the Town Council of Aberdeen, he took charge for a year of one of the classes in the Grammar School.

For the last session of his theological course (1837-8) Mr. Mitchell transferred himself to Edinburgh, where the present writer formed that acquaintance with him which, developed into cordial friendship, cemented by common tastes and common work, has been undiminished by the lapse of half a century. Dr. James Hamilton and Mr. John Braidwood (afterwards missionary at Madras) were among his intimate associates in Edinburgh. He was known at this time among his classmates as a distinguished student, and amongst them and the religious community of Edinburgh as an earnest Christian. In the former capacity he gained a gold medal in the Church history class, for an essay on "Eusebius as an Ecclesiastical Historian," and in the latter he took a leading part in the formation of the "Ladies' Society for Promoting Female Education in India." It was in connection with this Society that he began his career as an author, by writing several tracts which were largely circulated, and which did much to awaken interest in the great subject.

Having been "licensed" as a probationer by the Presbytery of Aberdeen, he was appointed by the Foreign Missions Committee as a missionary to Bombay, and was ordained to the ministry in July, 1838. On his arrival in India, in November, he entered with heart and soul upon missionary work, teaching, along with such admirable coadjutors as Dr. Wilson and Mr. Nesbit, in the General Assembly's Institution. He soon qualified himself for taking an effective part in vernacular work. For many years, generally in Bombay, and occasionally in Poona, he did energetically the work of an evangelist. His knowledge of the Marathi language especially was both popular and scholarly; and he took his full share in the important work of the translation and revision of the Bible in that language. He also wrote a considerable number of tracts and books in Marathi. Without disparagement of any other member of the noble band of Indian missionaries, it may be said that no one's labours were more abundant or more varied, no one's zeal more ardent, and that no one stood higher in the estimate of the European and native community. Till 1843 a missionary of the Established Church, and thereafter of the Free Church, of Scotland, he, throughout, willingly and cordially co-operated with all evangelical missionaries. He originated the Bombay Missionary Conference, and became its first secretary. Nor did he hold aloof from work among his countrymen. Always a welcome preacher to English-speaking congregations, he and his missionary colleagues ministered to the Free Church Congregation in Bombay for two years after the Disruption, and while at Poona he acted, at the request of the Government, as chaplain to the Presbyterian soldiers of a Highland regiment, as well as other British residents.

In much of his work he was aided by the co-operation, and in all of it he was sustained by the sympathy, of his like-minded and accomplished wife. Mrs. Mitchell is the daughter of one of the grand old heroes of the North, the late Rev. Mr. Flyter, of Alness. She has been all along, and happily is still, an invaluable helpmeet to her husband, and has done, and is doing, good work for the women of India.

In 1857 Mr. Mitchell came to this country, and did all in his power to foster the missionary spirit, which Dr. Duff had done so much to call forth. At this time he received the honorary degree of LL.D. from the Marischal College and University of Aberdeen. Dr. Mitchell returned to India in 1859, and laboured at Poona with his usual zeal until 1863, when, Mrs. Mitchell's health having completely broken down, and his own being much enfeebled, they returned home, and Dr. Mitchell's official connection with Western India came to an end. Almost immediately on his arrival in this country he was chosen minister of the Free Church Congregation at Broughty Ferry, an important suburb of Dundee. Dr. Candlish was convener of the Foreign Missions Committee, and until Dr. Duff's arrival, Dr. Mitchell did all in his power to lighten the convener's labours. But pastoral work necessarily claimed most of his strength. His congregation rapidly increased, and it might have been reasonably expected that the remainder of his days would be spent at home. But it was otherwise appointed. The mission staff of the Free Church in Calcutta having been greatly weakened, Dr. Mitchell was asked by the Committee, on the urgent recommendation of Dr. Duff, its convener, to proceed thither. He at once consented, although his doing so involved no small sacrifice. He proceeded to Bengal in 1867, and remained till 1873, gaining great influence over the hearts and the minds of the educated natives. He was also instrumental in forming the "Union Church"—an important European congregation at Simla. He was earnestly invited to become minister of this church; but this he declined, as he desired to work especially for missions. Before leaving India he took part in the Missionary Conference held at Allahabad, the first great Decennial Conference in India. Returning home in 1873, he became Secretary to the Foreign Missions Committee. This appointment he held till 1878, when the lamented death of Dr. Duff necessitated the making of new arrangements, and he became hon. secretary. Being thus set free from official work, he wrought none the less, but gave his whole heart to the advancement of Missions. With hand and heart, by tongue and pen, in public and in private, on platforms and in pulpits, in church courts, and temporarily in the Academic chair, he pleaded the cause of Missions—the cause of God and the cause of man. As indicating the estimate in which his scholarship was held, it may be mentioned that a vacancy having occurred, in 1863, in the professorship of Hebrew in the New College, Edinburgh, Dr. Mitchell's name was put forward by many as that of one excellently qualified for the important office. This is all the more remarkable, as Hebrew was but one of his many acquirements, and naturally was not the one to which he had latterly devoted most study. But for the fact that there was one man of pre-eminent qualifications, Dr. Mitchell would certainly have been elected.

In 1880 Dr. Mitchell went to America to attend a meeting of the "Pan-Presbyterian Council" at Philadelphia. He read a paper on "Union and Co-operation in Missions," and otherwise took part in the proceedings of the Council. At the close of the Council he did not retrace his course across the Atlantic, but proceeded westward, and "saw the manners and cities of many men," everywhere receiving a hearty American welcome, and giving and getting no small amount of blessing by private and public association with the Christians of the great Republic. From California Mrs. Mitchell and he proceeded to Japan, and thence to China and India. In India he spent fully two years most profitably in carrying out some of those studies and observations to which he could not devote so much time as his tastes would have led him to devote while he had regular work to do as a missionary. He lectured and preached incessantly all over the country. All this was without cost to his church.

He had also the opportunity of attending the second of those great catholic Missionary Conferences, the importance of which is so great. On this occasion he acted as one of two secretaries. Whether he has seen India for the last time we know not; but this is certain, that in future days, when that noble land shall be numbered among the Christian nations of the earth, the name of Dr. Murray Mitchell will stand high on the roll of those who have spent and been spent in prayerful labours for its evangelisation.

All through his career Dr. Mitchell has been a prolific writer. Most of his publications have been designed for the benefit of the Hindus; and the present writer can testify to their value for this end. Nine or ten of them, of greater or smaller size, are in Marathi; and one is trilingual—the Sanskrit, Marathi, and English being all his own.

Besides contributing many articles to magazines and reviews, Dr. Mitchell has published, in English, "Letters to Indian Youth on the Evidences of Christianity," which is in its ninth edition, and has been translated into several Indian languages; "Elements of Christian Truth;" "The Conflict of Ancient Paganism and Christianity;" the "Life of the Rev. Robert Nesbit;" a "Lecture on the Indian Mutiny;" and has contributed to the Religious Tract Society's "Present Day Tracts" treatises on "The Zendavesta," and the "Hindu Religion." His largest work, next to his "Life of Mr. Nesbit," and in some respects his most important, is entitled, "Hinduism, Past and Present." In this, his latest production, he has succeeded, probably as well as was possible, in treating a vast subject in a small space (about three hundred pages), and in investing with popular interest a subject which, very important as it is, is not attractive to the general public. All his writings give evidence of much labour and care. His style is always correct and graceful; his thought is always logical, and his expression always clear. Similar qualities characterise his public speaking. In the pulpit or on the platform he is always in earnest. His oratory is chaste and often powerful. By high character and earnest devotion to the noblest of all causes he has gained a high position in public esteem, and a higher in that of those who know him best. It needs scarcely be said that a man of Dr. Mitchell's literary taste has not spent threescore and ten years in this beautiful and poetry-exciting world, without poetical expression of his burning thoughts; in point of fact he has not.

It should be added that Mrs. Mitchell has also written several interesting books. Since the days of Bishop Heber, amidst the innumerable books descriptive of Indian places and Indian peoples, by male and female writers, very few indeed are more graphic, and not one indicates a warmer heart towards the country and its people, than her "Missionary's Wife among the Wild Tribes of Bengal," "In India," and "In Southern India."

For several years the state of health of husband and wife has necessitated their spending the winter in a mild climate, and Dr. Mitchell has ministered, with great acceptance, to a congregation of residents and tourists, British and American, at Nice.

COW-CROSS MISSION HOME OF REST.—A Christian lady very kindly gave the use of her residence, Pelham Villa, Tulse-hill, Ventnor, and also bequeathed the whole of the furniture to the Mission. The house has been opened as a Home of Rest, and already several of the weary workers of the Mission have derived benefit from it. Since Mr. Catlin and his friends have been at Ventnor they have been actively engaged in evangelistic work. Open-air meetings have been held at Wroxall, Godshill, and other places, as well as on Sunday afternoons on the Shanklin Beach in connection with the Shanklin Mission-hall. Besides Mr. Catlin and his workers, several visitors, including Rev. Archibald G. Brown, took an active part, the word being with power. Mr. Catlin has taken the Ventnor Literary Institute for Sunday evening services, which have, up to the present, been well attended.

A HARVEST MEDITATION.

Throughout our land there has been the joy of harvest, its abundance coming like a throb of rich harmony athwart the minor key of our national depression. Presently there will be in every parish—if there has not been—a harvest thanksgiving in devout and fitting acknowledgment of the "Lord of the harvest." We would like to spiritualise the joy, and utilise the thanksgiving in some practical lessons.

Has our Christian life ever known this joy? It has had many. The "joy unspeakable" of rejoicing in a Saviour unseen, but realised by faith (1 Peter i. 8). The great rejoicing in a lively hope of an inheritance incorruptible, reserved for us who are kept for it by the power of God (1 Pet. i. 3—6). The joy of "seeing Jesus again," after a temporary cloud of providential circumstance has hidden Him from our view (John xvi. 22). All these, and many other bright spots in our history, certify to us that "the kingdom of God is . . . joy" on earth, leading up to "the joy of our Lord" in heaven. But there is one joy beyond all these, a joy so far beyond the others in freedom from all alloy of self that it is called by Christ "My joy," a joy so intense that it was probably the tonic used by the angel who "strengthened Him" when in the Gethsemane anguish. His soul was so "exceeding sorrowful" that He evidently feared that it would be "unto death," before He could accomplish the great atoning work on Calvary. We are told that for the joy set before Him He endured the cross, and this joy is "the joy of harvest"—the joy of bringing "wheat," redeemed and sanctified human souls, into the heavenly garner.

In the Lord's life on earth we have continual illustration of this master passion so possessing his soul that it truly became his meat and drink. We look in upon the midnight interview with Nicodemus, and hear the vivid, eager words falling on the ear of his inquirer from the lips of Him who spake as never man spake. No trace of the day's weariness, no impatience with the dulness of the great man, but an exposition of the truth that must have lasted far on into the night, in which Divine wisdom itself seemed to excel itself in clearness of statement, apt use of typical Jewish history, and simple unfolding of the way of salvation, so that, to this day, the record is our best text-book in dealing with inquirers.

Soon afterwards we find Him taking a forty miles' journey to meet another case of need, a strange contrast to the cultured "master in Israel," the poor Samaritan sinner, whose outcast position in her own village made her choose the loneliness of the noontide hour for bringing home the supply of water necessary for her household requirements. And, as He saw the "living water" filter through the thick crust of prejudice into her heart with renewing power, his soul was so satisfied that the cravings of bodily hunger were forgotten, and the disciples, returning with the food they had bought, found Him in a state of such complete exaltation over physical fatigue that they wondered from what source it had come. And, lifting his eyes and seeing the saved woman becoming in her turn so quickly a worker in the great harvest-field, He bade them pray the Lord of the harvest that He would send forth more labourers into the harvest. This is the prayer that is rising from many earnest hearts to-day.

Many readers of The Christian have, during the past months, been reaping a harvest for themselves during the pleasant weeks of holiday. Rich storage of spiritual food has been garnered from attendance on conventions and religious gatherings of various kinds, and physical invigoration, too, has come to us with the freshness of mountain air and the tonic of sea breezes. And it will be part of our thanksgiving festival to "consider the poor"—the spiritually poor and famishing who surround us everywhere. Let the hallowed spiritual truth to which we have listened be used to refresh others, and the renewed physical strength we rejoice in be gladly dedicated to a life like our Master's, spent in going about "doing good." And, if the coveted harvest does not whiten before our eyes, if in our own neighbourhood sterility and unpromising material and want of co-operation from fellow-workers tempt us to discouragement, let us be content to take the coming winter for our seed-time, and to try, as we never did before, to "sow beside all waters." We shall always have the sympathy and help of Him who in his great work was "left alone," and concerning the issue of our labour we can share his confidence, "Surely my judgment is with the Lord, and my work with my God." BIBLE STUDIES.—31.

LIBERTY.

"Ye shall . . . proclaim liberty throughout all the land unto all the inhabitants thereof" (Lev. xxv. 10).

"The Lord hath anointed Me . . . to proclaim liberty to the captives, and the opening of the prison to them that are bound" (Isa. lxi. 1).

"Stand fast therefore in the liberty wherewith Christ hath made us free" (Gal. v. 1).

(1) Free from the law. "Christ hath redeemed us from the curse of the law, being made a curse for us" (Gal. iii. 13). "God sent forth his Son, made of a woman, made under the law, to redeem them that were under the law, that we might receive the adoption of sons" (Gal. iv. 4, 5). "If ye be led of the Spirit, ye are not under the law" (Gal. v. 18). "There is therefore now no condemnation to them which are in Christ Jesus" (Rom. viii. 1).

(2) Free from the dominion of sin. "Our old man is crucified with Him . . . that henceforth we should not serve sin. For he that is dead is freed from sin. . . . Sin shall not have dominion over you. . . . Now being made free from sin, and become servants to God, ye have your fruit unto holiness, and the end everlasting life" (Rom. vi.). "Abide in Me, and I in you. As the branch cannot bear fruit of itself, except it abide in the vine; no more can ye, except ye abide in Me" (John xv. 4). "I am crucified with Christ; nevertheless I live; yet not I, but Christ liveth in me; and the life which I now live in the flesh, I live by the faith of the Son of God, who loved me, and gave Himself for me" (Gal. ii. 20).

(3) Free from the fear of man. "The fear of man bringeth a snare" (Prov. xxix. 25). "We ought to obey God rather than men" (Acts v. 29). "Fear ye not the reproach of men, neither be ye afraid of their revilings. For the moth shall eat them up like a garment, and the worm shall eat them like wool; but my righteousness shall be for ever, and my salvation from generation to generation (Isa. li. 7, 8). "The very hairs of your head are all numbered. Fear ye not, therefore" (Matt. x. 30, 31). "Your life is hid with Christ in God" (Col. iii. 3).

(4) Free from anxiety. "He that spared not his own Son, but delivered Him up for us all, how shall He not with Him also freely give us all things?" (Rom. viii. 32). "Be careful for nothing; but in everything by prayer and supplication, with thanksgiving, let your requests be made known unto God. And the peace of God, which passeth all understanding, shall keep your hearts and minds through Christ Jesus" (Phil. iv. 6, 7). "Casting all all your care upon Him; for He careth for you" (1 Pet. v. 7).

(5) Free from the fear of death. "Forasmuch then as the children are partakers of flesh and blood, He also Himself likewise took part of the same; that through death He might destroy him that had the power of death, that is the devil; and deliver them who through fear of death were all their lifetime subject to bondage" (Heb. ii. 14, 15). "To live is Christ, and to die is gain. . . . I am in a strait betwixt two, having a desire to depart, and to be with Christ; which is far better" (Phil. i. 21, 23). "O death, where is thy sting? O grave, where is thy victory? The sting of death is sin; and the strength of sin is the law. But thanks be to God, which giveth us the victory through our Lord Jesus Christ" (1 Cor. xv. 55—57).

THE ROSE OF SHARON.

"I am the Rose of Sharon."—Sol. Song, ii. 1.

O Christ, sweet Rose of Sharon,
How beautiful Thou art;
Thy loveliness awaketh
The music of my heart;
I sing thy radiant glory,
Thy matchless grace and worth—
Thou fairest flower of Heaven,
Thou richest rose of earth!

From Paradise Thou camest,
In lowliness to bloom;
And o'er this weary desert
Did'st pour love's best perfume;
Beside the way of sorrow,
Where mourners come and go,
In Thee was once revealèd
The cure of care and woe.

Who found Thee, found a treasure,
Of priceless good possest;
The vision of thy beauty
Subdued the soul to rest;
No eager hand that grasped Thee,
Was e'er in anguish torn,
For underneath thy sweetness
Lay hid no piercing thorn.

When children gathered round Thee,
Enraptured with the sight,
They sang their songs of welcome,
And hailed Thee with delight;
They knew no other blossom
Which could with Thee compare:
The Altogether Lovely,
The Fairest of the Fair.

In bitterness of hatred
Men tore Thee from thy place;
They bruised Thee in their anger,
They crushed Thee with disgrace!
But from thy wounded beauty
A richer fragrance spread
Till odours of thy goodness
O'er all the world were shed.

Unnumbered hosts exalt Thee,
And find in Thee their bliss;
'Twere loss without redemption,
Thy balm of peace to miss.
Without Thee life is burdened
With ceaseless griefs and pain;
But with Thee it is gladness,
And death itself is gain.

I love Thee, Rose of Sharon,
And in this love would die;
Then to the fields of Eden
On joyous wings I'd fly.
There with adoring angels
Before Thee I would bend;
And till thy beauty faded
My song should find no end.

THE CHRISTIAN COMMUNITY.—The annual report of this Society is just to hand, and contains full details of the various agencies in operation. The headquarters of the Mission are at the Memorial Hall, Bethnal Green, where an excellent work is being carried on. Here also is situated the Bethnal Green Free Library, having 30,000 vols. on the shelves, which have been used by about the same number of readers during the past year. Ten workhouses and three casual wards are regularly visited, and the poor people are instructed and comforted with the truths of the Gospel. By the lodging-house branch a good work is being done. About thirty houses are under regular visitation, and services are held in the kitchens with much acceptance, amongst the poor homeless people who resort to them. There are twelve open-air stations in connection with the Mission, where services are held, and where thousands of street idlers and others gladly listen to the Gospel. Nearly 200,000 tracts were distributed. Several new mission halls have been taken up during the year, one opposite the Hall of Science, in Old-street, where Mr. Bradlaugh and his friends propagate their Atheistic tenets. A copy of the report can be obtained on application to the secretary, Mr. J. Atkinson, 10, Enfield-road south, Kingsland, N.

THE PAPACY:

ITS POSITION, POLICY, AND PROSPECTS.

By Rev. J. A. WYLIE, LL.D.*

THESE five centuries past, the outer and inner Papacies have been running two entirely different and opposite courses. Looked at on its political side, the Papacy is seen to be undergoing a process of decay: its political props have been mouldering into dust. Looked at on its religious side, it is seen, century by century, waxing in stature and consolidating in power.

The Papacy these centuries past has been perfecting the chain of its dogmas, laying deeper and broader the foundations of its authority, and riveting its hold upon the human conscience: in short, its career has been not unlike that of man himself, when his body decays by lapse of years, while yet his mind grows in moral and intellectual strength. The body of the Papacy has been returning to the dust out of which it was taken, but its soul, loosened from the political fetters that cramped it, and relieved from the earthly burdens that weighed it down, has been shooting higher and higher into the heavens, as if to persuade men that it is instinct with an immortal life, and endowed with a god-like strength.

The Papacy attained its political noon in the days of Innocent III., in the thirteenth century. It continued to flourish in power unimpaired, and splendour undimmed, for a century longer. In the days of John Wicliffe—whose colossal figure stands at the parting of the ages, marking the point where the modern times begin to dawn—the first great blow was dealt the political power of Rome. Then it was that the famous schism fell out. There were not one but three Popes, each claiming to be the true successor of Peter, and the real Vicegerent of God, and each anathematising the other as an undoubted impostor and a veritable Lucifer. This flagrant scandal entailed great loss of prestige on the Papacy, which it never after fully recovered. The princes of Europe were now better able to make their own terms with the Tiara, and this contributed to the emancipation of the temporal from the spiritual power.

The next stroke that befel the Papacy was the Pragmatic Sanction, in France. This arrangement guaranteed the French Church in a considerable amount of independence of the Papal See, and to the same extent abridged the Pope's power in that influential kingdom.

There followed the Statutes of Provisors, of Premunire, and of Mortmain, in England. These enactments inflicted great financial as well as great political damage on the Papacy; inasmuch as in few countries of Europe had the Pope been able to reap, from year to year, so rich a revenue, or to exercise so large a measure of power, as in England. There came next the GREAT ERA OF THE SIXTEENTH CENTURY.

The numerous and sore disasters which the Reformation brought with it to the Papacy I need not dwell upon. One-half the kingdoms of Europe revolted from under its sceptre. It was labouring to repair these immense losses, and had already recovered Bavaria, Bohemia, Hungary, and Belgium, when suddenly its sky was overcast by the darkness of the French Revolution. On the wings of that tempest came new and strange calamities to the Church of Rome. Her priests were massacred; her revenues confiscated; her dignities cast down; the very chair of her Popes was for a time suppressed;—a cup all the more bitter that papal hands held it to her lips and compelled her to drink it.

The hurricane passed, and there came a pause; the wonderful recuperative energies of Rome were put forth in effacing the ravages of the tempest, and restoring the Church to something like her former estate. But the calm was treacherous. We have seen in our own days the work of despoiling the Roman Church resumed. One Italian province has been torn from the Papacy after another, and, last of all, we have seen the top-stone put upon the political humiliations of that Church in the loss of Rome, the throne of her temporal dominion, and the chief seat of her spiritual authority. And now what do we behold? A spectacle that may well fill us with amazement and awe. The political Papacy in ruins; but out of its ruins there stands up a vast spiritual colossus! Its feet more firmly planted on the earth, and its head lifted higher into the heavens than in any former age.

Let us pause and mark the great and solemn lesson taught in this to the men now living, and to the ages to come. The power of systems for good or evil lies in their hidden springs. It is eminently so with the Papacy. Its great strength lay not in the array of princes and kingdoms that stood round it, but in its inner principles. It was these, and not the swords and faggots at its service, which enabled it to blind the understanding, to affright men with imaginary terrors; to make them call evil good and good evil, to subjugate the conscience, and sink society into political and moral serfdom. But the world did not understand this; and now God is about to give us a new experience of the Papacy. He has compelled it to come out of its political organisation: to stand forth naked and disembodied before the world, clothed with tremendous spiritual sanctions and attributes which enable it to awe the conscience and dominate kingdoms as much as ever. Does not this show that it was the spiritual Papacy which all along was the world's oppressor?

OUTWARD DECAY: INWARD GROWTH.

This brings us to the second branch of our subject, namely, the growth and consolidation which has been going on within, contemporaneously with decadence in the exterior of the Papacy. The increase of its spiritual forces has kept pace with the decay and waste of its political appliances. The grand aim of the Papacy from the beginning was to be as God, and to rule all men with a divine and infallible authority. It has never lost sight of this great idea, it has never parted with the hope of realising it, it has never turned aside from the pursuit; and with a consistency and success of which there is no other example in all history, it has gone steadily onward, century after century, through defeat this hour and triumph the next, to that great consummation. But the hope of reaching that dazzling eminence it rested mainly on its spiritual, not on its earthly appliances. It knew that the fashion of the world changeth; that laws, institutions, and dynasties are mutable, that thrones may be lost by weakness or overturned by revolution, but that principles are eternal; and therefore never did it suffer check or defeat outwardly but it cast itself anew upon its fundamental and abiding principles; it refurbished and perfected those ethereal weapons, which alone could give it such a conquest as it aimed at achieving. But for this, the Papacy would have fallen long ago: it would have disappeared with the medieval kingdoms amid which it arose. But so far from this, while its companion monarchies are in the grave, the Papacy still flourishes; and here it is, engaged in a great muster of its spiritual forces, now complete in number and perfect in strength, preparatory to a more deadly encounter with Liberty and Christianity than it ever yet waged.

Let me briefly describe how this has come about, and at the same time offer a forecast of what it is likely to end in. The late pontificate—I mean that of Pius IX.—was wholly passed in recasting the dogmas of the Papacy, and in giving them their fullest possible development. Conclusions to which the Papacy had all along logically pointed, but to which no one, at least in modern times, had dared to push it, were decreed as dogmas, and marshalled in hostile array against modern society. This was the life-work of Pius IX.—I mean, of the doctors and Jesuits of the Curia; for, personally, the Pope himself was not equal to so great a labour. And for what end was this work undertaken? Not merely to recover the temporal sovereignty—in other words, the Papal States—a comparatively small matter; but to put the Papacy in a position to resume that far vaster temporal supremacy which the Popes of the middle ages had exercised over the whole of Christendom.

THE SYLLABUS, AND INFALLIBILITY.

In order to this it was necessary, first of all, to set full before the world's eye, and fix deeply in the world's belief, the idea of a divine Vicegerency—a great spiritual authority on whose shoulder God had laid the government of the world, and whom He had qualified to bear so great a burden by the superhuman qualities with which He had endowed it. Hence the two great outstanding acts of the late Pontificate: I mean, the proclamation of the Syllabus and the Infallibility. The first, the Syllabus to wit, is a storehouse of the laws of the Church of Rome, as they have come at last to be stamped with the impress of perfection and unchangeableness. The second, the Infallibility, is the focus into which the whole legislation of Rome has been gathered, and whence it again radiates forth over the world in a tyranny that absorbs all rights, crushes all consciences, nullifies all laws, and dominates all kings and nations. In these two documents is presented the perfect image of that superhuman Vicegerency which, according to Papal teaching, God has set up upon the earth.

And what now is the work in hand for which this vast and careful preparation has been made? That work consists of two parts: the first is to combat the Revolution; the second is to restore the Christian State.

As regards the Revolution, which the Church of Rome declares it is one grand branch of her work to combat, it is necessary to have a correct idea of what she means by "Revolution." In the Papal vocabulary words do not mean the same things which they do in ordinary speech. The term "Revolution" in the mouth of the Pope does not denote the atheistic and destructive doctrines of Communism and Socialism, as one might suppose: Revolution in Papal phraseology is but another name for Constitutional Government. This the Pope denounces as Naturalism: because it is government on the natural principles of reason and equity, and because it brings two execrable impieties, as the Pope holds them, in its train: toleration of opinion and liberty of conscience. The German Empire is a revolution; the French Republic is a revolution; and the kingdom of Italy, with Rome for its capital, is the greatest revolution of all. This is the revolution that Rome is to combat, holding it to be a wicked and blasphemous rebellion against God, and his Vicegerent on earth.

---

* A paper partially read at the meeting of the Evangelical Alliance at Ryde, September 21.

"THE CHRISTIAN STATE."

The second part of the work now on hand is the restoration of the "Christian State." And what do the Popes mean by the Christian State? For Papal language and ordinary language, as I have just reminded you, are two different things. By the Christian State is meant simply a world governed by the Pope and the Canon law. In order to see this it is necessary to attend a moment to the doctrine of the Church of Rome on the head of Society. Society, say the theologians of that Church, may exist in two states: (1) in a state of nature; (2) in a state of grace. By Society in a state of nature they mean Society as God constituted it at the beginning, guiding itself by the light of nature and reason.

It is the mission of the Church, they tell us, to lift Society out of that low and corrupt condition, and to elevate it to a higher and holier sphere—to bring it into a state of grace. How do they do this? They begin by confiscating all merely civil rights and privileges, and by subordinating, if not wholly abolishing, all civil magistracy. And with what do they replace it? Why, with the magistracy of the Church. All the obligations which the subject owes to the law and the monarch of the country in which he lives, are subordinated or transferred to the spiritual authority; that is, to the Pope and the Canon law. The State governed by the Pope and Canon law is the Christian State; and this it is the grand object of the Vatican to restore. Constitutional government, says the Syllabus, is a revolt against the world's Divine King, whose seat is on the Seven Hills. The modern theories of liberty and authority are emanations from the pit; they are the promptings of Lucifer. It is the mission of the Church to dethrone that tyrant, and rescue society from the abyss in which he has plunged it, and place it upon the rock of the Church, where alone it can enjoy repose. Then will be seen the "Christian State." A faint image of this happy time was exhibited in the thirteenth century during the reign of Innocent III. That image will revive and be seen in the greater splendour and completeness of that kingdom over which the Popes of the future will sway their sceptre.

But how is this grand project to be realised? What are the instrumentalities which are to be put in operation for quelling this great revolt, and casting out that legion of demons which have taken possession of modern society, and which are known by the various names of constitutionalism, toleration, liberty of conscience, and so forth?

In the Syllabus we see the programme of what the future is to behold, realised: we see there the foundations traced out of that great Babel which the builders of the Vatican are about to erect. But how, you ask, are the ideas and principles of the Syllabus to be rendered into facts? In order to this a great and various mechanism has been constructed, and is being put at this hour into busy operation all over Europe.

THE SCHOOL.

There is, first, the School. Wise for her own interests, the Church of Rome has taken into her own hands the education of youth, in some countries partially, in others entirely; she is training young Europe in the principles of the Syllabus. In France she has a staff of not less than 70,000 persons, male and female, engaged in the work of teaching youth. What are these 70,000 doing but binding down France in the chains of the Syllabus? In Italy and Spain the schools are worked mostly by priests and monks. In Belgium "Christian brothers" teach the boys, and nuns the girls. In Southern Germany the teachers in the schools are mostly clerical: it is the same in Austria. Here are millions and millions being reared in the Syllabus—being taught as the truth of God that all merely civil laws and civil rulers, so far as they are not in consonance with Canon law, are moral nullities, and that the Pope is the one God-appointed and divine governor of the earth.

The generation now being so trained will soon have the affairs of Europe in their hands. They will be the cabinet ministers of monarchs, the legislators of kingdoms; the editors of newspapers; teachers in colleges and schools; generals in the army; and, especially, they will form the rank and file of the soldiery which will fight our future campaigns. It was the schools opened in Germany by the Jesuits that furnished the soldiers for the Thirty Years' War. The same tactics are being repeated, and a new generation, trained in the schools, will soon be seen legislating, writing, preaching, and fighting for the suppression of "Naturalism," that is, Civil Liberty, and the subjection of the world to the divine Vicegerency of the Pope; and when it has come to pass that no human being is suffered to form an opinion in morals and religion, unless in accordance with the Syllabus, then the Jesuits will sing their pæan over their completed work of restoring the "Christian State."

THE CONFESSIONAL.

The Confessional is an ancient institution, suffered to languish in the last century, but which is again starting into new life, working with greater intensity and daily widening its range. Think of that tribunal, set up in every city, in every family, high and low, and in every bosom, and you will see what a power there is here to mould society, to write on the conscience of Europe the doctrines of the Syllabus. And think of the moral weakness of the men and women of Popish countries, their manliness and virtue sapped by the teachings of their Church, and their patriotism and loyalty undermined by the pretended divine supremacy of the spiritual over the temporal power. Such a population is powerless to resist the organisation and wiles of Rome. As clay in the hands of the potter, so are such men and women in the hands of the confessor.

The revival of Pilgrimages is another sign of our times, prognosticating trouble. Nothing is better fitted to fan into a flame the fanaticism of the masses of Popish Europe than these pilgrimages. Lines of pilgrims on the roads of Europe have, in former times, been the sure prelude of the march of armies for the extirpation of heresy. Nothing is easier than to transform a band of devotees, with rosary and palmer-staff, into a host of crusaders, who recite their breviary, or sing their aves, clad in shirt of mail, and begirt with consecrated sword for the rooting out of heresy. A signal from the Vatican, and lo, where pilgrims are now seen every summer wending their way in peaceful guise to some favourite shrine, armed warriors would be seen marching to fight the battles of the Church.

ORDERS AND FRATERNITIES.

We see another yet more unmistakable sign that Rome, like Job's war-horse, scents the coming battle, in the revival of orders and confraternities. Numerous religious orders have been resuscitated of late, and almost all of them partake of a military character. Among these may be mentioned in particular the Order of St. Dominic. To the Order of St. Dominic was committed in an especial manner the task of rooting out heresy and heretics, their chief weapon being the sword, in other words, the Inquisition. It was the hordes of St. Dominic that overran the south of France, and swept away the young Protestantism of the thirteenth century in a tempest of fire and blood; and when we see that order again called out, we take it that it is for service, and that the possibility is not unthought of, of sweeping away the Protestant liberties of the nineteenth century by a similar stroke, and of re-enacting in modern Christendom the scenes of slaughter and rapine which were witnessed in Provence and Languedoc in the middle ages.

This vast military organisation is subdivided into other orders, all of which are armed with the sword as the main instrument of their work. There is the confraternity of the "Sacred Heart," supposed to number a million of members; there is the "Militia of Jesus Christ"; there is the "Crusade of St. Peter." The very names breathe of war. They are borrowed from ages of violence, and they portend times of bloodshed. Besides the societies already named there is another in the French army, called the Legion of St. Maurice. It is an army within an army, and the priest is its general. The resuscitation of these orders plainly shows that War is the ultimate resort which Rome has in her eye. The one idea of all these societies is the doctrine of the Syllabus, and their one aim is the "restoration of the Christian State"—in other words, the wreck of modern society, and the subjection of the world to the rule of the Vatican.

ONE TREMENDOUS MECHANISM.

There is another weapon for the coming conflict to which I can refer in only a single sentence — a space altogether disproportioned to its transcendent importance: I refer to the Infallibity. The Infallibility it is that gathers up all the instrumentalities I have just enumerated, and combines them into one tremendous mechanism, and makes the working of that mechanism so swift and crushing. It strikes with the promptitude and power of omnipotence. Take a moment's survey of it. At the summit sits the Pope, divine and infallible. Immediately below the pontiff come some thousand bishops, all of whom are sworn to obey him; below the bishops come hundreds of thousands of priests, and hundreds of thousands of monks and nuns, with a machinery of schools, colleges, and confessionals. Below the priests come millions and millions of devotees, dispersed over all the countries of the globe. From the Mount of Infallibility goes forth the fiat. It descends to the rank below, these send it on to the more numerous rank below them, and these to the yet more numerous rank below them; and thus it goes on, widening and widening, till it sets a world in motion. Of all these millions the Pope is the master. But has the Pope himself no master? Yes, he has a Master, and that Master is the Society of Jesus. Behind his throne stand in shadow the sons of Loyola. The Pope is simply the mouth through which the Jesuits speak, the hand by which they execute their deeds; and be the crime to which they prompt ever so enormous, he must issue the order for its perpetration, or prepare the robe and ring which are used at the funeral of popes. The Pope cannot abdicate. The man who once sits down in the fatal chair of St. Peter can never again leave it, for should he descend from his throne he would find a Jesuit waiting for him with a cup of poison at the foot of the steps.

PROGRESS IN GREAT BRITAIN.

After this bird's-eye view of the Papacy in Europe, let us inquire, What position has it obtained among ourselves? Great Britain is the head of the world: if the Papacy shall succeed in restoring its dominion in Great Britain, it will by the same act restore it all over the earth. This is its grand ambition, and at this hour it is within measurable distance of this supreme victory.

In 1829 the Papacy, which had been stripped of legislative powers by the Revolution settlement, was again admitted into the British Parliament. (1) Since that year it has made rapid strides towards political supremacy. It has more than quadrupled its agencies—its priests, chapels, congregations—so that there is not a city or town, scarce is there a shire or parish, that has not been brought under its influence, and is now a seat of its propaganda. (2) This regular mechanism it has supplemented with a growing array of monasteries, nunneries, colleges, and schools. And in these last it is not the Roman Catholic youth only that are being educated; thousands of Protestant children have been drawn into these seminaries, and are being prepared to swell the Popish population of the future. (3) As if Rome's own action were not enough, we ourselves have grafted a Popish ministration on every department of the public service. Paid Popish chaplains are busy at work in our prisons, in our reformatories, in our workhouses, in our army and navy; these various departments are being utilised for the conveyance of Romanism over the empire, and the permeation of the body politic with an influence which, like a deadly poison, once received into the veins of a nation, inevitably kills it. (4) A regular hierarchy has been established in the three kingdoms. Canon law has been proclaimed, and there is not a Romanist in England, Scotland, or Ireland who is not, through the Confessional, made amenable to Canon law, and ruled by it in his political and social acts, as well as in his religious duties. Canon law knows but one monarch, and to that monarch the undivided allegiance of every Romanist is due. This is an empire within an empire, if ever there was such.

(5) If the Papacy has created an imperium in imperio in the nation, it has planted a Parliament within a Parliament in the Legislature. A phalanx of eighty-four members represents it in the British House of Commons. These eighty-four men are united, inscrutable, resolute, defiant, and extort submission to their demands by the simple yet formidable expedient of obstruction. Through them the Vatican has made itself the master of the Cabinet, the terror of the Parliament, and largely the ruler of the nation.

(6) Moreover, Popish Provincial Councils are of frequent occurrence. What is the function of these Councils? They concert plans of political action applicable to emergencies, and their resolutions, countersigned at Rome, are binding on all Romanists, who must act on the lines chalked out for them, whatever confusion or calamity their action may cause, and whatever penalty it may expose themselves to from the law of the land. The nation against whose peace and unity these intrigues are being formed knows nothing of it all the while, till some outbreak or explosion proclaims on the house-top what the Council had previously planned in secret.

THE IRISH FULCRUM.

(7) Ireland is still the main fulcrum on which the Papacy rests its lever in its attempts to overturn the Protestant kingdom of Great Britain. The cherished policy of the Jesuits has ever been to keep Ireland ignorant, wretched, and agitated; to separate it from Great Britain, erect it into an independent kingdom under the rule of the Vatican, and to employ it for the destruction of British liberty and Protestantism. This scheme has already, twice over, been on the eve of accomplishment. It has been a third time revived, and more nearly carried to completion than on the occasion of the two former attempts. There is now a pause, but it will soon be over, and the work of overthrowing "Protestant ascendancy" in Ireland will be again resumed. Protestant ascendancy has been defined to consist in three things: (1) the Established Protestant Church of Ireland; (2) the Protestant landlords of Ireland; (3) the Protestant education of Ireland. Great progress has of late been made in destruction of all three. The Established Protestant Church has fallen. The Irish system of education has been revolutionised, and well-nigh wrecked. First, the Kildare schools were put down; next the National schools, and the Queen's colleges were denounced as Godless, and abandoned by the Government, to be re-fashioned and refitted by the priesthood. And, last of all, a Popish University was established, the effect of which has been to place the education of Ireland in the power of a Popish conclave, and the schools in the hands of the Christian Brothers, who educate their pupils on the principles of the Syllabus; or, as Lord John Russell expressed it, minister poison to the youth of Ireland as their daily food.

The most ominous part of this business is the changes which have been effected in our Statute Book. The whole legislation of the past five hundred years has been diligently searched, and not an act or statute which could offer the smallest hindrance to the advance of Popery to place and power in the State, but has been weeded out and swept away. Upwards of forty statutes of this character have been repealed. All the securities embodied in the Emancipation Act of 1829, with one exception, have been abolished. All the securities in the Revolution Settlement, with one exception, have been swept away. All offices under the Crown, the English woolsack excepted, are now open to Romanists. The oath of the Royal Supremacy has been swept away. The oath recognising the Protestant succession has been swept away. The Act of Settlement alone is left, the one barrier between us and a Popish reign. If that solitary Act were to share the fate of the others, we should speedily see a vassal of the Pope on the throne of Britain.

THE JESUITS AT WORK.

It is further noteworthy that this whole scheme of the subjugation of Great Britain to the Vatican is led by the Jesuits. So Dr. Manning lately assured us. This body is again all-powerful in the Church of Rome. Even the Pope must obey them. They walk to and fro with silent foot in our country; they enter our houses, corrupt our families, teach in our schools, write articles in our newspapers, create strifes in our churches, preach evangelical sermons in our pulpits, and in a hundred ways urge onward the work of subjugating Great Britain, and through Britain the world, to the yoke of the Papacy. The latest news from Rome is that the newly-erected bishoprics in India are to be filled with Jesuits.

There remains but one other statement, and it is, perhaps, the most distressing and humiliating of all. This vast propaganda is fed by our own money. The sum total of grants from Great Britain now given for Popish uses year by year, is one million two hundred thousand pounds. That one million two hundred thousand pounds we give for our own undoing.

POPERY AND SOCIALISM.

The situation is farther complicated by another and very formidable fact. A new foe to liberty has suddenly sprung up in the leading countries of Europe. I refer to that Atheistic Socialism which has had so rapid and portentous a development of late, in France, in Italy, and more especially in Germany, and even in Russia. I remember the historian Ranke, whom I had the privilege of meeting in Berlin sixteen years ago, describing it to me as a church-rising against the Church. His description was not untruthful; for Socialism has a creed after a fashion, and its devotees are knit together by a sacred bond, the belief even that as the children of one mother, Nature to wit, all things are a common heritage. Socialism, like the Papacy, attacks the modern state, but it attack it from a different point. It would remodel the world through the preliminary process of destroying it. It seeks to abolish property, overturn government, and extinguish the idea of a personal God.

One would think that so terrible a programme of reform would find but few adherents in so educated a country as Germany. And yet it is otherwise. At the Parliamentary election of nineteen years ago, less than a score of Socialist votes were enrolled in the city of Berlin. At next election, not fewer than 36,000 such votes were tendered, and at the election of 1877, the number of Socialist votes in the city of Berlin alone had risen to 56,000. The number of Socialists in Germany is estimated at about half a million (450,000). This fact may well cause serious alarm on the part of every friend of order. And yet, when one thinks of the religious condition of Germany, one cannot well see how it can be otherwise. Half its people, speaking generally, never open the Bible, never go to church, never come under the influence of religious ordinances. Here is a vast void at the heart of the German nation, and what can rush in to fill that void, but just some such atheistic system as we see filling it.

This vastly enhances the dangers of the situation. We behold the European world falling asunder, dividing into two great camps. On the one side we have the Governments and their friends; on the other; Communism and its adherents. The Ultramontanes are sure to come in between the two, and to play the same game they have been playing of late years in the British Senate. The Papacy will ally itself now with the one and now with the other, just as it may subserve its own interests for the moment. It will serve both parties that it may betray and destroy both, and remain in the end master of the situation. It will go to the kings, and it will say to them, "These men will uproot everything. Neither order, nor property, nor religion will they leave standing. I alone can save you from their fury. But in order that I may be able to save you, you must renew your former concordats with me. You must give free scope to my Canon law in your kingdoms; you must give all liberty to my bishops and priests in dealing with your subjects. If you do that, I will tame these wild spirits; I will speedily quell these revolted masses, and lay them bound in chains at the foot of your thrones. But if you decline my bargain I shall retire, and then the deluge will inevitably roll in and overwhelm you."

If the governments of Europe, in the hope of escaping the danger, should cast themselves into the arms of the Papacy, their alliance with the Ultramontanes will bring Europe again under a great despotism. If, on the other hand, the kings should repel the advances of the Papacy, and the Ultramontanes combine their power with the Communists, the attack on law and order will become yet more formidable, and will be pushed on with persistent and vengeful vigour. The Church of Rome will show that she knows how to chastise those who will not permit her to rule them, and destroy those who decline to be saved by her. A great revolution will flow over Europe. And the Papacy having flung throne and law into the abyss, the Ultramontanes will grapple with the Communists, and either conquer or be conquered by them.

A CATACLYSM APPROACHING.

The affairs of Europe appear to me to be tending at this hour to a great cataclysm: a cataclysm of despotism, should the kings and the Ultramontanes combine; a cataclysm of revolution should the Ultramontanes and Communists contract alliance. There is only one thing that can prevent this great catastrophe, even the rapid diffusion of the Gospel in Europe. But I see nothing at this hour to justify the hope of that. Neither the populations nor the governments of Europe show any great desire for the Word of God, or any disposition to receive the Gospel. Till the Gospel enter there can be no national conscience, and till a national conscience be created there can be no basis, I do not say for piety, but for civil order and constitutional government. So far as I can see, no true basis for permanent liberty has yet been laid by the Continental kingdoms. They are in the presence of forces to which they have no opposing element of equal or greater power, and how they can escape being broken up, I do not very well see. They have the Commune beneath them, they have Rome above them, and between these nether and upper mill-stones it may yet happen that they will be ground to powder.

YOUNG "FRIENDS" AND MISSIONS.

The young "Friends" at Stoke Newington have formed a "Juvenile Missionary Helpers' Union" for organising mutual work and assistance for the stations of the "Friends' Foreign Mission Association." They make, or collect, articles of clothing, fancy work, drawings, pictures, toys, &c., as prizes for the native teachers and children.

A letter just received (Sept. 22) by one of the members from Miss Clara Herbert, of the Friends' Mission at Faravohitra, Antananarivo, says: "We thank your branch of the M.H.U. for the good and useful things they have sent out to us. I am sure you would all feel repaid did you see the pleasure these things give to the people who receive them." They give thirty prizes every half year (three to each of the ten classes) for proficiency in the Scripture examinations. Work-boxes, scissors, &c., are very acceptable. Miss Herbert mentions, also, the great utility of "Mrs. Leach's Practical Fancy Work-basket," a publication containing engravings of patterns and needlework, &c. These have been very helpful and suggestive to the Malagasy girls, who are very clever in lace and needlework.

Perhaps, in many other places, the young readers of The Christian may be able to form "Missionary Helpers' Unions" for the aid of their own foreign connections, or for some branch of the missions of various churches at work in Asia, or Africa, or elsewhere.

For the Young.

"LITTLE WOMEN" IN STEPNEY.

[In former years we have taken out of Mrs. Hilton's report, for the benefit of our younger readers, the interesting facts she gives about the experiences of her "bairns" at the Stepney Crèche. Once more the report reaches us, and we are sure that some extracts will be welcome to young and old alike.]

Alice and Nellie have passed the fourth standard, and brought home prizes for good conduct, &c. We have found this plan to answer so well that we shall continue to send three or four to the examinations, in order to pass which they have to attend the school six months previously. All our schoolroom children are progressing favourably. Florrie, Annie, Bessie, and Kitty are doing well. Rose and Lizzie have been very delicate. They were at our Country Home for some months, where they improved a little, but they are not growing and their health still gives us great anxiety.

We have a very pleasant incident to report. A cot in the Convalescent Home at Rhyl has been placed at our disposal and has been occupied for several months by little Owen since his recovery from typhoid fever. We shall soon exchange him for a very delicate mite named Lucy Mary. This dear little child came to us from Guy's Hospital. She had been there for some months, and her mother, seeing that the nurse was interested in her, said, "You can keep her if you like, I don't want her." One of the students, who had subscribed to a cot in the Crèche for ten or twelve years, wrote to ask if Lucy Mary could be taken into the Home when she left the hospital. We had room so we gladly received the poor little waif. We have since received several collections from the nurses and students. We recently received a little boy named Edward, whose father left his home and has never been heard of. The young mother took a situation, and pays for her other baby, who is six months old. She is looking forward to the time when she may be able to make a home for her children.

A few weeks ago Her Royal Highness Princess Christian came into the neighbourhood to open a bazaar at St. James's Church; the vicar, the Rev. R. K. Arbuthnot, kindly invited forty of our children to act as a diminutive guard of honour. Our readers can imagine how charmed they were, and when Her Royal Highness graciously noticed them, their delight was complete.

On New Year's Eve the eagerly expected Santa Claus did not fail to bring abundant gifts of toys, sweets, and dolls. These last are tenderly cherished all the year, and the operation of dressing them forms an occupation for many an afternoon after school. One day the materials suddenly gave out, and, while some of the dolls were very gaily dressed, there was scarcely anything left for the others. "Never mind," said Polly, "we can call the grand ones Romans and the others Ancient Britons." One night when all the children were in bed, Violet was very inpatient with a restless little neighbour. "Why don't you go to sleep?" she said severely. "I think you must be an Australian, for they stay awake all night." This was the conclusion she arrived at after her geography lesson.

Little Lydia, who came to us while her mother was in the country, cried bitterly when she missed her good-night kiss, and would not be comforted until Kitty crept softly out of bed, and, coming to her side, said, "Poor little thing, don't cry; mother will come back, I'm sure she will." Then Kitty sighed heavily. Her own mother, she knew, had gone to that silent land whence there is no coming back.

Several children have left us during the year. Elsie Stoneman, who was placed with us by a lady who had rescued her from a fate worse than death, was taken by her to New Zealand.

Little Emma was sent to her father as we found that he was able to support her.

Daisy is still very delicate. Her little sister Mary was with us for some time in the winter. She was in very delicate health, but was improving under our care. We were much distressed when her father, overwhelmed with grief at the loss of a dear little boy of seven years old, came and took little Mary away. She was far too frail to endure a life of hardship, and she only lived a few weeks. So the poor man in the selfishness of his love threw away all chance of the child's recovery.

During the winter dear little Marion, who had been ill for more than a year with dropsy, was admitted into the London Temperance Hospital. She had previously been for two months in the Children's Hospital at Shadwell, where the doctors pronounced her case hopeless; but, seeing that her strength was failing, we could not bear to let her die without giving her another chance. Everything was done for her ease and comfort, but it was impossible to save her life, and after about three months the Good Shepherd took her into his safe keeping. She had just reached her seventh year, and was the only child of a widowed mother, who was in service. This poor mother's heart was very desolate, for she had woven such bright hopes of a future, when she would have her little gentle Marion by her side again.

FOR JESUS' SAKE.

Last summer a lady of good position asked us to admit her little niece of eight years of age as a paying pupil in the Institution; "but," she added, "I should tell you she is such a little Shitânie (she Satan) that no one can manage her." And her roguish little face, with shrewd brown eyes, confirmed the aunt's testimony. And a time, indeed, we had after our Shitânie's admission. How many fights, how many attempted runnings-away! A nice dolly first secured her affections for the school, and then a place in her little heart was gained for the "Frangie," as she persisted in calling me. But I nearly lost it when a bad cough called for some medicine, and Shitânie's hands and feet had to be held to get the sweet mixture down. This seemed too undignified a proceeding to repeat, so another course was thought of. Marie was sent for next day to my room, and, after settling her comfortably on the divan, the following conversation ensued: "Marie, do you know who loves you most in the world?" "Yes; my mother." "No, someone more than your mother." The twinkling eyes seemed to consider a moment doubtfully: "Well, perhaps my father; but I don't think so." "No, someone more than your father or your mother, better than both." "No, I don't know; no one loves me more." "Marie, did you never hear of the Lord Jesus Christ, and what He did for you?" "No, I never heard!" After telling her simply of that wonderful love that brought the Lord to die on the cross, and for her, I asked, "Now, Marie, the Lord did this for you; if He wants you to do something for Him, wouldn't you like to do it?" A great struggle in her face, and then was jerked out, "Ma biddy ishrub dowa" (I don't want to drink medicine). "But do you think it was easy to have those nails thrust in, and couldn't you do something a little hard for Him? Supposing we kneel down and ask Him to help you?" After prayer it was proposed that she should ask, "Lord Jesus, help me to take my medicine to please Thee!" Then, "Marie, did you ask that with your heart or with your mouth?" and Marie honestly confessed that it was with her mouth. "Now ask with your heart." Presently we rose, the medicine was poured out and Marie drank it off, adding, "I'll come again in the afternoon and take some more!"

And so I found on going to look for her that she had taken it of her own accord!

The child changed wonderfully after that, and became a pleasure to us all. One day the secret came out. A big girl, rather lazy, was not ready to rise when the 6 a.m. bell sounded. It does cost an effort on a cold morning, with a sharp wind blowing, to turn out of the warm bed to the marble floor, and then descend to the lavatory. Marie was always up, and had wondered over the other's indolence many days. At last she went to the bed-side, and said, "Labeebie, don't you know that the Lord Jesus died on the cross for you, and you don't want to go down to the lavatory and wash to please Him!"

This is the secret of well-doing that Marie has learnt and practises. The arrow shot at a venture about the medicine has done its work, and pleasing the Lord who died for her makes all now easy for the child. The testimony of her mother is: "We don't know Marie now, the Shitânie is changed to an angel!"—"True Stories from the British Syrian Schools."

THE EVANGELICAL ALLIANCE.

CONFERENCE AT RYDE, I.W.

(Specially Reported.)

Last year, the British Organisation of this Alliance held its annual reunion in the busy northern city of Glasgow. This year it has migrated southward to the breezy heights of Ryde, in the Isle of Wight. The meetings, extending from Tuesday to Thursday, were held in the Town Hall.

RECEPTION MEETING.

The attendance of townspeople at the Conversazione and public meeting on Tuesday evening must have been considerably lessened by the dampness of the evening, though there was a large muster of active friends of the Alliance—the platform showing a goodly array of members of the Council and of the local committee. Delegates were present from Aberdeen in the north to Ventnor in the south, and from many towns and cities between; from Dublin, Belfast, and Waterford, in Ireland; from Switzerland, and from New York. General Carr Tate was in the chair. After an hour of social and fraternal intercourse, the public proceedings opened with the appropriate hymn :—

> Great the joy when Christians meet!
> Christian fellowship how sweet!
> When, their theme of praise the same,
> They exalt Jehovah's name.

Rev. W. H. Redknap, of Ryde (Episcopalian), read the fourteenth chapter of John's Gospel, and Rev. W. S. Davis (Baptist) led the assembly in prayer, earnestly invoking the blessing of God on the engagements of the Conference. "Make thy Church more manifestly one," he prayed, "that the world may know that Christ hath come. Look in mercy on dark lands, and lands that are shadowed by superstitions and vain traditions, and let the darkness speedily flee away." All the people joined in repeating the Disciples'—commonly called the Lord's—Prayer.

Letters of apology for absence, with fervent wishes for a time of much blessing, were read by Mr. A. J. Arnold (one of the secretaries) from Lord Polwarth, President of the Alliance, from the Bishop of Exeter, Sir H. Verney, and Sir W. Muir, Vice-Presidents, and others.

In the name of the local committee, the Chairman offered a warm word of welcome to Ryde, and referred to the great services the Alliance had rendered to the Church universal, by its intervention on behalf of those who are persecuted for righteousness' sake. Further words of welcome to "the seagirt Isle" were uttered by Rev. J. W. Watts, of Ryde, a veteran minister of the Gospel of fifty-five years' standing. The sentiments of his address were strongly in unison with the distinguishing features of the Alliance, and fell on sympathetic ears and responsive hearts; all the more because of the unction and deep feeling that marked the speaker's words. True Christians, said he, are all indwelt by the one Spirit, and believe in the one Saviour; therefore, they may well be of one heart and one mind, seeking the peace and prosperity of the one Church of Christ. Oh for more and more of the spirit of love, for which there can be no substitute. May these meetings lead us to consider how we may unite in spreading the sweet savour of the name of Jesus—not magnifying small points of difference, but desiring to cultivate the spirit of mutual affection and esteem. Our lot is cast in eventful times. Clouds seem to be gathering around us, but faith can pierce them, and see the brightness that lies beyond. It is the privilege of the believer to look upwards, and know that the day of his redemption draweth nigh. As coming from one himself hovering on the brink of the other world, the closing utterances of the aged saint were pathetic and impressive in the last degree.

Responsive and cordial words, on behalf of the Council and the visitors, were spoken by Mr. Donald Matheson, Chairman of the Council, who described the address of Mr. Watts as "felicitous, full of Christian truth and of brotherly love." If the ties of a common humanity are strong, and justly so, how much greater should be the strength of the oneness that comes from the brotherhood that springs from faith in Christ?

As a representative of the Alliance in America, Dr. Gideon Draper cordially voiced the greetings of his fellow Christians from across the sea. Among the bonds that draw and keep together the Christians on both sides of the Atlantic, not the least, he said, was the Alliance; and he looked to the time when the English-speaking peoples of the world should be thoroughly united in all good works. The powers of darkness are allied, determined, and defiant, and there is need for the Christian churches to be allied also. He rejoiced in the word "Evangelical," and claimed for the American churches that they are in the main soundly evangelical. Dr. Draper here interposed a protest against the idea that Mr. Henry Ward Beecher, in his "loose theology," expressed during his present visit to England, represented the American Church, or any evangelical section of it; he represented himself, and nobody else. This utterance was emphatically cheered. Continuing, the speaker said he had been pained during a recent visit to Russia to discover the prevalence of the repression of Christian zeal by the authorities. There are many warm and faithful believers there, and when the men are imprisoned, the women oftentimes carry on the work. He had lately heard that the chief adviser of the Russian Cabinet on the side of repression had become incurably insane. No land would offer a better field for Christian effort than Russia, if persecution were withdrawn.

UNITY v. UNIFORMITY.

An address followed, by Rev. J. G. Gregory, of Emanuel Church, Brighton, on "Real Catholic Unity as contrasted with Roman Catholic Uniformity." Among the numberless "unions" existing in the land, he said, there is none that can claim real "unity," like the one Church of the living God. Sectional differences may answer their temporary purpose, but they shall pass away, while the Church of God shall continue and shine for ever and ever. After some remarks on the strength and the utility of the true Church, Mr. Gregory proceeded to say there were clouds on the horizon. The enemy is coming on with stealthy tread, but sure, and it would seem as if judicial blindness were falling on the Protestantism of the country. It is remarkable how little the people, with their open Bible and their keen common sense, know about Romanism. There is great ignorance of what that system really is. Parents, let your children be instructed on the point, and do not let them go to places which aim at being as near to Romanism as can be. Rome has a subtle and all-embracing uniformity which she seeks to impose, backing it by sword and flame; and she never changes. To sustain this point the speaker referred to Papal Encyclicals and Creeds which assert the pre-eminence of "the true Catholic faith, out of which none can be saved." To these encyclicals and creeds every Romish ecclesiastic must subscribe: "I promise, I vow, I swear." Applying the subject, Mr. Gregory said: The nation's freedom is in your hands, and let no man think he is an exception to this responsibility. Say not that these things are founded on old Councils that have passed away. Nay; they are binding still upon every administrator of the Church. They each have to say: "All heretics, and schismatics, and rebels against the Pope, I will persecute and punish to the utmost of my power." The extermination of "heretics" must take place by whatsoever name they are called; that means you and me. This crushing uniformity, which is being forced upon us little by little, by crafty measures, by exquisite subtleties, will rekindle the flames of Smithfield or elsewhere, and will open the prison doors, in order to bring punishment on those who take a firm stand for the truth in Jesus. It will not scruple to unsheathe the sword, that it may separate father from mother, and parents from children, and so bring misery and wretchedness on the nations. This is the simple, downright truth. Are we to fold our arms and say we cannot help the inevitable; or that we hope the danger is exaggerated? Nay; let us be up and doing. Let us put aside our "isms," be they excellent or miserable, and let us be linked together in oneness with Christ in opposition to this common foe of God and man.

ALLIANCE PRINCIPLES AND WORK.

The closing address of the evening was by Lieut.-General Field, one of the secretaries of the Alliance, on its principles and work. Quoting the great parting commission of Christ, he said it was the purpose of God and the will of the Saviour that this great work should be undertaken by a united Church. As we look around on the Churches throughout Christendom we do not find this union, alas! We need to humble ourselves for our own sins and those of our people—to think that this work of evangelising the world should be hindered by disunion among the Churches, and in the hearts of individual believers. General Field briefly sketched the origin and progress of the Alliance, which was founded with a view to remove these hindrances, and turn the disunion into communion and co-operation. In its spiritual aspect he characterised the principle of the Alliance as "Union with Christ realised, utilised, and applied." This is what the founders of the movement sought to do, and one of the outcomes was the united Week of Prayer at the opening of every year, from which great results have come to the Church and the unevangelised world. The masses will never be evangelised till there is a greater bond of unity among believers of different names. This it is the aim and business of the Alliance to bring about. General Field read a long list of widely-scattered places where the Week of Prayer is observed, and also spoke of the many occasions in which the Alliance has interposed with success on behalf of those oppressed and persecuted for fidelity to conscience and to Christ.

WEDNESDAY, SEPT. 2.

The first hour was spent, as the good custom is, in devotional exercises. Many brethren led in petition at the throne of grace, for the varied interests that cluster around the operations of the Alliance. The spirits of those present were thus happily attuned for the engagements of the day.

At eleven o'clock Mr. Donald Matheson assumed the chair, and, in a few words, introduced the business of the meeting. The first thing on the programme was delivered on this occasion by Archdeacon Richardson, of Camberwell. He is a man of gentle and catholic spirit, and his paper contained many good things, epigrammatic, and splendidly practical; of these we give as many as space will allow :—

We meet here, not as people who have no creed and no conviction, but as brethren who have found some great central facts and principles which form a power to draw men out of their individualities and their nationalities, and to group them in one great brotherhood of faith, and hope, and love. Love is of God, and proves itself to be so by being able to love the unloving and the unlovely. How to promote harmony in the Church of Christ is a practical subject for thought and effort here. As to what is meant by the Church of Christ, Dr. Isaac Barrow has well called it "The catholic society of true believers and faithful servants of Christ, diffused through all ages, dispersed through all countries, whereof part doth sojourn on earth, part doth reside in heaven, and part is not yet extant." Men differ in many things, but the very zeal which causes them to stand apart will often be found to come out of a love, amounting to jealousy, for Christ and his truth. The artificial limb seems to be of the body, but is not; the living member may be declared to be not of the body, but it is. The particular church may shut out of fellowship; the universal Church includes in its grand comprehensiveness all who are "in Christ Jesus the Lord." "We forbade him because he followeth not with us," is the language of the exclusive. "Forbid him not; for he that is not against us is for us," is the higher philosophy of the holier wisdom which welcomes all whom God owns, even when God's servants own them not. . . . Promote spirituality and you will extend peace. Make the bond tighter between Christian and Christ, and Christendom will be more charitable, and Christianity become more of a power in the world for good.

As to hindrances and helps with regard to the mutual relation which Christian people and Christian churches ought to hold: there should be consideration for the world, for the Lord, for themselves, and for the truth. Christians are before the world; if they bite and devour one another, no wonder if outsiders rejoice over their quarrels and their disgrace. Surely the soldiers of the cross are bound not to turn their weapons against their friends. Yet, for the truth's sake, because error may be deadly, and we are bound to be faithful, there must be no cowardice, no compromise, no fear of man. "Speaking the truth in love," however, is a very different thing from "debates, envyings, wraths, strifes, backbitings, whisperings, swellings, tumults," concerning which Paul threatened to use sharpness, as things that dishonoured the faith, and disgraced the name and cause of Christ. It is not passion but principle that guides and governs. . . . Christ tolerates many who seem to us intolerable; are we to be less tolerant than our Master? Christ sees the secret soul, while we look at the surface appearance. Nothing is too minute in ourselves for us to consult the indwelling Spirit about. Nothing is too hard in our fellow-men for us not to expect them to be made, in God's wonder-working power, to be worthy of and responsive to our most unselfish love. If God deigns to dwell in our hearts by grace, is there a heart in all humanity in which we shall be indisposed to dwell.

What does all this mean in common Christian life? It is the province of the Evangelical Alliance to endeavour to settle this question—"to gather together in one the children of God that are scattered abroad." One great feature in real Church life is freedom. A company of Christians may exclude from their own communion such as they believe to be unfaithful and unprofitable and unsuitable members of their body; but between the degraded member and the exalted Head the vital bond may continue which no power of man can break. Another feature is honest love of truth. Words have not always the same ideas under them to different minds; many a contention has raged over language, when thinkers, left to quiet communication between themselves, might have lived in peace. Get rid of the ideas about triumph, and you will get nearer to the secrets of truth. Give credit and ask credit for integrity, and disputes at least will lose their bitterness. A Christian must be considerate, and careful to give no offence in any matter which is not of the substance of Christianity, but only of its shape. Experimental subjects more than controversial should be first and most discussed. "What think ye of Christ?" is an urgent question; but "What know ye of Christ?" is more pressing still. Let men work together, and walk together, and they will more easily become friends. The uncultivated wastes will tax all the strength of the labourers whom the Lord hires; and the people who come into the ploughed field to hinder the sowers, or into the harvest-field to rob the reapers, are doing mischief rather than good. In so wide a world Christians ought not to overlap, if they will think more of Christ's cause, and less of their own credit for success.

One great cementing process is prayer. Pray for a man, and it will be more difficult to speak or fight against him. Pray with a man, and the grace of supplication will weave a mysterious bond of Christian sympathy and brotherly love. Pray as a man, with the sense of your own wants, the thought of your own mercies, and the consciousness of your own weakness, and you will become more and more inclined to be charitable, and less willing to be severe. It is in this direction that the Alliance desires to work. It may not bridge over all differences, but it can show that people who are separated in some things are akin in many more. It has not put down all controversies; but it tries to soften and sweeten the spirit in which Christian disputants contend. It has not lived in a time of peace, but it has done something to make men dislike war. It tells that the universal brotherhood will be acknowledged at "the revelation of the Son of God," and it goes up and down in the nations and among the churches, as the disciple whom Jesus loved was glad to do when he could do but little else, and it says: "Beloved, let us love one another, for love is of God; and every one that loveth is born of God and knoweth God." "And this commandment have we from Him, that he who loveth God love his brother also."

"THE PRACTICAL RESOLUTIONS"

were read by Rev. William Stacey, Congregational minister, Street, Somerset. These resolutions, always recited at the annual gatherings, commend the cultivation of all brotherly and Christian graces, as the followers and imitators of Jesus Christ, and the avoidance of all that would tend to break up "the unity of the Spirit in the bond of peace." They were enforced by Mr. Stacey in an earnest and forcible way. He told, in closing, how his early impressions of Christian faith and work were strengthened by the work of the Alliance in Newfoundland, of which he is a native. In many such foggy, and frozen, and dark regions the warmth of the Alliance operations is felt, with blessed results to the churches. In Belleville, Ontario, too, where he filled a pastorate, a remarkable work of revival broke out in connection with these united meetings. Sometimes the meetings had to be prolonged through the night, so great was the interest evoked; and many, young and old, turned to the Lord.

An abstract of the fortieth Annual Report was read by Gen. Field, the secretary. As the work of the Alliance is largely of a spiritual character, the visible results do not represent the extent of its influence. Five hundred members have been enrolled during the year. Deputations have visited many places throughout the year, and been welcomed, despite the occurrence of two general elections. Branches in the provinces have been revived and some founded. Reference was again made to the Week of Prayer, which has now extended to nearly all countries. Many reports that come from abroad respecting it are of intense interest, as showing how the manifested union of believers of different names reacts on the progress of the Gospel. Specially gratifying news have come from Austria, and from Ooromiah, Persia, in both of which countries the Alliance has in past times been able to secure religious liberty for the people. The cause of Christian union in Italy has received a great impetus from a secretarial visit last spring by Mr. Arnold. The international conference at Copenhagen two years ago has had most happy results in the growth of Christian effort throughout Denmark. Mention was made of recent gross violations of religious freedom in Turkey, Santa Cruz, and elsewhere. These were recorded in our columns at the time.

The Council of the Alliance were formally reappointed for the ensuing year, the name of General Carr Tate being added.

WEDNESDAY AFTERNOON.

The first address this afternoon, delivered to a fair audience, under the presidency of General Sir Robert Phayre, was by Dr. J. Murray Mitchell, on CHRIST, THE LIGHT OF THE WORLD.

In some introductory words, the Chairman uttered a warning against the false lights that are abroad. Among these, he reckoned the prevailing system of Spiritualism, and Buddhism, the latter of which is only the old Paganism revived.

Dr. Mitchell said his subject was a missionary one, and that would place it quite in accord with the aims and principles of the Alliance. Treating it historically, he spoke first of the recent activity in the study of "comparative religions" and the researches into the sacred books of the East. The Christian must welcome this research; whatever of truth is to be found in other systems, will accord with the faith of Jesus Christ. He did not regard the teachings of these religions as masses of unalloyed error, while he emphatically rejected the theory held and advanced by many nowadays that Christianity is only the latest of a series of developing religions, which may in its turn be superseded by some system more elevating and refined. Christianity, he asserted, has borrowed nothing from other systems, all of which have much error and superstition mingled with the truth they contain. The characteristics of early Egyptian, Babylonian, Assyrian, and other ancient modes of faith were passed briefly in review, and shown to be largely made up of necromancy, cruelty, and impurity. Then the Grecian faith was analysed, as it is portrayed in the Homeric poems, and it was represented as abounding in the elements of moral corruption. Roman religion followed; but, instead of an improvement, it was a deeper depth still, and left the civilised world in a state of the most profound and widespread moral corruption and degradation. It was at this juncture of the world's history that Christ, in the fulness of time, appeared and revealed the heart and thought of God with respect to the regeneration of the race. The paper was a highly thoughtful and philosophical study of the subject, though it was not so much an exposition of the distinctive glories of the Christian faith, as a contrast of its purity and glory with the follies and foulnesses of the systems that came before. Dr. Mitchell was obliged to omit, or to severely condense, much of what he had written, for want of time. In closing, he said that there had been 3,000,000 converts from Paganism, but there was no ground here for complacency while 1,000,000,000 are yet unevangelised. The power of the Gospel has been amply proved. Let the Church fully reflect its glory, and the fulness of the Gentiles will be speedily brought in.

Then followed a brief but weighty address on

CHRISTIAN DOGMA ESSENTIAL TO VITAL RELIGION,

by Rev. James Douglas, Brixton, which we are glad to reproduce in full. It met with very cordial acceptance from the audience. Mr. Douglas said:—

In undertaking to expound and defend the proposition that "Christian dogma is essential to vital religion," I am aware that I come into direct conflict with the spirit of the age. In no period of the world's history has the strife with respect to vital truth been so strongly accentuated as now. It is not simply that a theological battle is in course to-day, that being true of every age; but the present period has this peculiar, and I might say immense aggravation, that the enemy, not content with trying to substitute false dogma for true, aims at the disparagement of dogma as such, thereby covering with dishonour the entire circle of Christian truth. And when we remember that God's host wrestle not against flesh and blood, but against the hidden powers that lie behind, we may further say that in this endeavour Satan appears as an angel of light.

Charity is the specious weapon that is now being laid to the roots of dogma as such. "Dogma," it is urged, "is a despot. Why should this despotism endure?" Or, "dogma is a bigot. Reduce it to a nonentity and then bigotry will be no more." Such is a specimen of the distinctive spirit of the nineteenth century. It is proposed to entomb Christian dogma in the interests of charity. We are told, "A grain of charity is worth a ton of dogma." An observation to which the late Dr. Arnot, of Edinburgh, has well made answer: "This is as sensible as to say, 'A small stream flowing on the ground is worth ten acres of cloud careering in the sky.' In this form the maxim is arrant nonsense; the two things express an identical meaning like the opposite forms of an algebraic equation. Wanting clouds above us there could be no streams, great or small, flowing at our feet; so wanting dogma—that is, doctrine revealed by God and received by man—there could be no charity. They scorn dogma and laud charity; that is, they nullify the clouds and sing pæans to the running streams." This is a just exposure of the sophism which more than anything else gives special character to the heresy of our times.

It does not seem to occur to multitudes of preachers and writers to-day that dogma and experience, doctrine and practice, are vitally united, and that you might as reasonably rail at the clouds while magnifying the streams, as condemn dogma in order to exalt living Christianity.

The fact is that Christian dogma is the means whereby spiritual life is both quickened in the soul, and, when quickened, sustained; so that it is not less impossible to live unto God without dogma of this kind, than for a man to live physically who either cannot or will not take food. It was this view of the case which led the Apostles to be so determinedly outspoken in the interests of Christian dogma. (2 John 10; 1 Tim. iv. 16.

In the present day it is customary to oppose Christ and dogma, saying, as a London minister in an Association lately said: "To abandon doctrine means nothing; to abandon Christ means everything." But not thus did the Apostles feel and teach. It did not occur to them to disparage dogma as such in order to glorify Christ. On the contrary, their zeal for their Master and his Church was like a flaming sword, which turned every way to keep the precious legacy of Christian dogma intact; and, hence, so far from abandoning dogma, or placing it in opposition to the Lord Himself, they felt and taught that the failure to retain right dogma involved the loss of a saving interest in Christ. Thus to the Galatians, who were being enticed to come under the yoke of Judaic ritual, Paul writes: "Behold I Paul say unto you, that if ye be circumcised, Christ shall profit you nothing." So, too, we find that the heresy of Hymenæus and Philetus on the subject of the resurrection is not condoned by the Apostles, because, forsooth, as is nowadays alleged, "the abandonment of dogma means nothing," but is branded as a "gangrene," a theory involving shipwreck of faith. Christian dogma then, is not the thing of indifference that modern thought pretends, but is essential to the life; it is not a despot whose chains must be severed; not a sphinx about which nothing determinate may be known; but is vital to the last degree, a key to liberty and life, a faith delivered to the saints once for all, a Gospel pure as heaven, and immutable as God, which may not be added to or taken from; for, "though we, or an angel from heaven, preach any other Gospel unto you than that which we have preached unto you, let him be anathema" (Gal. i. 8).

In treating the subject assigned us, however, it is needful, not only that we ascertain in the light of God's Word the fact that Christian dogma is essential to vital religion, but that we inquire how it becomes that. And here, I think, it is well to distinguish between the faith of mere assent and that of personal interest and appropriation. There is a difference, it seems to me, between our merely believing a thing and our believing in a thing—e.g., I believe the facts of electricity, but I can hardly be said to believe in them; that is to say, I do not see that they stand in any vital relation to my conscious life. So with the results obtained through the spectroscope regarding the composition of stellar bodies. This is a far-off subject in more senses than one. But the case is widely different when I come to the Christian dogma of the Atonement. Thus, when I read that "Christ loved the Church and gave Himself for it," I know I touch something I believe in, and, knowing this, I know that the Christian dogma of substitution is in my soul a well of living water springing up into everlasting life. There are many who say they believe Christ died for sinners, who yet do not believe in what they say. The dogma is unrelated to their life by any link of personal interest or definite appropriation. And, therefore, it is not saving, living, potent in their experience. To illustrate this point further: A rich man may believe that a soup kitchen has been opened hard by, but it is the starving operative, or the sorely pinched widow, that is likely to believe in it. Now, it is the signification of "belief in" that the Greek pisteuo, "I believe," bears. This word undoubtedly carries in itself the force of personal interest and appropriation. "I believe in God" means more than "I believe that God is." It implies affiance and trust. Even so, Christian dogma is vital when it is believed in; it is essential to vital religion when the tendrils of the soul's interest and trust intertwine therewith.

It will be specially appropriate at the meetings of such an Alliance as this that we placard, as it were, the magnificent dogma of "Justification by Faith only." I ask, What can more enter into the life of God's elect than this specific dogma? For my own part I would not part with that dogma for all the kingdoms of the world and the glory of them. It is more to me than all earth contains. And the Reformation is a monument of what this precious dogma was to Luther. Who among us can fully measure out the living power of the doctrine of "Justification by Faith only," in the great reformer's soul? To say that Luther assented to this doctrine is cold; to say that he valued it, or that he had no doubt whatever about it is cold also. Luther regarded the doctrine of "Justification by Faith alone" with a love that rose to transport. He revelled in it. He guarded it as the crown jewels of redemption. He vindicated it as the spring of spiritual blessing. He upheld it as the pith and marrow of the Gospel; the radiance of saving truth, divorced from which all other religiousness was as the mock sun of the Arctic regions.

And this is the sort of thing we want to-day. We want men and women, ay, and children, too, professing Christ, who can speak out of a full heart the living power with which Christian dogma is instinct. We want Luthers in kind, if we may not have them in degree. We are tired, tired to death, of being dinned by the lying tongues which tell us that "dogma is dry," that "dogma is a despot," that "the despotism of dogma is dying," and that "the abandonment of dogma means nothing." We have not an ounce of faith in such oracles, or an ounce of charity for their divinity. What is needed is the living testimony to Christian dogma from heartfelt experience. And let none who has the qualification fail to bear witness in this day of sore emergence. Oh, remember how crammed the pulpit and press of to-day are with teachers who, judging of their treatment of Christian dogma, are stone blind to its worth. If, then, you know of forgiveness through the atoning blood of Christ, make it known. If the dogma of "Justification by Faith only" is vital in your soul, keep not silent. If it is for you a day of good tidings, why should you hold your peace? Surely, if "the faith delivered to the saints once for all" has saved us, we may well expound and defend it.

Dare, brother, dare,
Mid the glare of the new,
To the faith of the past, that has weathered the blast,
Dare to be true.

An able and closely-reasoned, though less popularly treated, paper on the same subject was read by Rev. R. Allen Davies, of Ventnor; we give a summary of its leading points:—

After defining dogma according to its etymological and generally accepted sense of established or fixed truth, he said that it had two elements: an objective reality, and a symbolical representation of that reality in or by words. The essence of truth lies in the correspondence of the representation to the reality. Writing on the dogmatic method, Dr. Dorner ("System of Christian Doctrine") says:—"Christian faith is not a mere subjective act or disposition of the person, but has objective contents with which it is combined, and through which it is conscious of having become what it is, namely, Christianity. We cannot know ourselves happy in the Divine peace apart from an objective representation of God, and an objective consciousness of God. Man is only redeemed by a conscious surrender of the spirit to this Object of knowledge."

Dogma, therefore, is a necessary result of religious thinking. The inductive method in science does and must force itself into the sphere of religious thinking and life. The man, therefore, who says he wants neither dogmas nor creeds, talks the perfection of superficiality. It may be that some Christian creeds have tried to define things which can never be defined. But that the mind should formulate its conceptions of God and sin and redemption and spiritual life and immortality is a necessity from which it cannot by any possibility escape. Geometry has its axioms and postulates. All the fine arts have their fixed principles and laws which God has inserted in the very make of the soul, and which are mirrored in all the beauties of his own works. Moreover, the men who decry dogma are themselves guilty of the thing they would condemn in Christian thinkers. When the Atheist says, "There is no God;" when the Agnostic says, "God is unknowable;" when the Rationalist affirms that a miracle is impossible; when the Unitarian says that Christ is not divine, and his death is no propitiation for sin—all have entered the region of dogma, and have formulated what they imagine to be the conception of truth.

Christian dogma is not simply a historical statement of Christian facts; it conveys the spiritual significance of those facts. Professor Westcott says, in his wonderfully living book, "The Historic Faith:"—"The loftiest thoughts necessarily assume the character of motives or guides to action. There is no fear lest the Creed should appear to be merely a collection of propositions leading to certain intellectual consequences. It is felt to be the inspiration of duty. The facts of the Divine life reach with a present force to all life." Christian dogmas are not, therefore, cold abstractions; they are not sharply cut crystals, but flowers having the aroma of life. They are not artificial fruits covered with the dust of ages; they are the leaves of the Tree of Life, which are for the healing of the nations.

In a certain sense it is true that the creed of the Church must not be stereotyped, and that "there is more light yet to break from God's Word," as it is sometimes urged. A man's faith will grow in him by patient, devout study of the Word, and there is plenty of light yet to stream forth from that Word; but no new light will supersede that which leads a man to the Cross, or the saving knowledge which brings peace to his spirit. There is a body of truth outlined in the New Testament, and it is the duty of every individual Christian and every Christian teacher to ascertain what is that "faith once delivered to the saints." This Christian dogma is closely and essentially related to all the elements of Christian life. Does it include knowledge? There must be something to be known. Does it include faith? There must be something to be believed. Does it include love? There must be Someone to be loved. It affects the strength and usefulness of the Christian life. The martyrs of bygone times were men who could die, but who could not be unfaithful to truth. Faith is the strength of character, and the inspiration of the noblest victories. Let us grasp afresh the banner of this Evangelical Alliance, and in face of the unsettled religious thought of this century, let us inscribe on it again the old motto, "Loyalty to the truth as it is in Jesus."

WEDNESDAY EVENING.

Bishop Cheetham presided this evening over a large assembly; in some opening remarks he expressed his cordial approval of the principles of the Alliance, though he was not formally connected with it. Referring to the subject of the second address to be given—"What we owe to the Reformation"—he said that the people of this country sorely need to have their memories refreshed as to Reformation blessings and principles, and it behoved all who valued them to make them widely known.

THE UNITY OF FAITH.

On this subject Rev. Dr. Stoughton read an interesting paper. It is easy enough, he said, to point out the divergencies among Christians. With respect to outward forms and organisations, and even to views of certain truths, these differences appear to be irreconcilable, so that it might seem as if Christian union were a dream. But when we reach the root doctrines of the faith there is real union. He distinguished between theology and religion. A man may have much logical acumen in the formulating of beliefs, and yet have little spiritual power; while the converse is also true. Christ is the one great centre of the faith, and this has been true of the faithful throughout all the centuries of the Christian era. The speaker mentioned Clement of Rome, Clement of Alexandria, Augustine, the great reformers of the sixteenth century, and the great teachers of the last century, quoting from some of them, to show that the same cardinal saving verities have been received by all spiritually minded men. There has been a line of light running along through the darkest times, showing the continuity as well as the unity of the faith. If we look closely into the annals of the past, with an unprejudiced mind, we will find far more accord as to the central truths of the Christian faith than one would suppose.

Coming down to the present time, he maintained that there might be real heart union even outside of the lines laid down by the founders of the Alliance. He referred to the wonderful way in which the hymnology of the churches proves the unity of the faith, and told of an incident in his own experience when sojourning in the Engadine. Ministers of different churches, not much allied in an ecclesiastical sense, joined together in sacred song, and constituted, in fact, a very cordial and harmonious Evangelical Alliance. While he highly prized dogmatic theology, he held that the distinctive creeds of the churches were not to be treated as infallible tests of the true Christianity of those who hold them. Let us ever remember the motto, "In essential things, unity; in non-essentials, liberty; in all things, charity."

Then, as if to exemplify Dr. Stoughton's remark about hymnology, the audience sang, with heart and voice, the grand, universal confession of the faith of the Reformed Churches—

Rock of Ages, cleft for me,
Let me hide myself in Thee.
Let the water and the blood,
From thy riven side which flowed,
  Be of sin the double cure,
  Cleanse me from its guilt and power.

WHAT WE OWE TO THE REFORMATION.

Dr. D. MacEwan, of Clapham, read a rousing paper on this subject. In introducing it, he paid a warm tribute to the Alliance for its consistent defence of Reformation principles, and of those who suffer from the espousal of these principles. We need at this day, he said, to be reminded of what we owe to the Reformation. It would be good for the people at large if they read far less of the pernicious and ephemeral literature of the time, and studied more the past history of the Christian Church; there would then be an end to our national apathy on this point. In giving due honour to the great heroes of the Reformation, we must not fall into the Popish error of saint-worship. If ever the hand of God was seen in human history, it was at the crisis of the Reformation, in the hour of man's extremity; to Him be all the glory. The human instruments then used by God seem as inadequate as the rod of Moses with which the sea was divided. It was the Lord's doing, and marvellous in the eyes of men.

We cannot appreciate the good done by the Reformation, without looking at what it delivered us from. Romanism may have elements of truth in it and may have many good and virtuous adherents; but any number of good people can never make a bad system good, and there is no want of charity in denouncing the evils of that system. It is the same in essence now that ever it was, only more unblushing in advancing its claims to infallibility. In England we have special reason to awake, and to be firm in our adherence to Reformed truth, seeing that the Jesuits, expelled from other lands, are taking refuge among us, and carry on their scheming plots and machinations.

We owe much of political liberty to the Reformation—the rights of the people in education and worship, and the sanctities of the home. Popery, when it had the full power, was a cruel and crushing political despotism. It deposed kings and emperors at will, while it held the people bound in the iron chains of superstition and ignorance. The fell sway of the Confessional was over all. From these things the Reformation set us free. We owe still more to it intellectually. Protestantism fosters freedom of thought—the right to study and judge for ourselves all matters that affect us. It also promotes intellectual activity, growth in arts and sciences. There was nothing of that in the Dark Ages, when Popery bore rule. Greatest of all are the spiritual blessings we owe to the Reformation. We are indebted to it for a free Bible. The Bible was declared by the Papacy as dangerous to the people! It has proved dangerous to the priesthood and the Pope. In an eloquent outburst Dr. MacEwan vindicated the priceless blessings of an open and free Bible. A pure Gospel is another thing we owe to the Reformation. When it was freed from the accretions of the centuries, it became the power of God unto salvation, and its proclamation shook the Papacy to its foundations. The Reformation gave us, too, a true Saviour, throwing aside all the host of subordinate saviours that the Papacy imposed on the people. What an unspeakable blessing was thus secured to us. It has also restored the perfect hope of passing at once into a state of bliss, without the intervention of the awful fires of Purgatory. Shall we allow these blessings to be snatched from us now? They have been purchased for us at a high price—the sufferings and death of many faithful martyrs. Shall we be pusillanimous enough to allow our land to be overspread with the blighting atmosphere of priestcraft? Let us have more than the name of Protestantism; let us seek to experience for ourselves and for our country the blessings embodied in the principles of the Reformation; then shall the Church of Christ shine forth "clear as the sun, fair as the moon, and terrible as an army with banners."

THURSDAY, SEPTEMBER 23.

To-day the weather, which had been rough and cold, underwent an agreeable change, and gave a brighter tone to the surroundings of the Conference.

The chairman at this morning's meeting was Mr. J. Holt Skinner, who read 1 Cor. xiii. as a passage specially suited for a gathering of the Alliance. The first subject dealt with was, "The Scepticism of the Day," by Rev. Dr. David Brown, of Aberdeen. The address was most important in its bearing on the religious life of our time; rather than give a condensation of it in this issue, we defer a full report to our next.

EVANGELICAL ALLIANCE WORK.

Dr. Angus spoke briefly on the importance of making the Alliance increasingly practical. All religious systems, he said, hold that men need to be better, and they need to be forgiven. False systems tell men to be better, and by and by God will forgive them. Evangelical religion reverses the order, making forgiveness come first. It has another peculiarity. It begins with men's hearts, whereas false systems begin with the outside. Conscience, judgment, and affection are first affected by the Gospel; and this is the truest philosophy, but it is liable to misunderstanding. People say: If we are saved before we become holy, why may we not stop there? And there is a lesson we need to learn here. Besides being a blessed sentiment, our faith ought to become a mighty power. So with the Alliance. By its name it is a bond of union in and by and for the Gospel—an Alliance in and by and for Christ. If we try to realise the significance of the name, we cannot be idle. Our rules for work must be guided by the fact that we are not an Alliance of churches, but of individual Christians. How is our union to be manifested? By helping each to cultivate the spirit of brotherly love and individual holiness, and of rejoicing in the success of all. Further, let us honour the Bible as the standard of faith and practice. We might devote more time in our meetings to its direct study and exposition. Then we honour the rights of conscience, even if we may not approve of particular decisions to which conscience may lead our brethren. It is, also, a great agency for the promotion of Christian evidences, and the defence of the pure faith. Then we ought to care specially for the evangelisation of the outside world; our very name implies this. Let us all go away fully determined to do what we can for the salvation of individual men and women. If we have been to the Cross ourselves, let us point others to it.

The last address was by the venerable Dr. Wylie, of Edinburgh, on "The Papacy." It will be found in preceding columns. The time did not admit of the whole of the paper being read, and we are all the more glad, therefore, to give it to our readers at length, as its weight and importance deserve. Here and there, the old man eloquent, discarding the manuscript in his hand, let loose an impassioned torrent of speech, reminding one of the fire of his early days—a fire that age and growing physical infirmity have not quenched. We ask for this paper the most serious attention of our readers.

AN AL-FRESCO MISSIONARY MEETING.

This afternoon the Conference transported itself from the Town Hall to the spacious and splendidly situated grounds of General Carr Tate, at St. John's. Under the ample shade of a gigantic elm a meeting was held to consider the subject of Foreign Missions. With the westering sun glinting through the foliage, and the fresh breeze of heaven playing about us, it was extremely pleasant to sit on the green sward and listen to the stirring utterances of the three speakers. General Carr Tate, in presiding, briefly enforced the duty of every Christian to help on missions to the heathen in every possible way; all the more that the world is now completely open to the Gospel message.

Rev. E. E. Jenkins said he desired to be a witness rather than an advocate. The Divine command was clear, and missions were the best bond of union among the Christian churches, but he would rather give some facts than base any argument on them. Forty years ago he went to India to work among the Tamils. Though he ceased to be a missionary twenty years since, he had never ceased to study the conduct of the Hindoo people, and he believed that no such swift and sweeping revolution had ever taken place in history as that now coming over the people of India. Recently he had visited India, China, and Japan. He was greatly struck by the awakening of intellectual activity. European thought is permeating these Eastern lands, and the spread of the English language is remarkable.

Ancient native usages are being questioned and discussed; some have fallen, others are falling. The Hindoos, having acquired knowledge, can be no longer treated as children. Their aspirations may be guided, but they cannot be extinguished. The task of steering India through is too great for statesmanship. The missionaries are not politicians; they have remained neutral. But they teach a Gospel that affects all departments of life, and in that sense they are, and must be, politicians. Our statesmen do not all look at spiritual results, but the effects of Christianity have civil bearings, and rulers cannot be indifferent to the progress of the Gospel. Officials who intimately know what Indian life and thought are, do not oppose missions, because they see in them nothing but good to the nation. Some of them, with unusual foresight, recognise and act upon the fact that good government could have no better help than the work of the missionary. Another hopeful feature is the progress of social reform among the educated Hindoos themselves. Among these reforms is the great advance in the position of Indian women and the removal of such social customs and abuses as child marriage and perpetual widowhood. Hindoo Theists, too, are sharing in the general progress; they have lost faith in the religious tenets of their fathers, and are being imbued with the teachings of Christianity. They may yet be groping in the dark; but they are earnest seekers after God, and there is every hope of their being led by the Spirit, through the study of the Scriptures, into the truth of God. Mr. Jenkins told how he had been present in Calcutta at a large meeting of these Theists, when their president, the successor of Chunder Sen, spoke of the infinite efficiency of the teachings of Jesus Christ, and the glories of his character. These men never sat at the feet of missionaries, but got their impressions at first hand from the Scriptures. He would express the hope, however extravagant it might appear, that the Hindoo Theists of to-day will become a great Asiatic Christian church in the future. The Bible is now in nearly all Indian dialects, and this alone would have been a result worth all the money expended on missions in that land. The Bible is the river of God, and will sweep over all human landmarks and provisions till it covers the earth.

Mr. Jenkins said he had visited many native churches, and he found many of them, not only self-supporting, but self-propagating. Therefore, he thought that by and by European missionaries would soon be spared in India altogether, and would be free to go where they were more needed. Referring to Japan, he said that on a previous visit he had predicted, from what he saw, that twenty-five years afterwards Christianity would be the nominal religion of that empire. This prophecy was right, only that the time he had fixed was too long. Buddhism is going down everywhere, while Christianity, though it may not be making great progress in some places, is going back nowhere. He asked prayer for all missionaries and for all converts, whether professed Christians or not.

CHRISTIAN UNITY AND MISSIONS.

Rev. A. M. W. Christopher, of Oxford, spoke of "Unity of heart among Christians as an essential condition of success in missions." The work of evangelisation in the world, he said, was an intensely difficult one, and it needed all the combined forces of the Christian communities. It is only when Christians obey the command to love one another that they can have the full blessing of the Spirit's endowment. When there is strife or a lack of union among Christians, their attention is distracted from the work that God has given them to do. If we are in earnest to obey the Great Command of the Master, we shall not likely neglect his other commands. Many obstacles that would otherwise stand in the way can be removed by union of heart among believers. A passing word of strong protest was uttered with reference to the opium traffic with China. This disgrace can never be removed from us as a nation without united prayer and effort. Other obstacles might be taken out of the way through the same instrumentality. Union among Christians is the best evidence to the world of the truth and power of Christianity. Again, this union will prevent much waste of power among the Churches, which might overlap each other, and thus hinder the work. He told of several cases of mutual concession and arrangement among different societies, so as to prevent any clashing of effort. Then there were unsectarian societies, such as the British and Foreign Bible Society, and the China Inland Mission; these ought to be encouraged in every way. As an instance of what united effort could do in home missions, he told of the wonderful mission of Mr. Moody and Mr. Sankey, at Oxford, when all evangelical bodies joined in the work, and great blessing fell on the University and the town. United prayer, too, is a great and powerful agent in promoting the cause of missions, and this is specially encouraged by the Evangelical Alliance. Let Christians recognise and rejoice in the success of other denomination. It is ignorance, in a great measure, that keeps people apart. Let us avoid the "policy" of approving the principles of union and yet holding aloof from carrying them into practice. In the face of the great common foe our paltry differences and distinctions seem foolish in the extreme. How much one loving, large-hearted man may do; as, for instance, the late Mr. Pennefather, of Mildmay! Mr. Christopher was fairly possessed with his subject, and his words came as the outcome of an overflowing heart.

Rev. W. Storrs, of Sandown, said there was no subject so well fitted to warm the heart and stir the pulse as the subject of missions. There was, he said, among all evangelical missionaries in the foreign field, the spirit of the Alliance. Of this he gave some touching examples from his own experiences as a missionary in India. Out there they were away from the influence of a mean public opinion, and there were no sectarian interests to serve. If a man is a real missionary at all, he never thinks of making converts to any particular church; but to win souls and bring glory to Jesus. Sectarianism evaporates before the warmth of Christian love, in the presence of the foe, and the same feeling ought to animate all sections of the Church at home.

THURSDAY EVENING.

The final session of the Conference was held this evening, Mr. Donald Matheson in the chair. Sir William McArthur was to have presided, but was prevented through indisposition.

"HOLINESS THE PURPOSE AND WILL OF GOD."

Rev. F. Baldey, of Southsea, read a paper on this subject. Christ's death, he said, provided for the believer much more than a way of escape from hell and the penalty of sin. "Thou shalt call his name Jesus, for He shall save his people from their sins"—from their power now, and eventually from their presence. To this end Christ loved the Church, and gave Himself for it, that He might sanctify it. He sent the Holy Ghost to make the Church a holy people unto Himself, through the channel of faith in Him. "This is the will of God, even your sanctification." The very nature of God as the Holy One makes it a necessity that his people should be holy too. Holiness is the perfection of every attribute in the Godhead. "Be ye holy, for I am holy." But when they are found of Him the children of God are unholy, unlike Himself. So they must be renewed by the life of God, as well as pardoned and justified through the blood of Christ. Holiness is the steady and healthy growth of this new life. Whatever his attainments may be, the Christian never reaches the point where progress ceases, and where he does not need the continual cleansing of the blood. The figures in Scripture which describe the Christian life, all speak of progress—e.g., the growth from infancy to mature life; the development from the tiny seed to the giant tree; the increasing glow from morning dawn to the blaze of full noon. Paul, the chiefest of the apostles, spoke to the very last of "pressing toward the mark." The speaker strongly recommended Rev. H. C. G. Moule's little book, "Thoughts on Christian Sanctity" (Seeley & Co. 1s.) as full of precious and weighty teaching on this subject.

How is this holiness accomplished? Not by the holding of orthodox opinions, or by a life of asceticism, but by the life of God in the soul—by a continued reception of the Spirit, and by our abiding in Christ, through whose strength alone we can overcome. Let striving after holiness in our own strength, be changed into trusting in the might of God. There is no more strength to overcome sin in a converted man than in an unconverted man without the power of God. But it is not to be a lazy, dreamy trust; it is a patient obedience to the will of God by the power of the Spirit continually received and appropriated. The believer is called to constant watching, ceaseless prayer, and untiring combat with the foes of the spiritual life. There must be a denial of self and a taking up of the cross—an impossible task to the flesh, and only possible to the believer through the strength of Christ in which he "can do all things."

REV. H. E. BROOKE

followed with a closing address on the same subject. He referred especially to points where caution is needed. He thanked God that of late this subject had attracted much attention, though he could not endorse all that is advanced on it. In the view of many teachers it has apparently come to this, that holiness may be looked upon as a sort of higher platform which should be attained to, but which, at the same time, may safely be unattained. He would strenuously contend that holiness is an essential condition of the Christian life. In his view an unholy Christian was as great an anomaly and absurdity as an unbelieving believer. God's Word plainly teaches that every believer is to be treated as a saint. That word "saint" has, unhappily, been taken from its proper use and applied to certain select persons who are supposed to have attained to some sort of peculiar eminence. Every soul that has come into vital contact with Christ thereby becomes a saint. Mr. Brooke here made a deeply interesting reference to the dedication by Paul of his various Epistles to the seven Gentile Churches, to show that while in several of the earlier of these Epistles he addressed the believers as "the Church" in the place, in the later ones he simply addressed them as "those that are called saints." We have here a distinct change in the Apostle's method of address, showing that the real essence of Christianity is in individuality. A church is simply a collection of individual saints. It is very important to remember this in these days, when so much is made of the power—and even the sanctifying power—of visible churches.

Believers, therefore, are all essentially saints. Holiness is not so much a state to be attained as a position to be developed. In our union with Jesus Christ, through faith, we are sanctified in Him. He suffered without the gate that He might sanctify his people to Himself by his own blood. If we are thus treated by God as holy persons, we must show that we are holy. The early believers were exhorted to walk "as becometh saints." They were assumed to be saints, and therefore they ought to live in consonance with their calling. If we could only revive the common use of the word "saints," we might do much to revive the saintship it implies.

A word as to the development of holiness. Christ takes us as we are; by his blood He puts away the sin, and consecrates the soul as a possession for Himself. Then the Holy Ghost comes in to empower the believer, that he may "abide in Christ." It is in living, abiding union with Christ that practical holiness comes. What is practical holiness? We have often quoted the words: "Be ye holy, for I am holy." We do not always observe the connection in which they were originally spoken:—"And every creeping thing that creepeth upon the earth shall be an abomination; it shall not be eaten. Whatsoever goeth upon the belly, and whatsoever goeth upon all four, or whatsoever hath more feet among all creeping things that creep upon the earth, them ye shall not eat; for they are an abomination. Ye shall not make yourselves abominable with any creeping thing that creepeth, neither shall ye make yourselves unclean with them, that ye should be defiled thereby. For I am the Lord your God: ye shall therefore sanctify yourselves, and ye shall be holy; for I am holy: neither shall ye defile yourselves with any manner of creeping thing that creepeth upon the earth" (Lev. xi. 41—44). Here we have indicated, in figure, what holiness avoids. What do these "creeping things" signify for Christians of to day? They are for us typical of that which we, as holy persons, should avoid. "My soul cleaveth to the dust," said David. That which has closely and essentially to do with the earth, though it may be called by specious names, such as "art" or "science"—if God is left out of it, that is to be avoided. Some things are so earthly, sensual, and devilish, that they are clearly to be put aside. There is to be a constant watching against anything that could come under this designation "creeping things."

But now a word of comfort for the believer, who may feel discouraged in the realisation of his desires after holiness. I am a thorough believer, said Mr. Brooke, in the doctrine of the two natures in the believer—the flesh and the Spirit. Where the conflict between these is strong, the child of God is liable to be bowed down, and to become discouraged. We are not to take up with some beautiful theory, but we are to accept the fact that "in us, that is, in our flesh, there dwelleth no good thing." Nevertheless, we have the promise that at the coming of these Lord the bodies of our humiliation shall be changed into the likeness of the body of his glory. All that hinders shall be removed, and that which has been kept down, so to speak, will burst forth in fulness of power. In far northern climes, when the long-continued snow disappears from the earth, there is such a sudden outburst of vegetation as is unknown in more southern lands. So, when, at his coming again, the Sun of Righteousness shall arise with healing in his wings, the believer will experience something of this. Thus I would cheer your hearts in the battle of the Christian life. We may not always be able to keep upon the heights, but we have this blessed assurance, that one day, spirit, soul, and body, consecrated together, shall be to the praise and glory of Him "who hath called us out of darkness into his marvellous light."

With these most weighty words of caution, and most cheering words of comfort, the speaking at the Conference proper was brought to an end. For a brief season further, many of those present united in the Lord's Supper, showing in this tangible way, their oneness as brethren and believers in Christ the Head, while known among men by names as diverse as those of the members of the body. Before the more public meeting broke up, Mr. Matheson, in the name of the visitors, expressed their hearty appreciation of the kind hospitality shown by the Christian friends in Ryde. The desire in holding the Conference there was that those in the town and neighbourhood might receive spiritual impetus and blessing; there is good ground for hope that the desire will not be unfulfilled.

A CYCLONE IN JAMAICA.

DEAR SIR,—Sad tidings have just reached us from Jamaica. The following excerpts from two letters to hand will speak for themselves. Rev. J. J. Kendon has forwarded £10 immediately on receipt of the sad news; but, of course, that will not go far to meet the dire necessity. Any help your readers can spare will be gratefully received for our distressed brethren by Mr. J Kendon, Goudhurst, Staplehurst, Kent, or by yours very cordially, (Rev.) JOHN BURNHAM.

Brentford, Middlesex.

EXTRACTS.

Rev. J. J. Kendon, of Jericho, writes:—A cyclone nearly equal to that of 1880 passed over us on August 19, 20. . . . Both Jericho and Mount Hermon have been injured. At Jericho, the ridging of our chapel was blown off, and some of the roofing. . . . At Mount Hermon, the chapel being unfinished, was very exposed, and the wind had full power to batter everything. . . . The wall-plate is not placed round (waiting for funds), so that the wind got under and into the building with fearful power, and tore up the sacking, and lifted off about 200 feet. . . . How to meet the claims for building is a problem I cannot solve. Our people have not the money, else they would give it; and now the storm has levelled the corn, and suckers and fruit-trees, thus depriving them of the only dependence they had. . . . Others have suffered more than we, and do need and deserve sympathy and help from others more highly favoured.

Mr. J. Bryan (schoolmaster at Mount Hermon) writes:—Irreparable damage is done to cultivated fields. . . . G. McRay's house fell to the ground, and very many of the other friends' houses are damaged. One of the sad scenes is our beautiful chapel; sixteen or more of the windows are blown out . . . the roof, too, had its share. . . . On Wednesday all around was beautiful and fair; to-day the fields look almost bare, and all hearts are sad.

WITH HOP-PICKERS.

HEREFORDSHIRE AND WORCESTERSHIRE.

ANOTHER mission amongst the hop-pickers of Hereford and Worcester has been brought to a blessed termination, under the direction of Mr. T. S. Heley, Wing, Leighton Buzzard. A party of seven were with the pickers during the work, viz., Mr. W. Harrison and Mr. Bishop, of St. Giles' Mission; Pastor C. Allen, of Hook Norton; Mr. Divers, of Wendover; and Messrs. Jones and Luff, of London. Over 100 hop yards were visited, short addresses being given in almost all, besides special meetings. The pickers come mostly from Dudley and its neighbourhood, and their behaviour, with hardly an exception, has been most satisfactory.

Not one grower objected to our entering the yards; on the contrary, many looked for and welcomed us, having met us in past years. The first days were spent in Herefordshire; but Mr. Turner, of Eardiston, Tenbury, having invited Mr. Heley, the last days were devoted to Worcestershire, the workers being lodged free. If other Christians would thus help, much labour and expense would be saved. Mr. Turner has devoted part of his premises to a mission-room, which was packed on the two Sunday evenings, four open-air meetings being held at neighbouring farms.

Two typical meetings will give an idea of the whole work. We were led to a large hop-yard just at the dinner hour: 270 pickers were in the field at leisure, to whom we distributed tracts and booklets, afterwards taking our stand in the centre to sing. The children gathered thick as blackberries, and the adults followed. Two addresses and several hymns were enjoyed, and as the people were waiting to remove to a new yard we stayed some time, the poor creatures seeming eager for us to linger. Truly the Lord guided us to the right place at the right moment.

Gipsies are often among the best hearers. We shall not soon forget one group. An elderly woman sat at the bin, a babe, wrapped in a shawl, upon her breast. A younger woman stood the other side, smoking a short pipe, and dressed in a faded scarlet velvet cut-away jacket and wide-awake hat. A third, a younger woman, in ragged dress, boasted three rows of large yellow beads around her neck. But how well they listened, as we told how "Christ died for the ungodly!"

Our last meeting was at a farm where many hundreds were employed. A large blazing fire was made up, around which we gathered, old and young, Christian and profane, male and female, clean and dirty men. A couple of hymns served to ring the bell; then followed a few simple words upon the mirth of fools being as the crackling of thorns, while the saved one was described as the brand plucked out of the burning, the huge bonfire serving to illustrate the address. It was a picture for an artist! Darkness all around, with a blaze in the centre, throwing its glare upon the attentive faces of the motley crowd. A forest of uplifted hands showed that the meeting had been enjoyed.

Between five and six thousand pickers have thus been reached. The importance of this work is more and more manifest, as no other party appear to do anything in this district; consequently, though much has been done, much has been left undone. Will readers pray that Holy Ghost power may follow these efforts.

TRAM-CAR AND 'BUS TEXT MISSION.——Increasing success has attended this effort during the past three years. There are now Scripture texts in eighty different cars, which, being placed prominently before the eyes of those who travel, cannot fail to be a source of true comfort and blessing. The increased demand calls for more liberal support. The cost of one text is 8s. 6d. annually. The Hon. Secretary is Mrs. Wood, care of Miss Beard, 279, Clapham-road, London.

DR. GUINNESS AT BRISBANE.

THE following is from a letter, dated from Brisbane, July 23, written by Dr. H. Grattan Guinness to his father:—

You will rejoice to hear of the goodness of the Lord to me here. The anxiety on the part of many is very deep, and they seek the Saviour amidst blinding tears of contrition. God has owned the message, and hundreds have thronged our inquiry rooms, very many finding that peace which passes all understanding. So many friends here know you; and great numbers came to hear me, thinking that I was my own father! Some of the workers here to-day, were saved thirty years ago under your message. It does me good to see such practical proof of the faithfulness of God.

The Contagious Diseases Acts are in full force here. In my lecture to "men only," at which over 3000 were present, I struck a blow at them. 1002 men signed the repeal petition. The members of Parliament and prominent citizens insist on my repeating the lecture, and say that it will be the death-blow to the old legislation on the subject. I asked them to bring forward any medical man on the pro side, and let me tackle him before the whole audience, but they all seem somewhat frightened to accept the challenge; but one may turn up yet.

I spoke two solid hours on social purity, and the whole audience rose en masse to indicate their sympathy with the repeal! The excitement was tremendous; the whole audience would have risen and marched to the Parliament Houses to demand the attention of the House in connection with the subject. The crush outside before they could gain admission was such that they smashed in one of the immense doors of the Exhibition Building, and during the lecture about seven fainting men were carried out—it was too hot for them, in more ways than one. We are taking some steps to make Gospel purity work permanent here. The Lord guide us! Next Sunday morning we are to have a great thanksgiving meeting in the theatre at eight o'clock in the morning. I had arranged five services on Sunday, but out of pity for myself have knocked off one. I am very well, thank God, and hope to keep so. To night I am to speak to freethinkers, and anticipate a great crush. The debates here, as elsewhere, are failures and harmful, but positive evidence and popular pointedness do good.

[We have also received a deeply interesting account of Dr. Guinness' meetings in Sydney; this we hope to give next week.]

SPITALFIELDS GOSPEL MISSION.

THE report just issued, describing the operations of this Mission during the past year (its 24th) may well call forth deep thankfulness on the part of the workers. "To the poor (the very poorest) the Gospel has been preached," and its saving power clearly manifested. A good work is also being carried on amongst the lost sheep of the house of Israel, large numbers of whom have been flocking into Whitechapel and Spitalfields, owing to the persecution in Russia and elsewhere. Much good has resulted from Saturday evening social gatherings, Band of Hope, and other meetings. Under the head of "Home Visitation," some light is thrown upon how some of the poor live. One case is given of a man and his wife, hard at work for twelve hours a day in winding cotton, their united earnings amounting to just 1s. per day!

Altogether, the report is of a very gratifying character. The Superintendent is Mr. Sharpless, 14, Sydney-square, Commercial-road, E.

LEICESTER EVANGELISTIC MISSION.—Mr. F. S. Ball, of the Evangelisation Society, has concluded a five weeks' mission. The interest daily deepened, with increasing congregations and many tokens of God's presence and blessing. Numbers professed to receive Christ, several backsliders were restored, and God's children experienced a spiritual quickening. The Bible-readings were times of refreshing, and many give praise to God for the fresh impetus thus given to the general work of the Mission.

Notes and Comments.

OUR next portrait and sketch will be those of Professor Henry Drummond, of Glasgow.

We are requested to state that owing to the absorbing interest of the Missionary Conferences being held in so many places, and especially that to be held in the Clapham Conference Hall in the end of October, there will be no Christian Women's Union Conference this autumn.

Before entering on the work to which he has been designated in connection with the West-end Mission, Rev. Mark Guy Pearse proposes to visit the United States and Canada. He will cross the Atlantic early next year, in order to be present at the Canadian Wesleyan Methodist Conference.

Our report of the Evangelical Alliance gatherings at Ryde last week occupies so much of our space to-day, that we are compelled to omit many articles, among them our correspondent's final notes of the Northfield Convocation.

Perhaps the most striking feature of the Ryde meetings was the awakened feeling of concern and alarm at the stealthy but steady spread of Popish teaching and influence in our midst. We trust the notes of warning sounded by several of the speakers will be re-echoed up and down the land; "to be forewarned is to be forearmed." Our readers may help by circulating as widely as possible the remarkable paper by Dr. Wylie, which is given in our present issue.

The friends of young women in Scotland are making a laudable effort to extend the influence of the Y.W.C.A. movement in that part of the kingdom. An all-day Convention is being held in the Y.M.C.A. hall, Dundee, this day (Thursday), at which the various Y.W.C.A. agencies will be considered. Special attention will be directed to the best methods of influencing for good the many young women employed in domestic and other service in the agricultural districts. It is possible that some friends sojourning in the north may see this notice in time to attend the Convention. We hope to furnish a report in our next issue.

There have been several cases in the police courts lately of bakers summoned, under an existing prohibitory statute, for baking on the Lord's Day. This action was taken by a Bakers' Union, established on behalf of the journeymen to secure for them Sunday rest. Mr. Mansfield, the magistrate, dismissed one of these cases on the ground that it was "very hard a man should not be allowed to work seven days a week if he wishes to." In the first place, such a principle almost invariably enforces labour upon subordinates who do not wish to work, but whose only alternative is to "get another place;" which nowadays is a serious uncertainty. But, apart from this, as long as the Statute-Book recognises the evil of Sunday labour by forbidding master-bakers to employ their journeymen on that day, and whilst the law of God commands "Thou shalt not do any work, thou, nor thy manservant," &c., it is surely reprehensible for a professed exponent of the law to express such an opinion in his official capacity.

Very much has been written lately in defence of toleration, and in support of the substitution of a wider comprehensiveness in the churches in place of clear definitions of Christian doctrine. The formularies which have been handed down to us are assailed as being too stringent in their requirements for an age of intellectual freedom, and others which are less definite are also objected to as being inadequate and misleading, and it would seem as though there is a growing tendency on the part of certain leaders of thought to prefer a shifting shoal of sand before the solid rock upon which our creeds have so long rested.

It may be that some of these formularies do not express the theological views in the minds of the objectors, but the question must not be narrowed down to that, for there is the wider and more important consideration of the acordance of these statements of doctrine with the revealed Word of God and the utterances of Christ. If they are not true to his teachings and to the will of God, there is no reason why they should not promptly be modified in agreement with Divine truth; but they must not be altered simply to suit the sentiment of logical or illogical thinkers.

Religious thought is not necessarily religious truth, and there have been many periods in the history of the Christian Church in which sentiment and feeling were permitted to overshadow, though they could not completely obscure, God's revelations. "Thy Word is truth," and by that standard all religious thought must be tested.

When this test is applied, it is, in many cases, at once found that the superstructure of many so-called beliefs is simply that of a school of thinkers who have taken shelter within the walls of the visible Church. Of this class is a great proportion of the "advanced thought" to which currency is given in some of our leading reviews and magazines. At the touch of the Ithuriel spear of God's Word, most of this thought loses its fair seeming and stands revealed as unsymmetrical and false, and its only danger, therefore, lies in the painful fact that men accept it without applying the test.

Many people who would hesitate to make use of an untruth in order to deceive other persons, find it comparatively easy to cheat themselves, giving a new set of names to the sins which, seen in others, they would designate in anything but charitable terms. This is another reason why confession of sin is so helpful when made to God, and generally so enervating and injurious when formally made to man. In the former case there need be no fining down of the evil elements, and it is felt that anything like misrepresentation is out of place, whereas in the latter there must inevitably be an ever-present temptation to gloss over the worst features, and to give undue prominence to, perhaps imaginary, extenuating circumstances. The repentant sinner who feels that he can triumph only in the divinely afforded strength of Christ is not prone to proclaim his weakness and his penitence from the housetop or before men; it is sufficient for him to know that the secrets between him and his Saviour are such as to increase his own love, and, if it were possible, the Divine pity.

The month of October will be marked by many important assemblies of Episcopalians, Congregationalists, and Baptists, for united council, and by Conferences on the urgent claims of missions to the heathen. We would bespeak prayer on behalf of these congresses. In the Priest-King of the Church dwells the fulness of the Godhead and the fulness of manhood. In Him is fulness of wisdom and grace to give "good understanding" of the times, and to qualify for their special demands. It is prayer to the Lord rather than over-much speaking to man that can meet the present necessity.

Let us remind ourselves, also, that the outpouring of the Spirit at Pentecost, was intended to attest the reconciliation between men and God, to unite Jew and Gentile in one body, and to penetrate all nations, that all the human race might be gathered from their dispersion and separation, to their one Lord and God. It was after the reconciliation between heaven and earth was accomplished, and the Priest-King had received all power in both, that the word was given to preach the Gospel to every creature. The real awakening of Christian disciples to this ancient faith and zeal may be one of the grandest signs of these last days.

We reprint, elsewhere, portion of a circular calling a semi-private denominational Conference, at Hastings, in November. The solemn and influential realisation of the fact on the part of ministers, that the call of the Spirit in these days of peril is not so much for learning, nor elaborating organisations, but for more spiritual life and power, may bring hope as nothing else can.

We have repeatedly warned our readers against the impudent fraud exposed in the following letter:—

> SIR,—May I urgently beg your kind interference in order to stop the great impostor referred to in the enclosed [a letter from a lady, of whom she obtained 4s. 9d. for her fare and 6d. for food, and which she said Mr. Whitfield would refund] from so constantly using my name, and "taking in" ladies. This is the eighth letter I have received from different ladies, in which, under different names, but always the same story, she has cheated people. She answers advertisements for servants, receives replies, and goes to the houses, saying she has a daughter who will just do; and, then, before leaving, says, "I have to walk back to Hastings, and have no money," and so obtains it from them. In this case she had the boldness to say I advised her, and promised to refund the money! Do please put a strong warning in your paper.

> St. Mary's Vicarage, Hastings, Sept. 20.

We do not think we can do better than insert Mr. Whitfield's letter, and beg the next lady whom this impostor calls upon, to give her into custody.

A critic who has asserted that realism in fiction "is what the age cries for," and that novel-readers have "an increasing hunger for something real, even though it be real to the point of brutality," yet finds in a recent volume from the pen of one of the writers who is doing his best, or his worst, to supply the hunger, a composition which can be "read with profit or even common comfort only by people with strong stomachs." We regret that it should have to be said of a nineteenth century author that he "cannot describe a street without exposing, not only the system of drainage, but the very contents of the sewers," and that, in connection with modern English literature of this class, it has been found
